To Thanhouser Film Corporation,
New Rochelle, N. Y.

Star of Bethlehem was given in Christ Episcopal Church Sunday evening. Impression made upon great audience was a reverent appreciation. All felt that the picture was a religious service. These values cannot be over estimated. Our thanks to Thanhouser Company. May they live long and prosper.

Rev. E. W. Hinkle.

THANHOUSER'S

next feature is the splendid historical story from the pen of Mrs. Yonge, reproduced in two reels, TUESDAY, JAN. 28.

The Dove in the Eagle's Nest

A thrilling drama of the stirring days when might made right. There's "perfect publicity" for this!

SUNDAY, JANUARY 5

A GUILTY CONSCIENCE

A defrauded widow, whom the law could not aid because the robbers worked legally in their robbing, regains her fortune nevertheless. Non-professional assistance wins for her what the lawyers couldn't. And you will follow her shrewd attempt at recovery with a great deal of interest.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 7

THE BOOMERANG

You've had the Thanhouser Kid, the Thanhouser Kidlet, the Thanhouser Twins and now—the Thanhouser Monkey! He has such intelligence we don't mind his being featured that way. He is some fine photoplayer! As the center of a real mystery story, he "stars" acceptably.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 10

THE EVIDENCE of the FILM

In showing this pleasing Thanhouser, you boost your own art. For it pictures the moving picture as a great power which rights wrongs. There is a binding circumstantial case against an innocent little messenger boy, and he is about to lose his liberty when his sister, who works in a film factory, sees—freedom for him in the film!

Booked solid at every exchange until February—"The Star of Bethlehem."

Made under the personal direction of Mr. Edwin Thanhouser and Mr. Lawrence Marston, the Foremost Legitimate Stage Director now in Motion Picture Work and Producer of "Ben Hur" for the Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger.

The Edison Kinetoscope

Underwriters' Type "B"

We have been telling you of the absolute reliability of the Edison and emphasizing the quality of the materials which are put into its construction.

Park Commissioner Stover of Manhattan and Richmond, and President Meeker of the Centenary Collegiate Institute, Hackettstown, N. J., recently decided that motion pictures would prove of great value to them in their respective lines of work. The problem was to find a machine that would always be at their service whenever they wanted it and as long as they wanted it. It must be one that would project steady, clear-cut pictures and never need "time out" for repairs. It must be simple in construction and have every possible safeguard against fire.

It is gratifying to know that, after thorough investigation, both of these men have installed Edison Kinetoscopes. You are anxious to get the very best machine on the market—so write for the Edison Kinetogram and Catalog 500.

Mary discovers the treason, pledges her jewels, gives her lover the money and forces him to return the papers. Tom later joins the army on the border, and Mary receives an appointment as a Red Cross nurse. She is sent to a distant point. When the wagon pulls up for the trip she finds that Tom is the driver. The wagon is attacked by Mexicans, with Rivera in command. A battle ensues, in which Tom is badly wounded, but Mary nurses him back to life.

Facts and Comments

ARE there not two sides to this question of legally barring unaccompanied minors from electric theaters? We know there are many exhibitors who think their very existence is threatened by a strict enforcement of the law. In most cases of this character the exhibitors have gone after children's patronage, stimulating it with the distribution of prizes and free admissions. A drastic application of the law would in their cases undoubtedly mean an immediate loss. The authorities in many places have a habit of tolerating even an open violation of the law for weeks and months. Then comes a concerted protest of some societies or individuals, the police are forced to act and the exhibitor invariably gets the worst of it.

The way to abolish an obnoxious law is not by evasion or open violation, but by an intelligent agitation for its speedy repeal. A few days ago an exhibitor, careless rather than deliberate in the breaking of the law excluding unaccompanied minors, stood before a local New York magistrate in a most humiliating position. Not only was he fined heavily, but the judge made it painfully plain to him that a repetition of the offense would mean imprisonment. This particular exhibitor might as well sell out and move away. He is a marked man, and the evidence against him on a second charge is not likely to be scrutinized too closely. The heavy fine probably more than wiped out his receipts from the admission of unaccompanied children, and he has in addition lost the confidence of his neighbors.

We have never been able to see the financial advantages of an excessive and disproportionate attendance of children without parents or guardians, even where the law did not stand in the way. Almost invariably a noisy and not always good-natured faction develops and the grown-up patrons are greatly annoyed. The exuberance of early youth is a fine thing, but it detracts the spectator's attention from what is being shown on the screen.

* * *

EVERY day brings us letters from exhibitors enclosing newspaper comments on the motion picture. All these clippings are interesting in themselves, and we only wish we had space for them all in the columns of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. We appreciate these clippings especially for the intelligent interest displayed by the exhibitor who goes to the trouble of selecting and mailing them to us. Out of the accompanying letters there speaks a sincere and ardent zeal for the betterment of the picture. Exhibitors are jealous of the good name of their profession and never fail to come forward in its defense against the assaults of ignorance and prejudice.

* * *

EXHIBITORS have it in their power to promote and popularize genuine educational films. Exchanges who are afraid of educational pictures, even when they have the character of features, base their attitude on the alleged indifference both of exhibitors and public. If the exhibitor had only one educational program every week it would mean an improvement in the manufacture and sale of educational films. We think it a mistake to throw the educational film into an ordinary promiscuous program. The contrast is too great and sudden. The patrons are not in the mood to appreciate it. We have little doubt that on educational nights some of the ordinary patrons would stay away, but this falling off will in the course of time surely be made good by the coming of a new kind of patrons, who only attend on educational nights. Intelligent advertising will insure this result.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD notes with satisfaction the complete victory for Sunday pictures won at a special election at Pierre, South Dakota. We have before us specimens of the literature used in the campaign. The friends of the Sunday entertainment set forth their position in temperate language, sticking strictly to the merits of the case. We are sorry to say that the opposition, led by the ministers of the town, resorted to personal abuse and all kinds of scurrilous language. Their pamphlets were full of such gems of logic as this: "The reference to the Blue Laws is a jab at the very basis upon which our institutions have had their perpetuity." There is little doubt that the public sentiment of the whole country is in favor of rational Sunday entertainments under suitable restrictions. Whenever the progressive exhibitor understands how to crystallize this sentiment and rally it around him the result is a foregone conclusion when the people vote on the Sunday question.

Avoid Crime and Carrion

By W. STEPHEN BUSH.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not have to define its stand on the question of objectionable pictures. It is and ever will be the relentless and uncompromising foe of any pictures showing or suggesting crime, scandal or immorality. We will continue to prefer the springs to the sewers. A decided majority of the manufacturers hold our views, but the delinquent minority has too much power for evil, and the public and the press too often confound the good with the bad.

On the assumption that no human being acts without a motive, we are puzzled to find reasons for "the Wherefore of the Thusness."

Here we are something like five millions of us right around the City Hall. The yellow press has its keen-scented vultures perched on every top and spire, hungry for the sight of carrion. In spite of this unwholesome activity, and with every desire to exaggerate and "embellish" tales of crime and scandal, the daily output of rancid sensations is pleasingly negligible. The plain fact of the matter is that but a very small percentage of the population fall afoul of the law, and sordid crimes are on the decline everywhere.

Even in the present improved condition of things we are not holding the mirror up to nature. We distort things. The moving picture camera ought to be the best and most perfect mirror. What we hold up to nature is too often a "trick mirror," which makes us see impossible dwarfs and impossible giants and all kinds of hideous and unnatural shapes. There is even at this time an undue excess of burglars, highway robbers, knifemen and gunmen and desperados of both sexes.

What is there to interest or please any normal human being in seeing a masked man step from behind a clump of bushes and hold a pistol up to another man's face? What fine ethical purpose is to be served in watching one man stab another? What is there edifying, uplifting, amusing or entertaining in showing the stealing of cattle or a scene of blood and violence in a manufactured "Western" gambling den? Is life nothing but a struggle between sheriffs and burglars? Glancing over the titles in the last issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD we find "burglars," "bandits," "sleuths," "apaches," "blackmailers," sprinkled pretty freely among releases of all groups of manufacturers. These burglars in motion pictures are rarely romantic or even theatrical burglars, they are the plain realistic burglars, who commit burglary with all the details found in the penal code and they "leave no ceremony out." It is a most distressing experience to a friend of the motion picture to see a father or mother hold her hand over the face of a little girl or boy while the burglar breaks into a house.

There are directors, most of them outside the ranks of organized manufacturers, who complain of their inability to interest the public without the portrayal of crime. They are either quacks or apprentices; such words can never come to the lips of a master. It is pitiful to see the helplessness of certain producers the moment you deny them access to the old melodramatic formulas. Some point to Shakespeare and his plays and find therein a foolish satisfaction and excuse. Alas, the Shakespeare of the motion picture has not as yet arrived. While we are waiting for his appearance it would be well to keep away from all handling of crime for the present and the near future.

We realize that this life is not a succession of pink teas or a melodious prelude to the millennium. Wrong and evil are stern realities. Life is not only real and earnest, but also full of trouble. In one of the finest and earliest tragedies of the world's literature we read that man is "born to trouble, even as the sparks fly upward." There would be no history were it not for the eternal struggle between good and evil. Material for interesting stories lies all around us and we do not have to reserve the camera for the actualities of the criminal calendar. There is the vast storehouse of the past, the literature that has remained after a process of elimination, extending often over centuries. This rich field is far from being exhausted. The inequalities of modern life, the defects in our social fabric, the tragic moments in our present day civilization, the human aspects of our political systems, the mental and moral development of great minds, capable of defying convention and breaking the fetters of tradition—these are but a very few of the subjects that would seem to be splendid material for the ambitious producer. The struggle of the ideal against the material, an everlasting contest renewed in every age, is going on all around us. If "life is the pendulum betwixt a smile and tear" we may tell a thousand phases of its story without any description of crime.

The modern American stage is comparatively free from crime and the successful playwright of the day is the one who scrupulously eschews crime in the preparation of his plot. We might learn from these men. Even where they paint the darker sides of life and seek to illustrate its sinister forces it is almost always against an optimistic background. The few exceptions like Zola, Ibsen Nietzsche, prove the prevailing rule of modern dramatic endeavor. It is unfortunate that such highly gifted minds suffer from such obliqueness of vision seeing nothing but the evil, the abnormal, the degenerate and the repellant in life. However, philosophic pessimism is not among the faults of the motion picture and we may well be thankful for that. It is one of the instances where intellectual limitation is a distinct blessing without any disguise whatever.

We have seen few pictures with a deep morbid appeal. The offense always lies on the surface, and as pointed out in this article as a rule consists in an undue exaltation of real crime as a factor or a phenomenon in our present social life.

THE LATE HARRY CASHMAN.

In Memoriam.

What little heed we give to that
Which overhangs us all;
What little thought we give unto
The old grim reaper's call.
We tread our different paths in life
In happiness or woe,
And seldom think that soon or late
'Twill be our time to go.
And now to him who's passed beyond
Our sympathies arise,
And yet his soul is happy
In his new home in the skies.
He rests in Peace; he's in God's care,
While angels softly sing.
Oh, grave, where is thy victory;
Oh, death, where is thy sting!

FRANK DAYTON.

NEW EQUIPMENT CONCERN.

Walter C. DuBrock, of the DuBrock Feature Film Company, and Charles Spinks, a former cameraman, who holds a number of patents on motion picture equipments, are the leading spirits in the Nip Manufacturing Company. The concern has taken factory quarters in Foster Avenue, Chicago, and is prepared to manufacture everything in the motion picture line. M. G. Watkins will be in active charge.

Studio Saunterings

Stealing a March on the Famous Players Company—By Louis Reeves Harrison

"HEY MISTER! Who do you wish to see?" "Keep out of there!" and other admonitions more forcible than fastidious, more energetic than elegant, were hurled at me with house-painter accuracy, but I emerged unsplashed in the midst of an interesting scene, all the more attractive to an impressionist because it was not set for the occasion. I happened—really and truly—to be in the neighborhood, and was seized with a sudden hankering for a view of what was going on in one of the largest of many studios, this one yet "unsauntered," and went on impulse.

I own to curiosity, but mingled with it in appetizing proportion was remembrance of a brief association with Ed Porter as a sort of hampering assistant in the production of "Little Major." He bore with me so patiently and so generously allowed me to imagine that I made one or two suggestions of value on that memorable occasion that I have never entirely recovered from the delusion that I might have been a director and respected by all instead of a much-deplored critic.

So it happened, one night—I crept in "under cover of darkness," like the villain in the play—escaping a rattling fire of pickets on the way, and was inside the fortress before my identity was discovered. There was a scene in preparation, that of one of the most beautiful plays ever presented on the stage, and a mere glimpse of stalking men in uniform flashed on my mind a fascinated audience listening with their hearts while Anthony Hope's message was whispered to them in every line, "Love is all! Love is all! Love is all!"

"The Prisoner of Zenda" was there in person, not a great actor in character guise, and near him stood Ed Porter in consultation with a tall man of Wagnerian countenance, one glowing with worldly knowledge widely gathered and assembled in the form of intellectual exaltation, easily recognized as Daniel Frohman. I waited. The busy director might say, "You will really have to excuse me," but he did not. Ed Porter turned to where I stood, and a kindly "look-who's-here" smile sparkled in his eyes. I was welcomed with the warm friendship that I felt at the sight of him.

The really great actor never draws a line between himself and the people who are according him close attention; he will, otherwise, alienate instead of engage human sympathy. Half of any man's battle is won by letting his heart go out to those in whom he must sound a chord responsive. In order to win, he must have the touch that makes all the world kin. Is this not so with superior men in all lines? That Porter feels an interest in others, that he is not so engaged by his absorbing work as to forget his fellows, constitutes a winning quality in his conduct of affairs.

Each man of brains is fortified with a self-protective egotism that encourages him in trial and enables him to impress his personality on others—he might falter and fail without it—but when broad appreciation of what others are doing is added to this common characteristic of vigorous men, he draws in that amicable support without which individual progress would be seriously hampered, if not impossible. We cannot wholly do without one another. I was glad for his own sake to see that Ed had not left the earth in an aeroplane.

Scene from "The Prisoner of Zenda," Produced by the Famous Players Company.

We talked about us—quite a relief to the perpetually appreciative critic—indulged in pleasant reminiscence, and I noted with pleasure that the talented director had acquired the knack of another talented director, Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph, that of dismissing pressing and important business when called upon to concentrate upon this or that diverting subject. Napoleon had this quality. So have—ahem!—others, if you please. It is not given to all minds to stand double exposure.

Did you ever come in contact with a man of pessimistic propensity—and uneasy stomach—having a don't-bother-me corrugation of the brows between please-leave-me-alone eyes, who is so oppressed by the one little tune his mind is playing that he has a nervous fit when disturbed? I did not meet him in the Famous Players Studio. He was not there. I did not expect to meet him when Porter turned and introduced me to Daniel Frohman. The great producer had already taken in the situation with swift and comprehensive glance. He at once put me at my ease by courteously placing me and declaring soberly—as though he really meant it—that he had been reading what I have written on the subject of moving pictures for several months.

Mr. Frohman explained his imprudence by saying that he was in pursuit of information, but the implied compliment came to grateful ears from such a source. I have not missed a line of his own contributions of Brander Mathews brilliancy, based on wide and diversified experience, in the Saturday Evening Post. I have read them thoughtfully in the pursuit of information, to acquire the knowledge a writer must have if he would turn the cold light of selective criticism on what he has to say in print.

To cite a dull aphorism, men who air their views in print ought to know what they are talking about, hence a propensity to seek out and digest whatever proceeds from those who speak with authority decided me to listen rather than talk, but I was in the skillful hands of a man who knows how to apply his torch to other minds, and I found myself led away from my original purpose of giving heed into the alluring occupation of giving information, much to my ultimate regret. My questions were all side-tracked.

Not until the enchanted hour was over did I recall that I intended to ask what originally brought about the presentation of such an unconventional play as "Prisoner of Zenda." At the time it was put on the stage it was as much of an innovation as its present reproduction must seem to many members of Mr. Frohman's company. It was a daring thing to do. Was it not love of adventure, such as enters the make-up of all explorers, that led to discarding and disregarding all recognized formulæ of the dramatic art in this bold and charming challenge?

There may be an element of comedy in "art for art's sake," but there is just as often tragi-comedy in money for money's sake. The man who is working at what he likes may put his whole soul into what he is doing, but he as certainly looks for reward as he enjoys receiving it. On the other hand, the man who is out for all there is in a proposition is apt to play too close to his digestive apparatus to perceive his big opportunities and only attain unsatisfactory mediocrity where sweeping success was at hand. The first production of "Prisoner of Zenda" was as full of perilous adventure as the warmly-colored story of love's power in clash with the force of unforeseen events is itself.

There was a purpose behind the question I intended to ask. If I knew how Daniel Frohman came to dare the Prisoner of Zenda, flaunt it in the face of wearisome convention, I could make a good guess as to what manner of man he was then and lead up to judgment of what he is now. Producers seldom leave the rank and file, but here is one who went ahead alone and enchanted the theater-going world with his charming selection, regardless of whether or not it accorded with the traditions.

Scenes from "The Prisoner of Zenda," Produced by the Famous Players Company.

Swift and possibly inaccurate conclusion is that he has the pioneer temperament, and this outreaching tendency to explore, when applied to a new and interesting department of human enterprise, combined with the practical training and sure grasp of Ed Porter, will lead to some fascinating developments of the New Art if exerted with freedom from political complication. It will constitute a strong advance in this form of popular entertainment under any and all circumstances, and I hope it will prepare the way for modern and original photodrama of splendid proportion, set to appropriate music.

Brief converse with Mr. Hackett, whose personality and virile tones have set many a young heart fluttering, started me thinking again, drifting from idea to idea through laws of association, until I caught myself musing on the complicated nature of the whole effect theatrical, on how the art of the stage has borrowed from all others to present an author's thought through several mediums at the same time—would he not feel the inadequacy of this method of portrayal, so purely pictural? Dumb now, with no audience to be quickened by the sonorous tones of his voice, would he not feel imprisoned by his medium?

Go to a strange theater and close your eyes just before the curtain rises and try to form a mental impression of what is going on, then open them suddenly and note the clairvoyant effect. Mr. Hackett will be astonished to find how well he can give representation to emotion without sound. Natural actors start a phrase with facial expression, interpret thought with a movement that leads to an attitude, and some of the most powerful photoplays ever presented have held the audience enthralled without an explanatory subtitle from beginning to end.

Yet, after all, the human voice sounds good at times. Even when I had to say good-bye the kindly "come again" sounded by Ed Porter brightened my way home. I heard a call from the stage as I was going, one of the group of ladies watching the rehearsal was called and responded in tones of feminine sweetness with the added charm of highly cultivated enunciation, with that clearness and precision so rarely heard off the stage. I stopped involuntarily to hear her speak again—it was music—then at last I understood why the "Prisoner of Zenda" had sounded a universal note in the human heart.

The trouble with playwrights who are moralists is that they rarely have an implied cheerful message for us. They are all the time bullying us just like the preacher thundered at us while handing out the morals we were brought up on. There is a sweet refrain like that in the lady's voice repeated throughout the Zenda story in action, a little song we have heard often enough to know it well, but which we too often forget: "Love is all." "Love is all." "Love is all."

Titles and Sub-Titles.

By Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is need of care in making titles and sub-titles, for they most decidedly affect the tone of a picture. Its title is an integral part of every photoplay as an artistic whole. If it is stilted or awkward or ridiculously romantic, as some are, the mind is invited to a mood not at all favorable to the enjoyment of serious work and the picture appears at a disadvantage. The title is the first thing seen, and is naturally looked upon as a promise of what is to follow; it should prepare the mind for the situation and its development. The mind keeps its different interests separate and distinct, as though in individual rooms. The title coming out on the screen acts like a key and opens the door to the particular compartment, ready for the kind of interest that it promises. The mind is never at fault; it always knows the right room for every guest; but if the title introduces one, and something different follows, there is confusion. The attention divides itself between wondering what the picture is about and how it is going to justify its title.

In a dramatic picture the best use of a title is to awaken expectancy, which is both hope and fear. The human mind can never separate them; a man who has no hope can have no fear. If a title destroys our hope of a desired outcome from any situation or, at least, of some mitigation of its worst possibilities, the suspense will be greatly lessened. Our only pleasure in the picture will be in its human interest, its humor or its art. To be told that two locomotives are going to collide, whets our feeling of suspense, because we cannot picture the horror to ourselves beforehand. To see them moving toward each other, and not to be told or shown that they are on the same track, leaves us without any feeling whatever, just as though we saw them on the same track and were told that they would be stopped before the accident. It seems trite enough, but titles and sub-titles in pictures are so carelessly made at times that we see scenes that are harmed by not following this simple rule.

We remember seeing a fine picture, entitled "Broken Hearts," that told a very tragic story with a happy ending. The producer was wise enough not to make a depressing picture, but the maker of the title left us thinking that it was going to be one. The action was such that expectancy could not be killed wholly, but the title spoiled the quality of it for us; it left it hopeless and harrowing. On the other hand, a good picture was aptly called "The New York Hat," and here the title merely drew attention to the pivotal center around which the story was to revolve. It didn't qualify our expectation in any way; merely minimized the amount of attention necessary. Another picture worthy a better title was named "Men Who Dare." It wasn't a picture of men who dare, and the expectancy the title awakened kept demanding satisfaction, and this made it far less entertaining.

A great many more sub-titles are used than are needed, but we have noticed many a scene left weak unnecessarily for want of leader to explain it before it was finished. We have seen the heroine appear in a mask, but no sub-title explained the reason. How could we know it was she, or even what the scene was about? Too many "leaders" in a dramatic picture are better than too few, especially if they are dialect speeches which give atmosphere to the story. Even the sub-titles that merely help out a thousand feet of film may be made acceptable. Yet if we are forced to read, it ought to be made worth our while. One of the glories of cinematography is that it pictures situations for the soul. Not even a Shakespeare could find words at once true enough and delicate enough to tell all the eye can see in some of our photoplays. At such places just enough must be told to explain. If anything else is given it jars like a discordant note; it brings in a bit of the spoken drama at the very point where the picture is rising far above any other kind of art.

In comedies the poorest sub-titles are those that tell us there is going to be a joke that we must be on the watch for. We remember seeing in a comedy this: "Some Good Tea Wasted." We know that tea thrown on the floor is wasted. To be told that some tea was to be wasted destroyed the unexpectedness which is a joke's greatest charm, and the little lapse was, in the picture, not as laughable as it might have been.

TURKEY DISTRIBUTION BY NICHOLAS POWER CO.

Employes of the Nicholas Power Company enjoyed a very pleasant Christmas. Each man in the factory received a turkey weighing more than ten pounds, and each one of the office and clerical force was made happy with a substantial remembrance in the form of a gold piece. This was a very nice thing for the company to do, and will no doubt fully repay itself in the good feeling created between the company and its employes.

Syracuse University Course.

Official Announcement of the Outline of Study—Sketch of Instructor, Mr. E. J. Wall.

OFFICIAL announcement concerning the new course of photography in the Syracuse University has just been issued. It covers a period of two years and is very comprehensive, as will be seen by the category of subjects herewith printed. Requirements for admission to this course are not difficult and practically open it to graduates of any high school or academic course. The cost of tuition is small, $30 for the term, with an incidental laboratory fee of $5 and a matriculation fee of $5 payable on entrance, making the total cost for the year $120. We print the official announcement of the university as follows:

The manifold applications of photography to scientific, artistic and commercial purposes, has led Syracuse University to establish a Department of Photography, giving instruction in all its branches. The university is enabled to do this through the generosity of an alumnus who does not desire to have his name mentioned.

Much has been accomplished in this field, but the result of a combination of the scientific side of photography with adequate instruction in art lines has not heretofore been considered, and it is this combination which the university now offers. The instruction will be eminently practical and will at the same time give theoretical explanations of every process, while the classes in drawing will include composition, cast, portrait, sketch, painting of still life and anatomy.

The aim of the department is to provide for students a thorough grounding in the optics and chemistry of photographic processes; a practical course dealing with every department of photography; the art-training necessary for the utilization of photography for expressing artistic feeling, and advanced or specialized courses to enable students to take positions as studio operators, photo-chemists and investigators.

MR. E. J. WALL,
Instructor in Photography, Syracuse University.

Requirements for Admission.

Candidates for admission to the course in photography are required to show by examination or by certificate that they have studied with satisfactory proficiency, the following subjects, viz: English Grammar, Geography, Arithmetic, American History, together with two years of High School work, which must include Elementary Chemistry, Physics, Elementary and Intermediate Algebra and Plane Geometry.

Course of Study.

FIRST YEAR.

General Optics.—Reflection, refraction, dispersion and diffraction of light. Elementary photometry. Light standards.

Photographic Optics.—Optical glass; the general principles of lens construction; lens aberrations; choice and use of lenses for special work.

The Camera.—Various types with instructions in the use of the same for general, portrait, landscape and architectural work. Instantaneous shutters and testing the same.

Exposure.—The illumination of the subject. The factors controlling exposure.

Sensitive Materials.—Plates and films, ordinary and color-sensitive. Color filters.

Development.—The chemistry of developers and development. Time, thermo and tank development.

Printing.—Silver printing; development processes. Platinum transparency making. Lantern slides and projection.

SECOND YEAR.

Studio Work.—General principles of lighting by day and artificial light; groups, copying of black and white and colored objects. Retouching the negative.

Printing.—Printing in iron salts; carbon, gum bichromate oil and bromoil.

Photomicrography.—The miscroscope, principles of construction and use; high and low power photomicrography.

Stereoscopic Photography.—Binocular vision; the practice of stereoscopic photography.

Elementary Emulsion Making.—Negative and positive processes; printing-out emulsions.

Plate Testing.—Sensitometry of ordinary and color-sensitive plates; spectrographic testing.

Enlarging and Reducing.—Principles and practice of the two methods.

Advanced courses will be arranged as required in wet collodion; collodion emulsion; line and half-tone etching; photogravure; motion picture photography.

All students will be expected to provide such sensitive materials, chemicals and apparatus as may be considered necessary for carrying out ordinary practical work.

A laboratory fee of $5 will be required each term in connection with the dark room.

Research Work. — Students who are sufficiently advanced will be assigned a problem for investigation, occupying one or more semesters. This assumes some knowledge of Physical Chemistry and German.

The course in Photography will be opened with the winter term, January 6, 1913, and will be in charge of Mr. E. J. Wall, who is eminently fitted for this work. Mr. Wall is a Fellow of the Royal Photographic Society of England, a member of the American Chemical Society, a member of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, and foreign abstractor to the British Journal of Photography. He was also, for three years, instructor in three-color photography under the London County Council. Mr. Wall is the author of "The Dictionary of Photography," "Carbon Printing," "Photography," and "Natural Color Photography," and was for five years editor of "The Amateur Photographer" and "The Photographic News."

The tuition for the course in Photography is $30 a term (one-third of the year). There is also an incidental fee of $5 required each term, and a matriculation fee of $5, payable on entrance.

For further information concerning this course, address George A. Parker, Dean of the College of Fine Arts, Syracuse, N. Y.

Instructor E. J. Wall.

Regarding the instructor in the course of Photography, Mr. E. J. Wall, the Moving Picture World has been favored with Mr. Wall's personal story of his experience in that particular line of business, and herewith submit the same in his own words. We also publish here an engraving of Mr. Wall.

"My first acquaintance with Photography began about 1878 in the use of wet collodion for photomicrography, principally for botanical and pathological sections, which I cut and mounted prior to making the photographs. We had always used the camera lucida for making drawings and the use of photography was suggested to us by Sir Jas. Paget, the famous English surgeon, for whom we were preparing a series of slides and drawings of a malignant cancer.

"We very soon abandoned wet collodion for the Beechey dry collodion plate and finally made our own collodion emulsion. After about two years' work with this I took up the manufacture of gelatine emulsions, using the acid process and cooking the emulsion 48 hours. The commercial introduction of good gelatine dry plates very soon induced me to give up experimenting, however.

"In 1888 I started in photographic journalism and in the following year compiled the 'Dictionary of Photography.' From 1892 to 1896 I was the editor of 'The Amateur Photographer,' then I shifted to the editorship of 'The Photographic News,' and in 1890 became chemist to the European Blair Camera Co., who were then only making cinematograph film.

"I had amused myself with minor literary efforts, such as a work on 'Carbon Printing,' translating Eder's 'Handbuch der Photographie,' Vol. III, dealing with gelatine emulsions, Fritz's 'Photo-lithographie' and Konig's 'Natural-Color Photography.'

"My experiences at the Blair were of immense value to me because we had about as fine a crop of troubles to contend with as anyone could wish, mostly one to total unsuitability of the premises for the work. The building had been an old cloth mill, chiefly of wood construction. Frequently in the summer, and of course our English summers are nothing like so hot as they are here, we had to stop work during the day, notwithstanding an ice machine, and start coating at 10 p. m. and work all night or till the place got too hot for the emulsion to set. The drying troubles were sometimes heartbreaking, yet we did a good business and turned out good stuff.

"An unfortunate accident here laid me on my back for two years, during which time, thanks to the fact that one's brains are not in one's legs, I again took up journalistic work and continued this till 1906, when I became manager of the dry-plate business of B. J. Edwards & Co. and finally drifted over here three years ago as chemist to the Fireproof Film Co.

"With regard to the course at Syracuse University I hope to make this the means of a real sound foundation in photography generally, which ought to be at the bottom of all moving picture work. The operator whether he makes negatives or positives or projects, the latter cannot be the worse for knowing the fundamental bases of the work. And the special art training with which this practical and theoretical course is to be allied will be of great value to the stage manager and will at least teach him to avoid some of those incongruities which are too often seen in the setting or details of a piece.

"My practical experience in the film business has not been confined solely to the manufacture of the film, but I have done considerable work in the making of negatives of scientific subjects. A film coating, printing and developing business in Germany was started under my superintendence and is still running merrily, as are also businesses started by me in Belgium and France.

"Personally I believe that the moving picture business is quite in its infancy and that it will be used more and more for educational and advertising purposes, and I can only regret that the proprietors of the majority of "movies" seem to be slow to recognize this fact, and consider it imperative to show such poor stuff—not poor technically—but poor from the point of view of subjects. The puerile love stories, the so-called comedies, are just a weariness to the flesh. If some live proprietor would start a high class educational show and charge double admission, I feel sure it would be a success. Let someone try it as an experiment three times a week and announce the same as matinees specially intended for ladies and children and see the result. Such was done about five years ago in London and with the lowest price of admission 25 cents and the highest a dollar and a quarter, it was a big success, and there were soon as many men to be seen as children.

"Why should not such a show appeal particularly to schools? Could not the live manager invite every principal of every school to see the same and announce a reduction in admission to classes of, say, 25 or 50 or more?"

WILDER LIKES THE PICTURES.

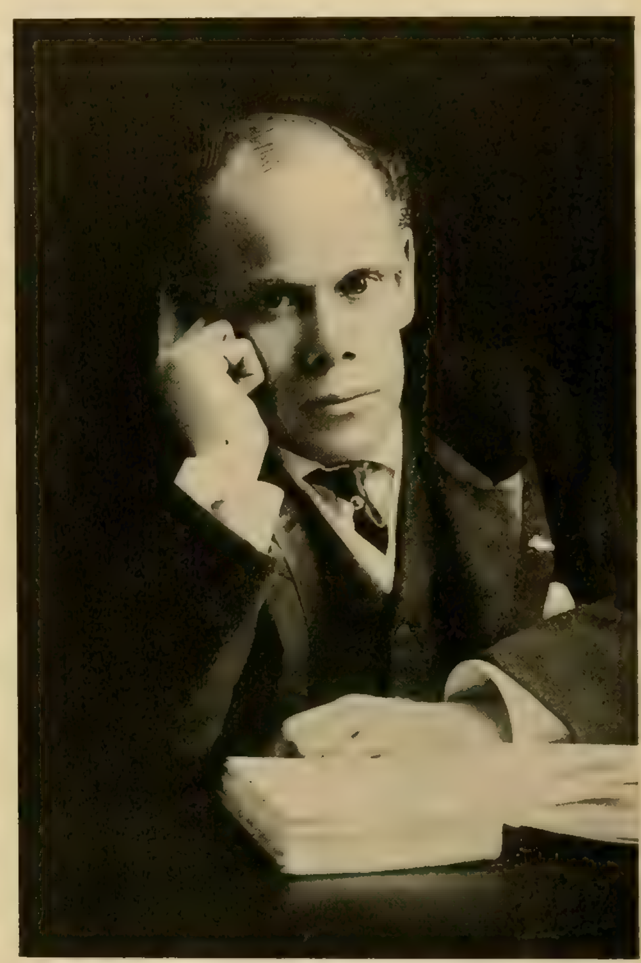
"Marsh" Wilder, universal fun maker, dropped into the office of the Moving Picture World the other day to pass the time o' day and get in touch with the fountain head of picture information. Mr. Wilder has been working in pictures for the Vitagraph Company and enjoyed the experience so much that he would like to repeat it.



MARSHALL P. WILDER.

"I don't know when or where I have had a better time than I had at the Vitagraph studio," "Marsh" explained between jokes. "They make you feel at home down there and I am mighty sorry that my contract expired when it did. They didn't ask me to renew it and I felt backward about suggesting such a course myself, but I would like them to know how deeply I appreciate their courtesy toward me and how much I like them."

While at the Vitagraph Mr. Wilder appeared in a number of very interesting pictures. "Chumps" was the first one, a mighty interesting comedy that was full of laughs. Among the others were "The Five Senses," "Professor Optimus," "The Pipe," "Mockery," "The Greatest Thing in the World," "The Godmother," "The Widow's Might" and "The Curio Hunters." Every one had a punch and added much to the good reputation of Vitagraph pictures.

Mr. Wilder is at liberty, barring his vaudeville engagement and might be induced to accept a limited engagement in pictures with some reputable company.

A SUBSTITUTION.

The Universal Film Mfg. Company wishes to announce that it will release on January 4th a two-reel subject, entitled "A Maid At War," in place of "Regimental Pals," which was scheduled for release on that day, but which has been postponed to Saturday, January 18th. A synopsis of "A Maid at War" is published elsewhere in this issue.

"Conquered, or the Madcap Countess"

Two-Reel Great Northern Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ONE of the most beautiful comedy-dramas ever thrown on the screen. As scene after scene "seductive to the eye and touching to the soul' is exhibited, a delightful impression is made that helps the story and constitutes an entirely distinct charm of itself. Such pictures bring people back to the little places of entertainment in hopes of seeing more. Motion picture audiences are human, are sensible to pleasure and pain, seek one and shun the other, and love of the beautiful is universal, a sort of a first instinct that leads us to go where it may be found.

An admirable selection of types has been made, that of the "Madcap Countess" being especially attractive. She is a delight to the eye every moment she is in action. She is a spoiled child of good fortune, a self-willed beauty, a devil-may-care rider, of expressive face and shapely figure, a saucy young widow of wealth and title, who makes game of a small army of ardent admirers. All this so far as the character is concerned, and the role is not filled by any chalk-faced anemic from the bench at some dramatic agency. It is taken, captured, rather than assumed, by a splendid young creature whose personality needs no modification to carry any such part to success.

Radiant with health, conscious of her fine development, the Madcap attempts to secure a companionable equality with men by imitating them, and why not? Men had attained mastery of all the good things in life by adopting athletic exercises in the open—why not copy them? She injects all the vigor of her young soul into the undertaking, attempting her own emancipation.

Wealth and established position enables her to dispense with social rules and regulations; she has enough courage to go about alone; she plays bachelor girl in receiving visits from men; she extends a free-handed hospitality to all within her circle; she is a thoroughly good fellow. She is very gay about and very clean in her conduct. The life of every party, she is no swaggering smoker of cigarettes, not mannish, and only seeks the freedom of mind and body that man has acquired to liberate the best that is in her. This is manifest in the strain of boyishness shown at odd moments and delightfully intermingled with the grace, sweetness and charm of womanhood.

A very lovable sort of a character is the Madcap Countess, one so well qualified to enlist human sympathy that we feel sorry for her in advance when she conceives a romantic love for a man who plays heroics in her presence and resorts to the old lady-killing tactics of snubbing her at intervals. His stunts are those man has done in all ages to play upon the susceptible heart of woman. It is deep in her sex nature to love, to shower unselfish affection upon some natural mate, and she turns from instinct to the one who exhibits himself in deeds calling for superior courage and physical strength. The unseen forces that brought about the survival of the fit whisper to her that he is THE ONE.

Gay Lady Madcap is only waiting to be "conquered"—it was not necessary to placard the plot in the title—and the only interest remaining after this has been thrust in our faces is in seeing how it is done. Fortunately for the comedy—now that tension is carefully destroyed—the manner in which the story is told proves so entertaining that we enjoy it from beginning to end. The charm now lies largely in the exquisite selective taste shown in scenes and incidents and chiefly in the fascinating characterization of the central figure.

The object of Lady Madcap's interest is an individual by the name of Burns. He is a young gentleman of Matinee-Idol countenance and clothes, is John-Drewesque in his society poses and very much in the limelight when there is a rescue at hand where the water is not deep. He throws off his coat and risks spoiling the lower portion of a glove-fitting riding suit to plunge in where the water is nearly up to his shoulders and pull out another man who found it difficult to push himself below the surface of a pond.

On another occasion, when accompanied by a number of gallants in a cross-country ride, the Madcap Countess tosses a ring into a pond and enjoys the sport of watching the men search for it as the price of a kiss. She is really trying out the man she has chosen and is both piqued and pleased that he is not to be made a fool of in that manner—he is simply wiser than the others. He also jumps a higher obstacle than she, merely proving, by the way, that he has a better horse, but she accords him all the credit. The methods of Mr. Burns are simply a modification of those of Mr. Stone-Hatchet.

Some brilliant ensembles indicate the magnificent hospitality of the young Countess—she entertains royally—and these constitute one of the many attractive feature of the photoplay. She gives unique garden parties, appears in daring costumes, displays the symmetry of her figure, draws an enchanted circle of acquaintances around her, and tries all the winning arts at her command to temporarily subjugate that she may be, in turn, forever subjugated.

On one of these occasions the garden hedge parts and discovers to the guests a fairy-like scene and a charade enacted by the hostess in company with a band of pretty children. On another she prepares a surprise in the way of a loop-the-loop structure of great height. A motor car is hoisted to the top and a challenge issued. In order to make a complete descent the automobile must turn a complete somersault in the loop, and the hazard of steering it is obvious.

Lady Madcap has been torn with jealousy more than once at her own functions, when Burns saw fit to torment her with conspicuous attention to some other attractive woman, and her expressive face has shown the high emotional state of her mind when she has discovered his studied inconstancy—all the suffering has been hers—but she brings the relation to a climax by daring those who think her worth winning to ascend the dizzy structure and risk the perilous descent. The number of volunteers is not especially flattering. All fade away save Burns.

He discards his coat, climbs slowly to the top of the shaky-looking arrangement, enters the car, and dashes to his fate. Every foot of the way is followed by the camera, even when the car turns completely over, to the end. The daring Burns becomes the center of general attention, is the hero of the moment, and the Countess proudly congratulates him, but he does not claim the reward. He resumes his coat, bows coldly and prepares to depart. Lady Madcap is compelled to follow; her submission is now complete, and she wins her hero.

Progress of National Exposition.

Tentative Plans Assuming a Definite Form and all Indications Point to a Monster Exhibition.

AT the last regular meeting of the exposition committee of the First International Exposition of the Motion picture Art, which is to be held from July 7 to 12, 1913 at the Grand Central Palace, New York, progress of the most encouraging kind was reported by the chairmen of various committees. From these reports it appears that every branch of the motion picture industry has shown an enthusiasm in the project that points to overwhelming success as an absolute certainty. When it came to dividing off the floor space for the various exhibits that have been secured by the committeemen, it began to appear that the Grand Central Palace is going to be somewhat cramped for room to accomodate them all.

Already some of the larger manufacturing concerns connected with the trade have made bids for such large blocks of space that the main floor is practically all spoken for. So far the large electric lighting companies have called for the largest reservations, which, owing to the nature of their displays, have got the Exposition Committee guessing as to where they can place them all to give them the proper display. Manufacturers of motion picture projection machines are the next largest bidders, their demands calling for nearly half of the central floor space. As a single exhibit, the Eastman Kodak Company is one of the largest individual bidders for space, and it is easily conceivable that their exhibit will be one of the most interesting of any there.

Extensive preparations have been made for a strong publicity campaign, both in the public press and in the trade journals. The interest of the public will be aroused to a point that will secure a public patronage equally as keen as that of the motion picture fraternity. Unlike those foreign expositions soon to be held, this exposition under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be international in scope. Already negotiations with foreign manufacturers are well under way, and the exhibits that are furnished from abroad will make this exposition all embracing and representative of the entire world, insofar as it relates to motion pictures.

Bearing in mind that the coming exposition will be held in midsummer, there will be excellent opportunities for manufacturers of fans and cooling plants to demonstrate their wares. Incidentally these demonstrations will serve to keep the Grand Central Palace cool and make it a haven of refuge from the heat of a city summer. Music dispensed by the several marvelous mechanical orchestrions that have lately been perfected, will keep the exposition from being a dull affair. The mechanical music will be augmented by one of the large regimental bands of New York.

On the opposite page is published a plan of the main floor of the Grand Central Palace, divided into sections and subsections which are numbered. These sections have been parceled for the various exhibits, according to classification. It should be borne in mind that at this early date such an arrangement can be only general and is subject to change, as the exigencies of the occasion may require. In the main this plan of arrangement of exhibits will be adhered to, practically as given, and most of the changes will be in cases where exhibits would conflict by adjoining. In drawing up the plan of arrangements, the committee acknowledges its indebtedness to Mr. Rich G. Holloman, president of the Eden Musee, who gave the benefit of his advice and experience by special request. Mr. Holloman has had 25 years' experience in exposition work, and is at the present time vice-president of the International Exposition Company. He is also general chairman of the board of directors of the Panama Canal Exposition. Mr. Holloman had the honor of being chairman of the board of directors of the Chicago World's Fair.

The tentative plan of arrangement of exhibits on the main floor is submitted as follows:

ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANIES—End of building, along Depew Place; spaces 203 to 210.

MACHINE SUPPLIES—Such as rewinders, carbons, wire, film cleaners, film splicers, reels, cement, film cases, etc., rear center, near Depew Place; spaces 313 to 318.

CAMERAS, etc.—Rear center, near Depew Place; spaces 307 to 312, inclusive.

PROJECTING MACHINES—Rear center near Depew Place; spaces 301 to 306, inclusive and the large central section including spaces 319 to 340.

RAW FILM AND OPTICAL GOODS—Center section embracing spaces 351 to 362.

NOVELTY DISPLAY—Center section facing entrance. Costumes, antiques, etc., spaces 368 to 372. Electric novelties, spaces 363 to 367.

SLIDES—Right of entrance; spaces 27 to 32, inclusive.

CHAIRS AND FURNISHINGS—Lexington Ave. end; spaces 5 to 16.

BRASS GOODS AND POSTERS—Lexington Ave. end; spaces 17 to 22.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS—Depew Place end; spaces 201, 202, 211 and 212.

FILM MANUFACTURERS (Photoplays)—46th St. side. Reception booths which will be presided over by prominent photoplay actors and actresses; spaces 101 to 115, inclusive.

ISOLATED PLANTS—46th St. side, near Lexington Ave.; spaces 23 to 26, inclusive. 47th St. side near Lexington Ave.; spaces 1 to 4 inclusive.

FILM DISTRIBUTORS—Exchanges, Trade combinations, Marketing alliances, etc., 47th St. side; spaces 401 to 404.

It will be seen from the above arrangement that there will not be any too much room on the main floor and that the balcony will be needed to accomodate the overflow. There remain to be taken care of such items as the historical exhibit; signs, electric and otherwise; screens; booths; decorative exhibits, etc. All exhibition of films will be done on the balcony. For this purpose there will be erected at least four "model theaters," that is, theaters forming a combination exhibit, all parts of which will be supplied by manufacturers thereof. In this way at least four films can be exhibited at the same time.

The general committee consists of Frank Tichenor, Chairman; F. E. Samuels, Secretary; L. F. Blumenthal, Treasurer; and M. Needle, L. Rosenthal, J. King, B. E. Cornell, and S. H. Trigger, President ex-officio; the advisory committee is made up of Sidney Ascher, Chairman; R. L. McNabb, Secretary; E. Valenci, A. Bauernfreund, Grant W. Anson. M. J. Goldfarb, M. L. Fleischman, R. M. Davidson, G. F. Wright, William Douque, A. N. Wolff, E. N. Day and R. C. Whitten. The offices of the exposition committee are on the second floor of the German Bank Building, Fourth Avenue and 14th Street, New York City, where all correspondence should be addressed.

Space on the main floor of the New Grand Central Palace will be sold to manufacturers of all articles pertaining to the motion picture industry at $2 per square foot for preferred positions, and $1.50 for the remainder.

The "Model Theater" idea will give an opportunity to 20,000 exhibitors from all over the world to see the very latest in theatrical construction and inner decorations pertaining to the motion picture industry. The idea is to have the latest ventilating systems installed, the best lighting effects, the most comfortable chairs, the best projecting machines, the recognized leading screens and everything that will make the motion picture theater pleasing to the public. Manufacturers will undoubtedly be anxious to show their products to exhibitors, so therefore these theaters will be numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4. Film manufacturers comprising the Patents Company will be given an opportunity to show their pictures in one theater, the Film Supply Company of America in another, the Universal in a third, and the independent manufacturers not allied with any combine in the fourth. Different machines and et ceteras will be used in each theater, and every individual will be given an opportunity to decide which he likes best. These theaters will be erected on floor space approximately 80 x 20. Admittance to them will be free.

A copy of the prospectus and a diagram of floor space will be sent upon application to F. E. Samuels, secretary of the committee, at the offices of the Motion Picture Exposition Committee.

By a special act of Congress all articles imported from foreign countries to the Grand Central Palace for exposition purposes will be absolutely free of all duties.

LORIMER JOHNSON IS NOW SELIG PRODUCER.

Lorimer Johnson, one of the best known players and producers on the American stage, and noted as a globe trotter and student has joined the Selig producing staff and will be located with the Chicago studios for the present. Mr. Johnson was playing in a revival of "The Light Eternal," at the Ye Liberty Playhouse in Oakland on the day of the memorable San Francisco earthquake. For the last few years Mr. Johnson has headed his own company of players in vaudeville.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

AN interesting letter recently received from Los Angeles touched on a matter of first importance to all who have to do with the making of pictures. The writer is an editor of scenarios, but his interest in a play does not cease when the manuscript passes into the possession of the director. Our correspondent, it may be added, is on the independent side of the house, but wisely does not limit himself when he goes afield to see what "the other fellow is doing." But here's the letter:

> I notice in Eastern moving picture theaters and also in local Los Angeles houses since my return that some of the biggest and most beautiful productions ever thrown upon a screen have been killed by careless projection. This condition is in no way limited to independent productions, but includes the finest of the Patents Company releases as well. I have seen this occur in the best houses where one would think that if the manager had any common sense at all he would realize that the running of pictures too fast or too slow only serves to disgust an audience and send them to theaters where projection is more carefully attended to. I do not know whether the managers of theaters are at fault or whether it is the operators they employ. On the other hand, it is possible that they instruct their operators to run pictures slowly in order to drag out the time of the show.
> Of what use is it for manufacturers of motion pictures to expend thousands of dollars for correct stage settings, costumes, beautiful stories, artistic direction and careful acting, if all this is to be ruined and set at naught by incompetent projection of the productions after they are finished? I do not believe that careless projection is confined to Los Angeles alone, as I noticed it more or less, during my recent trip, in some of the finest Eastern theaters.

All of which hits one big nail squarely on its head. Our Los Angeles friend will cause many a reader to utter "Hear! hear!" It is too bad there are not more managers who realize the importance of devoting the proper number of minutes to a thousand feet of film. For up to the manager it is every time. It is his duty not only to watch his pictures but also to keep his timepiece on the screen. There are men who consider their duty fully attended to when there is sufficient and steady light under the film and the projector is in such a state of repair that there are no delays. It does not absolve a manager from responsibility when he says he leaves to the operator the speed of his machine. A good operator takes pride in his work. He is concerned only with projection. The manager, among other duties, has his eye on the box office. If he sees people waiting he may tell his operator to "jump 'em through." The man in the box must obey orders even if the film be marred, the figures on the screen dance, the margin jumps. The manager may instruct the operator to drop a number from the programme, even though it be posted in the lobby, in order to "clear the house." While this latter expedient may be a species of obtaining money under false pretenses it is the lesser of the two evils. At least, it does not jeopardize the eyesight of the people in the theater.

The writer recently observed one glaring instance of imposition on picturegoers. In this case it was clearly the fault of the operator; the manager was not in the house, and the one in charge knew nothing of projection—and apparently cared nothing about it. At 10.05, when a reel was started, the writer glanced at his watch. He was led to do this by reason of the streaky projection. It was 10.31 when the thousand feet was unwound. At 10.33 another picture was started. Without any stopping of the machine the reel was finished at 11 o'clock precisely, the hour the programme was supposed to close. It was a clear case. With sufficient time to properly run three reels the operator lazily decided two would do. Once or twice he turned the handle so slowly the shutter did not lift and the screen showed dark. In the same house the operator has been known to put on a new reel every eleven minutes. In this case he was working under instructions. "What can I do?" asked the proprietor; "the police are pounding me for letting people stand. I don't want to turn patrons away. The law limits me to 300 seats. I could fill twice that number every night at 8 o'clock if I had them. People want five reels and complain if they don't get them. What can you do?" And there you are!

At the Herald Square, where four pictures are shown, manager Rothschild has an ironclad rule in regard to time. A thousand feet of film must be given eighteen minutes. The time must not exceed twenty minutes. The figures on the screen are permitted to comport themselves in a dignified manner. Undoubtedly to this rule is due in great measure the popularity of the house. Patrons know that not only will they see new films, but, what is of more importance, they will see them under the best conditions of projection.

We may thank our Western friend for presenting to view another twist to this problem—i. e., "some of the most beautiful productions killed by careless projection." And true it is. Likewise is it true that the fault is at the door of the manager's office!

Speaking before the City Club in St. Louis recently, Otis Skinner is alleged to have remarked that because of the establishment of so many vaudeville and picture houses the educational standard of the country has been lowered, chiefly among the working men and women. Wrong, absolutely, utterly wrong. It is hard to believe Skinner ever said this. There is more education of the solid sort in five average reels of pictures than there is in a good play. The actor bemoans the unfilled galleries of the higher-priced theaters, referring to them as yawning chasms. He also says that filmed reproductions of the standard plays engender a liking for the standard theater and that "graduates of the moving pictures will go to the higher class theater when their finanical condition allows." Serene conceit! It is to be expected, of course, that an actor of the speaking stage cannot comprehend a man going to pictures from choice and not from necessity. But how about the "graduates" of the theaters that go to the pictures? There are many of them. As one enthusiastic woman—and of means, too, by the way—said not long ago: "Why, we used to go to the theater one night a week. Now we go to the pictures nearly every night. We don't think of the theater any more."

Through co-operation between the Peoples' Institute and a local parents' association the first public school picture show of the season has been held in Brooklyn. The latter organization provided a fire-proof booth. Three hundred children were present. Among the pictures shown was the fine Edison "Charge of the Light Brigade." It is said the Institute will extend the shows to other schools as soon as booths are installed.

Even Old Nick himself is taking a crack at this hold-up business these days. A stage coach loaded with sixteen passengers, of whom a dozen were on top, overturned on a bend in a mountain road at Canon City, Col., and started to roll down a 150 foot embankment. It is pleasant to hear that the camera man kept on grinding. Some day we will read about the camera man who forgot to do just that thing; then we will have a real story. The coach is said to have turned over slowly. All the passengers were bruised, Mrs. Victor Fritch and Mrs. John Benedick seriously.

That tale from the Pacific coast about the long-lost man being turned up in a baseball film is all wrong. Investigation and a town-wide hubbub have uncovered a man who looks like the long-lost, but—it was an innocent drug clerk. The search still goes on.

The recently enacted Federal anti-prizefight statute brings an unexpected result. Interested parties who have made a close study of the law have failed to discover anything in it against lantern slides. A Denver promoter arranged with a number of photographers to take as many pictures at interesting points of the recent Wolgast-Ritchie bout as possible. These have been made into sets of twenty-five slides. It is said several orders have been received already.

A candidate for Congress spent $456 to advertise himself on picture screens—and was defeated. It is too bad, but publicity never does seem to help some men.

The Eclair company will soon put out a short comedy reel that will be a real laugh-maker. It is on the style of a picture made by Winsor McCay some months ago and released by the Vitagraph company; yet it is different. It parodies the adventures and misadventures of a couple made more or less famous through the columns of a Sunday newspaper. The pictures are all hand drawings, and the artist has produced a novelty that will send home any audience in high good humor. It is said that this is but the first of a series

Telling the Truth to the Exhibitor.

By John B. Clymer.

QUESTIONABLE is it whether there is more lying "blonde" or "brunette" done by means of the tongue, the "unruly member," or on the printed page. Our antediluvian ancestors had less facilities for stretching facts. The printing art was yet to dawn and our fore-fore-fore-fore-fathers had to use the "gift of gab."

A clever Frenchman has said that words are means of concealing thought. Verily some advertisements bear it out. In many the percentage of ideas is that of one pea to the bowl of soup, the pea being the single thought, the rest being words, words, words. Some advertisement writers appear to be afflicted with verbal elephantisis. They see their subject under a microscope and as a result the facts are magnified to a size monstrous.

The writer believes that few motion picture advertisement writers write primarily with the purpose to deceive, but that some are slaves to this habit of exaggeration. They sometimes come into the motion picture business without previous advertising experience, and are told by tradition-bound wiseacres that motion picture advertisements must be "circused" and that not on their lives must they ever drop below the pinnacles of superlatives and that the bigger the adjectives used, the larger the business to be obtained. As a consequence, this indiscriminate use of strong language.

Mr. John B. Clymer.

The motion picture exhibitor has now become more or less satiated with this high falutin' nomenclature and vocabulary. He has probably rarely read that any film is merely a good film. They are always "marvelous," "superb," "stupendous," etc. While some films may deserve such adjectives, is it not possible that a good film can be advertised in another way and that way by treating the news interest and by escaping from the general to the specific. What are the strong points, the vital issues of the subject? Cannot they be mentioned and thus let the subject argue for itself. If, for instance, in a scene like Gaumont's "International Conspiracy," where a battleship destroys a motor boat with its human occupants, or in "Perils of the Atlantic," where an ocean steamship sinks, a la Titanic, why cannot these scenes be mentioned, as they actually happen in the film, aptly described with language commensurate by force to the depiction? Such does not require adjectives, bombast or pedantry to sustain its interest. There is the fact. Will it or will it not draw business for the motion picture spectator and satisfy those spectators after they have paid their money?

A motion picture exhibitor, like any other business man, is dependent upon regular custom. His transient trade is, of course, valuable, but if he has not his neighborhood with him, so to speak, it is likely that his theater will soon be reconstructed for the "offices" of a Chinese laundry or a fruit stand.

This regular trade is to be retained only by giving to spectators what they want. What they want is quality pictures. In fairness to the exhibitor, if manufacturers are to retain exhibitors' confidence, they should tell the truth about their productions. The writer has it particularly easy to tell facts and yet to promote business for the Gaumont Company. Gaumont productions merit his enthusiasm. But that enthusiasm he must curb, for should he allow it to run to extremes, his advertisements would assume the distorted extravagances of advertisers whose pictures do not measure up to the biased praise given them.

To keep on the safe side, the writer chooses to keep away from personal judgments. He elects to tell what is actually in the films. He finds abundant substantiation in the films for sticking to facts and is not compelled by the absence of strength and interest in his subjects to resort to the mere witchery of words. In this manner advertisements of film production may become "wordizations" of things as they are, not highly colored fantasies born of the dictionary.

CHET WITHEY JOINS AMERICAN FORCES.

In Chet Withey the American Film Mfg. Co., acquires another splendid addition to its lists of stars. Mr. Withey is a character man of reputation and joins the "Flying A" interests at Santa Barbara with every promise of adding to his long string of successes. Mr. Withey is a character man and counts his greatest successes in Rex Beach's "The Barriers," playing the character heavy of Runnion. He left the Selig Co.'s Los Angeles branch where he was identified with some of the best of Selig's coast productions, to join the staff of the American.

Doings at Los Angeles

Edison Players Join Los Angeles Colony—Reel Club Matters—Selig Making More Animal Pictures—News Notes.

THERE are two additional motion picture companies to add to the long list which was published in this column last week giving the roster of the producing companies now permanently located in Southern California.

Since the list was made up the Edison company, with 11 people, and more coming, has arrived, and a Thanhouser company is reported on the way.

The Edison company is the one that left New York City July 13, to take motion pictures all the way across the continent. Included in the party are J. Searle Dawley, the director; Ben F. Wilson, A. J. Rothermel, Charles Sutton, James Gordon, Frederick Ritter, Richard R. Neill, Laura Sawyer, Jessie McAllister, Richard Brace, camera man, and Harry Gaut, the company's expert horseman and roper.

Although a Southern California location has not been definitely decided upon, the company plans to remain here, and it is said that the Edison company intends to have a permanent studio in this locality. Two locations—one at Long Beach and the other at San Diego—are now under consideration, and it is probable that one or the other will be leased or purchased within a few days.

Since last July the members of the company have been vagrants. They have gone wherever the director's whims have prompted him to take them, and they have not only had a splendid time, but have obtained many reels of good pictures.

Coming across the continent, "rubberneck" pictures were taken of every large city in which they stopped—Denver, Salt Lake and San Francisco being among others. These are not necessarily to be released at once, but are to be held for certain mysterious educational plans the Edison concern has afoot.

Just before coming to Los Angeles they visited Yellowstone Park, where they exposed several reels of film. They had the co-operation of the United States government authorities there and elsewhere. In the San Joaquin Valley, in Southern California, the officials of the government forestry bureau started a forest fire for the benefit of the motion picture camera. This subject was recently released. The Grand Canyon is another scenic location which has been photographed.

In addition to photographing cities and scenery, the company has turned out 12 dramas on the trip, in each case using locations which were called for by the stories. At Cheyenne the most ambitious picture was taken—"The Charge of the Light Brigade." This was taked at Fort Russell, where the company had the assistance of 250 soldiers of the regular army, as many horses, and also all the employes, animals and equipment of a circus which happened to be there. It was during this picture that Richard Neill broke one arm and became the victim of the only accident of the entire trip.

The Thanhouser company, the advance guard of the Mutual forces, which heretofore have not been represented in this vicinity, is reported to be somewhere between Los Angeles and New York City. Carl L. Gregory, chief photographer for the company, arrived several days ago and went to work quietly to find a studio. He succeeded in obtaining the studio formerly occupied by the Imp company, before the organization of the Universal group, on Brooklyn Heights, and took a lease on it at once. It is understood that the company left New York on receipt of his wire that preparations had been made. Gregory had intended to return to New York, but it is now reported that he will remain here to become director of the Southern California company and chief representative of the concern on this coast.

Reel Club Has a Laugh.

The Reel Club of Los Angeles, to Southern California what the Screen Club is to New York, now has 150 members, all of them men actively engaged in the producing end of the motion picture industry, and it still has a name which no one is satisfied with, because outsiders mistake it for an organization of fishermen.

Naturally, most of the members wanted to call it the Screen Club of Los Angeles, but would not, of course, take that name without the consent of the New York organization.

The Screen Club, when it was officially notified by telegraph that the California organization had been formed, sent on a letter, asking that the membership list of the new club be sent to New York City to be censored, and that $275 in the treasury be sent on also to apply on the dues of $6 a year which the Southern California members will be expected to pay. The letter from the East was read at a meeting of the club, and from the way most of the members acted, an outsider might have supposed they were very happy about something. One of the motion picture producers who was present made an application for a copy of the letter, saying that he wanted to turn it over to the scenario editor of his company. "It would make a scream of a split reel comedy with very little re-writing," he said. Another man suggested that the request of the Screen Club be complied with, and that at the same time the Screen Club be requested to send on its membership list, so it can be censored at this end. "It's only a question of time before all the motion picture people in the United States will come here to locate," he said, "and of course, since they will be using our clubrooms, we will want to make sure they are all desirable." There was also a suggestion that the Screen Club be requested to send on $6 for each of its members, since turn about is but fair play.

The meetings of the club are now being held in the Gamut Club, the home of a local organization of professional musicians, but a committee has been appointed to take the necessary steps to provide the club with a home of its own at once. Articles of incorporation have been prepared and will be filed with the secretary of state as soon as a few details can be adjusted. As a preliminary to incorporation the club, at its regular meeting December 14th, elected a full set of officers, including 11 directors, who are to be known as the Board of Control, since the word "director" has a technical significance in the industry. As soon as the incorporation is perfected there will probably be another set of officers elected. Several of those who were named pleaded that they are too busy to serve, and only consented to act for the purpose of getting things started. The officers are: President, Fred Mace; secretary, George H. Melford; treasurer, Charles Giblyn; directors, Russell Bassett, Charles Giblyn, Joseph DeGrass, P. C. Hartigan, Arthur Mackley, Frank E. Montgomery, Thomas S. Nash, P. M. Powell, J. Barney Sherry, William E. Wing and Frank E. Woods.

More Selig Animal Pictures.

The Selig people are working on still another big animal picture. This time it is not an African picture, however, but a story of circus life.. Each of the directors except Henry McRae has tried his hand at animal pictures and now McRae is having his chance, with Kathlyn Williams as his leading woman in the picture.

The other two directors, Colin Campbell and Lem Parker, are doing straight 1000-foot dramas. Thomas S. Nash, the new Selig producer for this section has been putting into effect a new policy. Sensational and spectacular pictures have been shoved into the background for the time being and those who keep track of the Selig releases may expect in the near future to see a line of subtle psychological dramas of a more thoughtful type, quiet things that give one something to cogitate on afterwards. This is a hint to photoplay writers.

Kathlyn Williams, Selig's leading woman, has a new hobby. She is learning to be an aviatoress, or an aviatoreaux or an aviatrice—anyhow, she's learning to run a flying machine. She has been making frequent ascents with Glenn Martin who says she is one of the most promising pupils he has ever had, and who thinks she will be ready to try it alone in a month or so. Look for a Selig release about "The Girl in the Biplane" almost any day now.

Brevities.

That new Keystone company is surely determined to make a reputation for its comedy releases. Think of hiring 300 soldiers, 200 horses, together with cannon and other war stuff, and shooting off $100 worth of blank cartridges just for the sake of making one short scene in a split reel comedy. That is what Mack Sennett, director of the Keystone, did at Santa Monica canyon this week. He had in mind a ridiculous situation in which a blundering would-be hero undertook to perform a Sheridan-twenty-miles-away stunt with ludicrous results. In order to put it over he needed a battle and so he went out and organized one at an expense of about $2,500. Directors have spent large sums of money before, but usually the purse strings become loose only when there is a two or three reel feature in sight. This, being only a 500 foot comedy, sets a new precedent.

A motion picture editorial containing a powerful argument against dangerous patent medicines is the Glendale Kalem company's latest contribution to picture drama. George H. Melford, director of the company, has just shipped East a full reel telling the story of a rich unscrupulous patent medicine faker, his tiny motherless daughter, who is the only thing dear to him in the world aside from money, and of the nostrum maker's neighbor, a poor man also with a small daughter whom he idolizes. The author of the photoplay contrived with much skill to lead these characters into a situation where each child at the same time is poisoned with the dope. To disclose any more of the story than this, however, might spoil a few minutes' keen pleasure for those who will see the release later. The studio run showed that Melford managed to get the story over with a couple of punches in it.

Cowboys and other employees of the Kaybee and Broncho studios in Santa Monica canyon were relieved from regular duty December 17 and assigned instead, by the directors, to search the sea coast both ways from Santa Monica for signs of Aviator Kearney who left Los Angeles in an aeroplane December 14, carrying a passenger, and bound for San Francisco. The two men were supposed to have fallen into the ocean and perished and many searching parties were sent out to scour the shore in search of wreckage or bodies. About 100 of the motion picture people engaged in the hunt, and received their salaries as usual.

The Los Angeles local motion picture censor board has asked the city council to amend the existing ordinance so that its membership will be increased from five to seven, and to add a provision permitting two members, acting in conjunction, to pass on films, providing they can agree, otherwise the film to be viewed by the entire board. The change is asked because the duties of the board have increased so that the work has become burdensome. To have viewed every film which was exhibited in the city last week would have required 54 hours of continuous work, allowing 15 minutes to each 1000 feet.

The Carnegie Alaska-Siberian motion pictures are back at the Mason opera house where they had a money making run of six weeks earlier in the year. Friends of the motion pictures, who, only a few years ago, were obliged to listen to sneering remarks from theatrical managers about "catch-penny devices" which were destined to disappear in a short time might be pardoned nowadays for chortling a bit when the managers of leading theaters turn occasionally to motion pictures to relieve the monotony of unprofitable business.

The fund for the relief of William Paley, the veteran cameraman, formerly of the Nestor company, who is in the hospital suffering from an infection from which he will never fully recover, was increased $100 this week when, at a meeting of the Reel Club, a hat was passed. The first round brought $92.50 and when President Mace announced the sum there was a second collection taken to raise the amount needed to make it an even hundred.

Charles Kessel, one of the owners of the Kaybee, Keystone and Broncho companies, and incidentally charter member of both the Screen Club and the Reel Club, has gone East to spend Christmas in New York. While there he will attend to some business for the company and pay a formal and official visit to the Screen Club as ambassador plenipotentiary from the Reel Club. He has not, however, been authorized to pay the Screen Club that $6 on account of his membership in the Reel Club.

David Horseley, formerly proprietor of the Nestor company and now one of the controlling factors in the Universal group, is expected to arrive in Los Angeles immediately after the holidays. This is the time he is due to buy a home here and settle down for good. He has been flirting with Los Angeles every trip he has made and the last time he picked out the spot where he wants to build his home. I have promised a large number of real estate agents to notify them when Horsely arrives. P. M. POWELL.

KLEINE'S CINES AND ECLIPSE.

George Kleine promises three first-class releases for the week ending January 4th, 1913, consisting of an absorbing drama of heart interest and two split comedy reels which are sure laugh producers.

"Amy's Choice" is the title of the Tuesday Cines. It relates in a highly entertaining fashion to a charming girl's many difficulties in deciding between two most ardent suitors. She has a clever plan to test the courage and devotion of the two, in an apparently perfectly innocent way, and when her decision is finally settled her dramatic manner of giving No. 2 his walking papers is well worth watching. The story is enacted in the midst of a most beautiful garden, which affords truly wonderful backgrounds.

To complete the reel, "Among the Abruzzi Mountains" offers an extremely interesting scenic, showing the ancient city of Sulmona, views of the surrounding country and several beautiful winter landscapes in the reclaimed basin of Lake Fucino.

For the Eclipse, "A Four-Footed Cupid" tells of a remarkable dog who manages to put through a deal in love all by himself. The canine seems to possess human intelligence in the manner he takes possession of the letters belonging to the quarreling lovers and carries them to the mail box, after which, by means of many clever tricks, he finally brings about a reconciliation.

"Laughing Billy" completes the reel. Billy meets a pal who tells him a funny story. Billy insists upon sharing it with every one, including business men, washer-women, howling babies and even a diver at his work. Although unappreciated, the fellow keeps repeating the tale until, returning home, he meets his wife, who, resenting his foolish mirth, belabors him over the head with a broom, but Billy still laughs on. The reel is certainly a sure cure for the blues, and will brighten up any program.

An absorbing drama of tender interest is billed for the release of January 4th, 1913, entitled "A Sister's Heart." It relates to a proud, spirited girl, who opposes her younger brother's marriage to a young woman of humble station. Through the influence and persuasion of the old family servitor, however, the two girls are brought together, and it is not long before love conquers pride and prejudice. Touched by the misery and sweet face of the other, the sister's heart warms toward her. She immediately sends for her brother, and upon his arrival all former discord is forgotten in a happy gathering of the three young people. The leading role, that of the sister, is well acted by Miss Hesperia, who is now taking most of the leads for the Cines Company and is doing most excellent work. The part of the old servitor, which is also important, is well taken by Mr. Charles Maestro, in his usual capable manner.

SELIG COLORADO COMPANY MOVES SOUTH.

Harry Cohen, business representative of the Selig Polyscope Co., has returned from a trip through the Southwest, where he went to select a new winter location for the company now operating at the Canon City Studios. Plans have been perfected for transporting the entire company to some one of the selected localities in the southwest, although the Selig Company has not as yet given out just where this location will be. A freight car full of horses and properties have left the Chicago studios for the new field camp and it will arrive at the new location at about the same time the Colorado players appear upon the scene. An automobile has been forwarded with the horses and Tom Mix, the famous Selig cowboy, has been transfered from the Chicago studios to the headquarters of the Colorado company. This branch of the ambitious Selig organization will produce during the coming months some of the greatest war and western subjects ever released by the Selig people. Mr. Selig recently secured the entire works of Gen. Charles King with exclusive rights for picture purposes, and many of these well known stories will be produced by this company.

THE STANDARD OF PICTURES IN GERMANY.

It is worthy of note that in Germany the believers in educational cinematography are the moving powers against "debasing picture" shows. This is entirely consistent with the attitude of their contemporaries in America. Mutuality of interests is identical; it is therefore profitable to repeat that the best censorship is that which is devoted to cultivating the higher tastes, rather than simply criticising the lower ones. Dr. Rauh, a prominent German educator, is organizing a "campaign of education" against pictures which he believes to be below the standard of proper exhibitions. "The morals of the modern pictures are the morals of Paris Apaches," says this teacher, "many of the film dramas cover crime with a mantle of attractive sentimentality instead of the abhorrence which should be taught." As a guardian of youth he further says that "when they make light of the sanctity of marriage and the home, the growing generation will give ample proof of the evil."

The fitting language of this criticism is apparent; it is also noticeable that these opinions are consistent with those so often expressed here. All honor and success to Dr. Rauh in his laudable campaign; it is eminently fitting and proper that those most interested in the educational moving pictures should be the ones to voice the true standard of amusing yet non-educational pictures.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

I HAD a very strong impression that Mayor Gaynor would hand out a Christmas present in the form of his signature to the recently passed ordinance on the six-hundred seating capacity. He is taking more time for its consideration than was generally expected. No doubt the hold up is due to the eleventh hour amendment on the censorship. Perhaps he will hand down the signed ordinance as a New Year greeting. Some people look for a veto of the bill as a whole, but most of those interested feel that, under the charter of the city, the Mayor has the power to exclude the censorship amendment and make the rest of the bill a law, and will exercise it. It has been stated upon what appears to be very good authority that personally the Mayor is favorably disposed toward motion pictures and believes that the law authorizing the increased seating capacity is a good one, as it will be another step towards putting small, ill-managed places that have been responsible for so much adverse comment out of business.

It is the opinion of many people who watched the proceedings that led up to the passage of the ordinance that the tacking on of the censorship amendment was simply the handing out to their constituents of a little pap by the Aldermen who saw they could not prevent the passage of the measure. It is as certain as anything can be that not one Alderman really believes that the amendment belongs in the ordinance or can be sustained. Some have argued that as the educational features of motion pictures have formed the basis for a great part of the recent discussions concerning them, that they naturally fall within the jurisdiction of the Board of Education. This has some merit as applied to motion pictures to be used in the public schools, but it seems to be an exaggerated stretch of imagination as to the duties and jurisdiction of the Board when an attempt is made to constitute it as supervising authority for theaters.

But aside from the constitutional or legal phase of the situation the amendment should be killed from a standpoint of common sense. The public does not realize the amount of time that is required to censor the motion pictures. Hours are spent day after day by the present censoring body in just watching the subjects as they are projected upon the screen and much additional time is spent in discussing them after they have been projected. As in all other bodies, opinions vary in the Board of Censors and to settle discussions that arise the manufacturers are frequently summoned to present a film for another inspection. When looked squarely in the face it seems it would be an impossibility for the Board of Education to adequately perform the duties for which it is created and properly perform the work that is done by the existing Board of Censors. If the Board of Education cannot take care of both with equal fidelity and adequacy the only question left for determination is the line of duty to which it should give its whole attention and effort, and the answer to that question is that part of the charter under which the Board exists.

Too many people think the censorship of films chiefly embraces joy rides to the studios of the various manufacturers. Like many who seek connection with the studios in various capacities, they look upon the whole picture business as all play and no work. Some have been heard to remark that the existing Board of Censorship is simply a source of easy money. They do not know that hours and days of service are given by the ladies and gentlemen who constitute the Board without the slightest recompense. When this is taken into consideration one is bound to concede that some of the comments that have been made on the work of the Board have been most ungrateful and unjust, especially when the fact exists that nearly all the motion pictures that have been the subject of criticism have not been before that Board.

The censorship question is not one that can be settled by any hasty pudding amendment. It is one of broad scope, requiring far more study than has been given it in any of the discussions, recent or remote. A well known lawyer stated the other day that his mind was quite clear on the constitutional phase of the question. It certainly does not appear equitable that motion pictures should be bound hand and foot while unlimited latitude is given theaters, song writers and publishers. If the theaters are to be exempt on the ground that they exclude children under the age of 16 years, then the motion picture houses that enforce the same law should enjoy the privilege. As to many of the present day songs, their titles, lines and interpretation are abominable. All these and many others, said the lawyer, must be considered when we talk of censorship. Special legislation is unfair.

A manufacturer was asked if the ordinance on censorship would be contested on constitutional grounds in case of final enactment, to which he replied that we had not heard the matter discussed. "It would be premature to give a definite opinion on the effect of such a law," he said. "So far as we are concerned we are not seeking any excuse or opportunity to become involved in ligitation. We are doing our very best to eliminate everything of objectionable character from the pictures before they leave our studios and for that reason we cheerfully accepted the officers of the People's Institute when it organized the Board of Censors. Many of the people who are most strenuous in the crusade in behalf of the morals of the young are comparatively recent converts to motion pictures and I believe many of them are influenced by an honest purpose, although all all of them are more or less radical and lack knowledge of the history of the business. Much has been said of the great advancement that has been made in the pictures from a photographic and artistic standpoint and just as much may be said truthfully as to their moral tone. This condition was not brought about by crusades or legal restrictions. When the picture business was supported by a small proportion of the public the manufacturers saw that to enlist the co-operation of the greater mass of people it would be necessary to take up the lines they are now following. If one half the pictures that are shown today were half as bad as some of the radicals try to make the public believe they are the picture houses would not enjoy the family patronage that they do, and I am quite certain there are more parents as careful of the welfare of their children, morally and otherwise, than can be inferred from the actions of some of the people who are on the outside, looking in."

A moving picture man arrested for displaying in front of his place a poster that depicted a scene from a picture being exhibited in the house was discharged by the judge when it was shown that the film had been approved by the Board of Censors. This is the right view, and had a proper investigation been made the exhibitor would not have been arrested if the complaining party had any sense. If canned goods bear the label under the pure food law should the grocer be held if somebody discovers that the goods are not as represented? Give the exhibitor a chance. If an error has been made in judgment by those who are supposed to be better able to determine as to what he shall exhibit he is certainly entitled to consideration before being dragged into court. All such affairs can be adjusted without splashing them with the color of crime at the expense of an innocent exhibitor.

Well, little Mary Pickford has left us to go into the "legit" under Mr. David Belasco. Success to her. May we live to see the day when she will be spoken of with the same admiration we have for Warfield, Blanche Bates and others of Mr. Belasco's proteges. She certainly made good in the pictures and was one of the first actresses in the business to attain the position of intimacy and popularity with the public that so many now enjoy. The only objection I ever had to her was her name. I first took a dislike to it in an east side theater when a woman sitting beside me exclaimed to her escort, "O, there's little Mary Pigsfoot; isn't she grant!"

Pathé's weekly continues its high-class instructive work, it is worth noting, that where pictures hold an interest, they increase in popularity; these weekly pictures are always fresh and their appearance is anticipated regularly, people look for each issue with interest second only to the morning paper.

At the present time the Balkan War scenes are the most important. The recent release showed regiments of both Montenegrin and Turkish soldiers going to the front. The smart appearance of the Montenegrin soldiers evoked applause.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Houses Here and There.

EMPRESS THEATER, CENTRAL CITY, KY.

THE Empress Theater, the first of the chain to be erected in Kentucky, Southern Indiana and Tennessee by the Consolidated Theaters Company, has been completed at Central City, Ky., and is one of the handsomest houses in the western section of the State. The cost of the Empress was $12,000, an entirely new building being erected for the purpose for which it was intended. O. T. Crawford, of St. Louis, is president of the Consolidated Theaters Company, which is capitalized at half a million.

The Empress Theater has a seating capacity of 450. The dimensions of the building, 30 feet wide and 78 long, make it possible for this number of seats to be installed without crowding. The seats are the regulation opera chairs, heavily upholstered in leather, and insuring comfort for the patrons of the handsome new theater. Comfort, of course, was a prime requisite in the construction of the house, and that necessity is well cared for. A high-class ventilating system was installed at a cost of $1,200, while steam heat automatically regulated provides an even temperature regardless of outside weather conditions.

While patrons of the Empress have found that every convenience has been provided for them, they apparently appreciate the beauty of the theater even to a greater extent than other considerations. The Empress, in this respect, ranks with the handsomest theaters in Kentucky. The entire lobby of the theater is of mosaic tile, the name of the house being inscribed on the lobby floor in the same manner. Tungsten lights provide plenty of illumination for the exterior, as well as diffusing the entire front with an agreeable glow. A cluster of lights hangs in the lobby, while the arch is lined with individual globes.

Entrance to New Empress Theater.

Frescoing and plastic relief work combine to make the interior especially attractive. The theater is provided with a dome ceiling which adds further dignity to its appearance. The walls on the interior are completely lined with mirrors, while the same is true of the lobby and foyer, or interior lobby. The inverted lighting system, now so popular in all classes of theaters, is used in the Empress Theater.

Appearance of the sixteen employes of the Empress conforms to that of the theater itself. All of the attendants are uniformed, the doorkeeper, ushers and other employes being attired in distinctive and attractive uniforms. No less attractive are the girl cashiers. The manager of the theater is Thomas W. Murphy, a Central City man, who has had long experience in conducting moving picture houses.

A feature of the Empress is orchestral music. The orchestra is composed of no less than eight experts, the best of the musical talent of Central City. A piano, cello, first and second violins, clarinet and two cornets, with drums, compose the orchestra, which is considered one of the finest in Kentucky, able to render appropriate music for any film, no matter how exacting the demand. The music of the Empress, more than any other feature, possibly, has been instrumental in popularizing the house.

While moving pictures only are run at the Empress, provision for vaudeville has been made by the erection of a stage. It is not regarded as likely, however, that this will ever be called into use, except on isolated occasions. Photoplays are highly popular in Central City, and the public has indicated its preference for pictures over a varied program. Like all successful exhibitors, the Consolidated will endeavor to give its patrons what they want, and so it may be assumed that moving pictures will form the program for an indefinite period or until public taste changes.

Unlike many theaters at interior points, the Empress gives its patrons a daily change of pictures. Twenty-five-day service is used, the Universal program being presented through the Central Film Service Company, of Louisville. Matinees are given on Wednesdays and Saturdays, while performances are run every night. As a concession to public sentiment in Central City, the house is closed on Sunday. Two new Standard machines are used by the Empress, which also has its own motor generating set. Tom Brocar, of Louisville, was the architect for the new house, while the American Mosaic Tile Company, of the same city, did the tile work. The Empress opened about the middle of November.

RICHLYNN THEATER, KANSAS CITY, MO.

The Richlynn Theater, a photograph of which is herewith published, is owned and managed by Messrs. Richards and Flynn, and the name "Richlynn" is a contraction of the proprietors' names. The house is situated at 215 West 12th Street, Kansas City, Mo., and shows Licensed pictures. Messrs. Richards and Flynn are also the managers and owners of the Subway Theater, 807 Walnut Street, and the New Wonderland Theater, Twelfth and Grand avenues, both in Kansas City, Mo. These houses seat about 550 people each, and also exhibit Licensed pictures.

WORK ON $100,000 PICTURE HOUSE STARTS.

Work has been started on the construction of a new fireproof motion picture theater in South High Street, Columbus, Ohio. The house will be operated by Max Stern, proprietor of the "Exhibit," a motion picture theater at 155 North High Street. It will cost $100,000 and will require six months to construct.

The name of the place will be the "Majestic." A seating capacity of 1,200 has been planned. The front of the building is to be of pressed brick and terra cotta. The operating booth will be of fireproof construction and built apart from the rest of the theater.

Robert J. Harmon, for seven years manager of the Exhibit Theater, will have charge of the Majestic when finished.

LYCEUM THEATER COMPANY HOUSES.

The Maze Theater.

The Maze, a moving picture theater located at Monroe, La., an engraving of which is herewith published, is owned and controlled by the Lyceum Theater Company of that city, of which Mr. W. L. Jennings, the manager of the house, is a partner. The Maze was opened on December 1, 1911, represents an investment of $5,000, and has a seating capacity of 300. The stage measures 19 feet by 23 feet. The operating room is equipped with two Power's No. 6 machines, and the size of the picture is 15 feet by 21 feet. The house is well ventilated, having a thirty-six-inch exhaust fan and twelve sixteen-inch fans. Each performance consists of moving pictures and vaudeville.

The Lyceum Theater.

The Lyceum Theater, a cut of which is herewith published, is also owned and controlled by the Lyceum Theater Company and managed by Mr. W. L. Jennings. The Lyric Company purchased this house about a year ago from Messrs. Josiah Pearce & Sons, of New Orleans. The structure represents an expenditure of $30,000 and has a seating capacity of 500 persons. The interior measurements of the Lyceum are 50 by 80, and a fully equipped stage has been provided for. The picture projected at the Lyceum is the same size as that projected at the Maze, but instead of the projection battery consisting of two Power's machines, there are in constant use two Edison Exhibition A machines. Mr. James P. Brennan is chief operator for both the Lyceum Theater Company's houses. The ventilation equipment of the Lyceum consists of two thirty-six inch exhaust fans, five ventilators and six ceiling fans. Music emanates from an orchestra of four pieces.

MERCHANT TAILOR OPENS PICTURE HOUSE.

Mr. A. Ojek, formerly a merchant tailor of South Bethlehem, Pa., has opened a theater at Third and Oak Street, in that city. Power's No. 6 has been installed and the Universal program is pulling the crowds for Mr. Ojek.

PICTURE HOUSE HAS A DOUBLE SCREEN.

The Oxford Theater, a new moving picture house situated at the corner of Ontario and Champlain Streets, Cleveland, Ohio, and which is owned by Messrs. W. H. James and F. A. Noble, bears the singular distinction of being the only moving picture theater in the United States and Canada with a double screen as shown by the accompanying photograph of the interior. A person may go into the theater and see two shows for a single admission price. After he has seen one show, he may by moving an aisle or two to the right or left of the house, as the case may be, see the other.

The Oxford Theater.

The entrance to the Oxford is pretty and plants ornament the front as the exterior view, printed herewith, will show. No unsightly posters mar the entrance, and inside the seats are comfortable and the place is well ventilated. A fireproof operating booth is used and two machines are in constant operation. The proprietors say that the place has done a splendid business since its opening.

OAKLEY, OHIO, TO HAVE NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

Messrs. Moorman & John, of Oakley, Ohio, have commissioned Architect Edward Sloctemyer to plan a fireproof moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 1,000 for them. The structure is to be built on the north side of Madison Road near Gilmore Avenue, Oakley. The dimensions of the building will be 60 feet by 150 feet and it will cost about $25,000.

CARNIVAL SUCCESS BRINGS NEW PICTURE HOUSE FOR DENVER.

The success of Denver's great festival of "Mountain and Plain" and the consequent revival of business have induced Mr. S. S. Baxter, proprietor of the Isis motion picture theater, Denver, Colo., to begin the construction of a new motion picture house in Curtis Street between Seventeenth and Eighteenth Streets. Work on the building will begin shortly.

VICTORIA THEATER, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

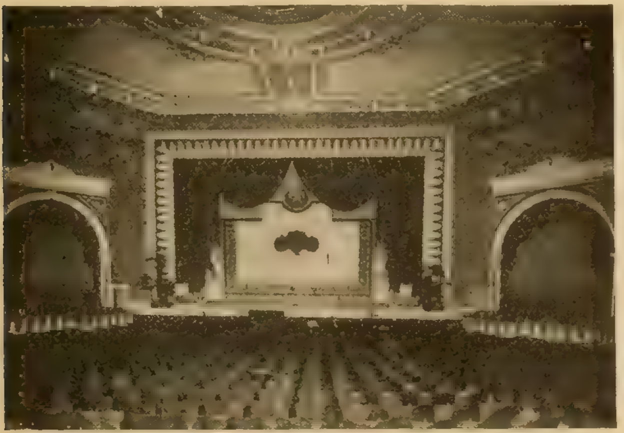
The Victoria Theater, of Rochester, N. Y., of which we publish herewith two half-tone engravings, was built in 1910 and used as a high-class vaudeville house until February, 1912, when it was taken over by the Rochester Theater Company of Rochester, and converted into a picture house. The structure is absolutely fireproof, being constructed of steel and brick throughout. In the front the building is two stories and in the rear three stories in height. The lobby is tiled and contains over 500 electric lights, artistically arranged in floral design. Four sets of doors lead from the lobby into the auditorium proper. Standing in the lobby is a large marquee, studded with electric lights, which enhance the beauty of the front.

Victoria Theater.

The color effect throughout the auditorium is rose and gold, with flowers painted in natural colors. The orchestra floor contains 1056 seats exclusive of the boxes, which are four in number, and seats ten persons each. In the balcony there are 522 seats. All chairs in the house are so arranged that a person may come in or pass out without disturbing those seated. The auditorium is horseshoe shaped and the pictures can be seen clearly from any part of the house. Two broad stairways, one on each side of the house, lead to the balcony. The requisite number of exits have been provided for.

There is a large stage, thirty-five feet deep, with a proscenium opening of twenty-five feet by forty feet six inches, and is so equipped that it can handle any size or kind of production. There are quite a number of dressing rooms under the stage, all of which are nicely furnished.



Interior View of Victoria Theater.

The operating room is in the rear of the balcony and is constructed of steel and concrete. Two Power's machines are used together with a spot light. The throw is 110 feet. Women's and men's retiring rooms have also been provided for.

The building is well ventilated, having a forty-eight-inch exhaust fan, which is capable of changing 26,000 cubic feet of air per minute, and twenty-four smaller fans placed throughout the building. The music is furnished by a three-piece orchestra. First-run licensed pictures and high-class vaudeville constitute the programs. The place opens at noon and closes at 11 p. m. The admission price is five cents for the entire house.

The officers of the Rochester Theater Company are: Edward L. Fien, president; W. H. Kelly, vice-president; H. C. Kelly, treasurer; John J. Farren, secretary and manager.

SEQUOIA THEATER—SACRAMENTO, CAL.

The Sequoia motion picture theater, located at 909 K Street, Sacramento, Cal., of which we publish herewith a halftone engraving, was opened on the 22nd of November, 1910, by the manager, Isidor F. Morris. The dimensions of the structure are 36 feet wide by 130 feet deep and it has a seating capacity of 600 persons. The lobby is built of marble and is 20 feet deep. The Sequoia was built according to the plans laid down by Mr. Morris, and it has all the conveniences, such as ladies' and gentlemen's lavatories, sanitary drinking fountain, etc. Umbrellas are checked free of charge by the management. The house plays to motion picture only, no vaudeville being shown.

GAYETY THEATER, SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.

We publish herewith a cut of the Gayety Theater, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., of which Mr. F. D. Beardsley is the manager. The house has a seating capacity of 300 persons and is one of the Soo Amusement Company's theaters. The Indians standing in front of the theater are genuine full-blooded Chippewas. Some of the Chippewas are educated Indians and they are good patrons of picture theaters.

NEW PICTURE THEATER BUILDING.

At Stevens Point, Wis., M. E. Bruce and his son-in-law, Russell Gregory, are constructing, in the northern half of Odd Fellows' Block, a moving picture theater, to be known as the "Gem." It will be one of the finest local picture houses.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Once More—Cigarettes.

WE had hoped that we had heard the last of the cigarette scheme but several exhibitors argue that the scheme has the endorsement of the Motion Pictures Patents Company, since the magazine controlled by them has accepted the advertisement.

As a matter of fact the Motion Picture Story Magazine is not now owned by the licensed manufacturers, but by part of them and not even J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph, who is president of the publishing company, has much to do with the actual management of the magazine's affairs. For this reason it is entirely possible that not a single member of the Licensed company approves the coupon scheme, and for that matter we believe that they are almost all opposed to the use of the motion picture theater as an advertising auxiliary for a brand of cheap cigarettes, nor does the argument of the editor that it is impossible to censor advertisements, probably reflect any more accurately the position of the editor's employers.

A characteristic communication signed by Eugene V. Brewster, the managing editor of the magazine, is sent in by a southern correspondent. It runs:

> Your favor received. I am sorry you take the view you do. We cannot be censors over our advertisers and over our readers' tastes. Since the majority of the best people in the world smoke cigarettes, I cannot see why cigarettes should be suppressed merely because a few small boys sometimes become addicted to the habit. All of the high class magazines carry advertising of hypnotism, cigarettes, whiskey, and drugs that I would not want my boy to answer, but I cannot see why I should blame the publisher for that. There are many arguments for and against accepting promiscuous advertising from a reliable house that apparently is not immoral.

Not the Point at All.

We think the editor begs the issue while revealing a curious mental attitude. The issue is clean cut and well defined. Reduced to simple terms it amounts to this:

Can any branch of the motion picture business (and this includes the press), afford to become closely identified with the promotion of the tobacco industry in any form?

It is so recently that the pictures have been lifted from the sough into which they had fallen through the ill advised efforts of a type of manager now happily almost extinct, that the business is not yet on a plane where it can afford to be confounded with anything that in the public mind is in bad repute. Unquestionably some of the "best people in the world" are addicted to the use of cigarettes, but in the minds of thousands there is an intimate connection between the cigarette, the small boy and the picture theater that is regarded by them as immoral if it is not so regarded by Mr. Brewster, who in spite of his connection of two years with the motion picture business is not and probably never will be a motion picture man with the best interests of the business closer to his heart than the advertising account.

The Difference.

Did the Moving Picture World share this attitude, it is probable that our advertising space could be sold to the tobacco company for three or four times our regular rates. Since the first announcement of the coupon scheme we have fought the idea as hurtful to the best interests of the business and we have refused the cigarette advertising, with or without editorial endorsement. We take the ground that a censorship of advertising should exist and though this stand has cost us many thousand dollars, we have consistently refused to accept the advertising of correspondence schools and similar misleading publicity matter. We feel that our first duty is to our readers and the business they and we represent, and it does not require much intelligent thought to realize that the cigarette coupon scheme is a bad business, not alone morally, but from a strictly utilitarian point of view as we have already recited.

All high class magazines maintain a certain standard of advertising, refusing thousands of dollars worth of business from concerns of commercial integrity, but with schemes of questionable propriety. One concern, alone, operating several popular priced magazines, annually turns down more than one hundred thousand dollars worth of actual advertising contracts, because of the duty it owes its readers and its knowledge that the best advertisers will not go into a magazine that accepts anything and everything. It is at once a problem of good taste and sound business sense.

And On the Subject.

And while we are on the subject of questionable advertising we print this letter from M. D. Stilson, of the Schuyler Opera House, Cobleskill, New York:

> I am enclosing you copy of advertisement cut from our local paper The Cobleskill Times of Dec. 5th, 1912.
> Just such things as this are what is keeping the mails full of scenarios written by people that never had an idea in their life, and never will have one that will work out into a photoplay.
> Not only that, but it makes it all the more of an up-hill job for a person that can write fairly good script to sell it. The editor gets sick and tired of reading trash and when my script comes to his notice, possibly he will give it a reading, and possibly he will not.
> I shall show this advertisement up in one of our other local papers this week. Think it is one of the most misleading things ever written.

Mr. Stilson is a photoplay writer as well as a manager and he knows the script situation better than do most exhibitors. The advertisement has been run broadcast in the paper of the small towns. The course is priced at $20, will be offered at eight with successive drops to four and two, if the first offer is not immediately accepted.

The trouble with the scheme lies in the fact that hundreds of unintelligent persons are induced to part with the tuition fee on the assertion that no literary skill is required. Not one in a thousand of the students develops into a successful photoplaywright and a large part of our business as photopay critics consists in straightening these students out after their graduation. Why not follow Mr. Stillman's lead and save your patrons from this foolish expenditure? The real photoplay school is in your theater, the study of the picture on your screen.

Doing It Right.

In a town the size of Detroit, with one paper hostile to the photoplay, Mr. Starr obtained 46½ inches of pure reading matter carrying the cachet of the local society. He did precisely what the Edison Company and the National Society figured that he could do. He made money and gained prestige while helping a movement that is worthy of all help, and he did it right off the reel. Those Edison purpose plays are not merely money makers. They bring an even greater return in the endorsement of the local societies.

Whenever you have something along these lines, work through the local societies. Get them to speak to the editor if you do not advertise; get them to speak anyway, for that matter. Give the widest publicity to the fact that you are working with the local society. Give them all you can get for them and get all you can for yourself. If Mr. Starr can get nearly fifty inches of reading matter in Detroit the smaller towns can do even better. It's there waiting for you, but you must reach out and take it.

Coming Into Its Own.

And speaking of press matter, we are glad to note that the Baltimore News is giving a full page to pictures and picture advertising in the Sunday edition; the page facing the theatrical department and forming a part of it. It makes an erroneous claim to a new departure, for there are many such departments in the daily papers throughout the country, but each addition helps. That the Baltimore exhibitors are live wires is shown in the fact that in three weeks the number of advertisers had risen from nine to twenty-two, the second issue carrying nineteen. Gradually the photoplay advances to its proper position in amusements. In two years the paper without a photoplay department will be more worthy of notice than those with them, at present.

Mr. Arnold Wins.

Recently the Quorum Court of Mena, Ark., imposed a fee of $1.50 a performance on motion picture shows on the decidedly unique proposition that the Lyric was making money and could afford to pay it. We do not believe that the Lyric plays matinees, but if it did the license fee would exceed that paid by the largest dramatic houses in New York City—which also are making money at times.

Mr. S. A. Arnold has frequently demonstrated his ability to keep things moving and he made things so hot for the father of the obnoxious measure that a special meeting of the court (which seems to regulate local affairs) was specially convened to repeal the ordinance. Here is a clipping from one of the local papers, that strikes the keynote for the rest of the agitation:

> Yesterday the Quorum court, on the statements of one member, assessed a license of $2.50 for each exhibition given in Mena by a moving picture show.
> This sort of thing can have but one effect, and that is to make such amusement houses as the Lyric an impossibility in this city. The grounds on which the prohibitive license was imposed was that the Lyric was making a great deal of money, and could well afford to pay the amount named, not that it was intended to drive it from the city.
> The facts are at variance with the claim, as anyone could easily ascertain who tried.
> The Star and, it believes, a great majority of the people of Mena, appreciate the Lyric as an amusement feature of modern civic life that is beneficial and necessary, and that it should be maintained so long as it is kept up to its present standard and worth.
> If not, then enforce such an unreasonable license measure, and eliminate it.

Now For the Moral.

And now for the moral. Mr. Arnold writes:

> I have always kept my show above reproach, which proves that it pays to have the best people your friends, even though you think you can get along without them.

Mena is strictly a picture town. Mr. Arnold has picture opposition but neither house runs vaudeville and the opera house has been dark for two seasons. In addition to the photoplays, Mr. Arnold features his music, frequently offering a vocal and instrumental program of note.

He keeps his house above reproach and the moment the stability of the house is attacked the people flock to his standard, the papers aid him in his fight and public opinion forces the repeal of the obnoxious tax. Do you suppose that the town would have been wrought up because the picture theater was threatened had Mr. Arnold brought to town every blood and thunder release he could coax from the exchange? That's the moral.

First for Kinemacolor.

Here is the first advertisement for a Kinemacolor theater that has come under our notice. It is a postal card and done in green and red ink, which makes a fine showing against the white card. It is reproduced in detail that it may assist others to frame their advertising for the same feature. The name of the house, the word Kinemacolor and the price are in red, the rest being in the green form. The typographical balance is unusually good.

Runs As News.

Hugh King Harris, of Grand Rapids sends in a clipping from a daily paper in which the coming attractions at the photoplay theaters are listed as a matter of news. The fact that the houses are all under one management makes the collection of the data easy, but if you know your program in advance why not try out your local papers? It might go through.

Takes Plenty of Space.

J. H. Morris, of the Sequoia Amusement Company, Sacramento, writes that he takes 4,000 inches of display advertising in the Sacramento each year, sometimes using full-page ads for the big features.

The advertisements quote freely from the criticisms of the films appearing in this paper and makes effective use of them. Here are a couple of examples:

> Note: We are just in receipt of "The Motion Picture World," in which there are several pages devoted to Comments or Reviews of the different photoplays that are produced throughout this week, we have taken the liberty of republishing the Reviewer's Comments on the film "War's Havoc" which is in part as follows:
> A wartime picture around a grand old Southern home. It is a highly commendable offering. The story is exciting. There are pretty girls, handsome officers and large bodies of troops that seem well trained that are used effectively in more than one impressive scene. The background includes a railroad with trains of cars and old-fashioned engines. Best of all, there is a head-on collision between a train and a single engine that made one or two in the audience cry out almost in fear. It is well photographed and is a sure feature.
> The following are the comments of the man who reviews all the motion pictures for the Motion Picture World, a magazine devoted to the motion picture industry. If the picture needs a roast, this souvenir certainly gives it all that is coming to it, but on the other hand, if the picture has merit he gives "the devil his due." Here it is:
> > A first-class comedy, well planned and cleverly acted. It made many hearty laughs and some real howls. Ike gets an invitation to a "maskerade" and takes an amusing way to obtain a suitable costume. It's a devil's make-up and when he gets it on and, with a pitchfork, starts out for the ball he frightens even the horses. The men are stampeded until one shoots off the tip of his tail. It's a very desirable release, a good mirth-maker.

By the Janitor.

C. E. Lindstruth, who writes that he is "operator and janitor" of the Hippodrome, Carthage, N. Y., sends in a handbill for comment. In a small town an operator's duties are many and peculiar, but an operator who can do the advertising should not have to do the janiting very long. Mr. Lindstruth has some good ideas, but his make-up might be improved upon. He realizes this in part in marginal comment, in which he suggests that the day's release is underplayed and the coming releases overplayed, but he does not preserve proper balance in the day's feature. It starts off:

Guy de Maupassant's Famous Story
"THE BLIND MAN'S SACRIFICE"
TODAY ONLY
AT THE HIPPODROME
Produced by the Famous Milano Co. of Rome, Italy, in Two Reels.

There follows the descriptive matter and other subjects for the day. Then a rule breaks the space, and below is the announcement of the coming features. The top line is 18-point, the title 60-point, the "today" line 24-point, the house name 36-point.

Relative Values.

The two big lines are the name of the house and the name of the feature. We think that raising the house title to greater prominence is required, and would run first the "today," then the house, the author, the title of the feature and the Milano line. This would be a more logical order. At the same time we would play up the name of the house in larger type and a bolder letter. An extended type such as is used for the "today" line, but in a higher point, would make the house title big and black and plainly seen. Any advertising should be so planned that the name of the house forces itself upon the eye. We would take the entire line for "Hippodrome," and let the "at the" fall by itself in a 10-point line.

The coming releases could have been drawn in a little with profit, an 18-point being plenty large enough for the titles. A cunning suggestion is offered in the announcement that the specials will be shown during the week at the Hippodrome, the dates to be announced later. The bait line reads: "Should you spend an hour each evening or attend the matinee every day this week you would miss none of these special films."

Taken by and large it is good average work, and should raise the janitor to advertising agent.

Stays Alive.

Here is a letter from Mr. H. M. Star, of the Empire Theater, Detroit. It speaks for itself:

> Am sending you some newspaper notices for your advertising column which I was able to get for the Edison release, "Hope." As soon as I read of this release I booked it, and then got busy with the secretary of the Detroit Tuberculosis Society and had them go after the papers. If I had taken the press matter around they would either have laughed at me or quoted advertising rates. Through the Society I was able to get it gratis, and you can see by enclosed clipping that I gave the Society all the credit for getting the film, and when I showed the film I passed out their literature. I can truthfully say that the day I ran the film I had more automobiles in front of my house than any two dollar theater in the city, and I packed them in from 9 A. M. to 11 P. M., and the film gave full satisfaction both to the public and the Detroit Tuberculosis Society.
> One of the morning papers the next day also gave me a favorable notice. I am writing you so that other exhibitors who possibly may not think of the newspaper notices in the large cities can use this. You know it is pretty hard to get the city papers to give favorable notices to photoplay houses. Am sorry to say that the word "movies" appears in a couple of the notices, in place of the proper word, photoplay, which I used in my press matter, but the paper that used the word had previously been knocking pictures, and I imagine they were so sore at having to to speak a good word for the pictures that they used their old favorite "movie" deliberately.

Something Nice.

The Briam Film Review, the advertisement of the British-American Film Company, of Montreal, is a fine example of good work from the preparation of the copy to the printing. The company is a new one, making a specialty of Canadian subjects and if The Battle of the Long Sault is anywhere near as good as its advertisement there should be a demand for it.

Returnable Cuts.

The M. P. Sales agency in its announcement of advertising matter for From the Manger to the Cross, lists half tone cuts on rental, the cuts to be returned within two weeks. It strikes us that there should be an idea here for some of the American manufacturers. It would involve a little extra work, but the cost of the cuts could be divided between three or four managers before the cut was retired. It might be possible for an exchange to try the scheme were it possible to imagine an American exchange doing much for its patrons.

The Kalem Kalendar.

And speaking of the Kalem company, their holiday Kalendar in red, green and gold was "some" Kalendar. It is to be hoped that the Vitagraph and Edison companies follow the lead in offering their publication to the playgoer on subscription. It all helps to create an interest in the pictures.

Simple and Effective.

The Exchange theater, Goldfield, Nevada, in advertising Ostler Joe simply reproduces the poem on coated paper and gives the date of showing, the name of the Edison company and the statement that "This poem has been followed so carefully that it can be used as a synopsis for the film." That sort of thing means a lot more than the most glowing praise. It will not work in all cases, but in the matter of a well known poem it does excellently and many of the copies will be preserved, serving as a permanent advertisement.

Get the Gift of Gab.

Mr. Williams possesses what is sometimes termed the gift of gab. He has the faculty of fluent expression. There is a certain ease and impressiveness of speech that counts. Take this example: "A vivid, vital and blood thrilling story picturesquely staged and masterfully handled." This is more impressive than the usual "great story" and yet the trick is simple. If you lack fluency of phrase get a copy of Roget's Thesarus at your bookseller's. A brief study will show you how to gain the lists of synoymns and their opposites, but the Thesaurus also gives phrases as well as words for which reason it is better than Crabbe or other books of synonyms. If you will make note of the useful words you'll be surprised at the improvement in your advertising. The constant iteration of "great," "grand" and "magnificent" wearies the ears. Learn to say the same thing in a hundred different ways. You'll be surprised to find how easy it is.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

It's About Time.

IT'S about time to remind you again that editors do not want you to send them historical subjects or plays based on books that may or may not be copyrighted. It's one of those things that needs to be written about every so often, because the subscription list is growing fast and the newcomers didn't see the last paragraph.

The last straw this time is a letter from a friend who writes that his daughter has a splendid acquaintance with history and literature, and he is sure she can write some fine plays.

Very likely she can, but the chances are that she won't sell them, for what the editor wants from the outside writer is original ideas. If he wants to write historical subjects he can buy a second hand history for thirty cents and do the writing himself. If he wants to put on Romeo and Juliet, either as an adaptation from Shakespeare or in a modern setting, he is quite competent to make the working script himself, probably more competent than the outsider. But he can't think up three or four really good new ideas each week and if you can think up one for him, he'll buy that and buy others from some other writers who may be able to turn out one good script a week or a month or twice a year or whatever their capacity, but by having a lot of stories, he is reasonably certain to get what he wants from someone and he doesn't have to buy Washington Crossing the Delaware thinly disguised as "When the West Was Young" and showing Ben Bradley, the brave pioneer leading his little band of frontiersmen across the Ohio as full of ice as on the occasion when Eliza made her justly celebrated escape. You don't want history and literature. You want imagination.

Keeping Up the String.

Lately we advised keeping a string of scripts out as the only way to secure anything approximating a steady income and very promptly a correspondent writes that he has tried it, but that the scripts come back faster than he can send them out.

It only takes two minutes to mail a script and if, when the story is written you will take the trouble to make a list of the most likely markets for that particular story, naming them in the order of their probability, all you have to do is to take the script and send it to the next studio on the list.

But scripts that come back with such remarkable promptness are evidently not the right sort of scripts. The writer who cannot write scripts that stick is not yet ready to build up a string. It is not the number of scripts out that counts. It is the number of really good scripts in the hands of the editors that brings regular returns. Do not send out everything you write just because you've written it. Send out only the best. To send out the story that even you are not quite certain of is to enrich the post office rather than yourself. Study your work. If it doesn't seem to be quite right hold on to it until you do get it right.

The advice as to building up a string was intended only for those who can make an average of 75% of sales, but until you can come close to that average you are still a student and need to keep most of your scripts home to study them.

Don't get the idea that you are a writer because you can run a typewriter. You're not a writer until you can sell three-fourths of what you write.

Producing Photoplays.

Many people have written that if they could know just how a photoplay was produced they could write better stuff. Since admission to the studios is denied the outsider, we will try and take you through the process on paper.

In the first place your script arrives at the studio. Usually it is recorded and passed on to the editor. We think that in practically every studio the script is read by the editor or his assistant and not by the first and second reader. That sort of thing does not exist. Each script gets an editorial hearing.

If the editor approves he lays it aside. There may be a conference of the directors some night each week or each director may deal individually with the editor. In any event the approved script goes to some director most likely to approve that particular style of story. When he has time he reads it and if he likes it he takes it, though, as a rule, he first talks it over with the head of the concern or some person delegated by him. If the latter likes the story a release slip is sent the author and a check follows the return of the slip properly signed.

The script is now the property of the company. It may be put in hand immediately or it may be laid aside. If the latter it may be that the story is not seasonable or it may be a railroad, seaside or some other form of special story to be made when a sufficient number of scripts of the same general character will warrant the hiring of a branch railroad, a trip to the shore or whatever it may be. If it is one of these specials, say a railroad story, the props for the railroad scenes are listed and given the director's assistant, who is a sort of general utility man. The deal is made with the railroad, a train or two goes into the command of the director and as quickly as possible the railroad scenes of two or more scripts are made. Then the players go back to the studio where the interior sets and street scenes are made in more leisurely fashion.

If it is straight studio production the property and scene plots are prepared, the actors are selected, told about the customes needed and perhaps given a general idea of the play. Meantime the stage crew are getting out the settings or perhaps one or two scenes are built. The sets are raised and all the scenes in any one setting are made before the scene is struck and another set is made. Perhaps while the second set is being made the director loads some of the players into a car and goes out and gets the exterior scenes, his assistant having made the arrangements for the locations.

The director may work from the author's script or he may entirely rewrite the play to suit his own ideas, but he has some sort of a working script on which the scenes are checked off as they are made and from which he gets his idea of each scene.

The negatives are developed and printed from and the leaders are prepared. The positive prints are joined together in their proper order, generally by the director himself, and the leaders and letters are inserted. Generally the leaders are made from printed cards and the letters are all done in India ink on white or tint paper, the tint relieving the glare of the dead white sheet just as the table linen and draperies are tinted blue or light yellow to kill the chalky effect.

Now the beginning and ends of each scene are trimmed off to make the action smart, and perhaps whole scenes are eliminated or replaced with a leader to get the subject into proper length. Then the print goes back to the printing room where the negative is marked in accordance with the positive and given a negative number and a scene number. These are printed and joined together by girls who are guided by the numbers, and the prints are packed in tin boxes and shipped to the exchanges.

The director is guided in his choice by many things besides the value of the story. He may not like that sort of story, or liking it, he may figure that it is too risky to take a script with so many outside scenes at a time when the weather is apt to be bad and the sky overcast. He may be limited as to expense and figure that the cost of building certain sets is too great or the hiring of certain locations is too expensive. He may want only plays for a woman lead or vice versa, or he may figure that certain essential mob scenes may not be strong enough to warrant hiring fifty people at three dollars apiece. Most directors are required to turn in one full reel a week. They want a good strong story that can be made with little trouble and perhaps in four or five days instead of six. If you write that kind you can sell them almost anywhere.

Names.

Shakespeare didn't seem to think that there was much in a name, but he never wrote photoplays. Lots of photoplaywrights seem to agree with William and shoot over some of the sort of names that a darky mammy gives her youngest child. That's a mistake. Make the names simple and common. Call your heroine Grace and the Editor is apt to like her but tag her Murieletta or Nanceline and he'll cuss. So will the director. Marianne is more musical than Nan, but when the director wants to call the star into a scene he's liable to choke over the name and ten seconds are lost while he is trying to cough it out. On the other hand he megaphones "Come on, Nan," and she arrives on the scene with no lost motion or stage waits.

Most directors call the players to action as the scene is played and they cannot bother with fanciful names. Of course no sane editor is going to decline a play just because the heroine is Manuelita instead of Nita, but he'll make a face every time he sees an inch and a half of name where a half inch would do as well.

Here's another wrinkle. Call the young people by their first names and the elders by their last. Do not write that "Hungerford and Miss Van Athelstane exit from the scene while Mr. Van Athelstane regards their departure with approving eye." That reads well but it is not half as business-like as "Nan and Ted exit. Mr. Bruce looks after them approvingly."

Certain names suggest heroes and others villains. Fit the character. Do not call the villain Jim or Jack. Call him some less intimate name. It will set the characters in the minds of the editors much better. It will seem to "belong."

To the beginner this may seem a very small matter to make a fuss over, but it is not. Some of the men on desk may not appreciate what they sense, but consciously or unconsciously every editor is impressed by a certain knowing air to the professional script. There are little earmarks that point the experienced man and these help the general effect whether the script reader knows it or not. One of the ear marks is the adept fitting of the names to the characters and the circumstances. If you picked up a novel with the hero named Adelbert you would be inclined to laugh at such a name for a hero. Why not be as careful in your script? You can even suggest age with a surname sometimes and conjure up the vision of a bent and feeble old man simply through a happy selection of a name.

In one of the house organs we recall an article in which a writer declared that he had a scrap book in which he set down all odd and unusual names and recommended the practice to others. It is about the last thing that should be done in photoplay, though it is a good plan in fiction. Stick to the simple, descriptive names and you will be more likely to sell.

Your Market.

We just answered a letter from a writer who explained that he had sent a story to Edison but they had not liked the idea. We explained that the probable reason Edison had not liked the idea was that the company was some three thousand miles from a place where the story could be staged and suggested some companies three or four miles from a suitable location.

More than this, the writer had tried to sell from the synopsis and not from the developed script, a procedure not unlike trying to sell a ton of hay with a blade of glass as a sample. You may have the finest sort of an idea and yet be incapable of developing it, and the editor wants to see what you have to sell before he decides if he wants to buy.

Half the trick of selling lies in sending your wares to the right market. If you have a story with four or five lions and send it to Victor, for example, you won't sell it. Victor does not make that style of story. Selig, on the other hand, might buy it, because that company maintains a menagerie. Even in smaller matters it is essential that you should study the needs of the buyer. Two companies may make an equal number of society plays and the inference would be that both would offer the same market. But one might have a woman lead and the other feature its leading man. In such a case a story with a woman lead would appeal to the former but be returned by the latter. Suppose that you went into a shoe store and told the clerk you wanted a pair of shoes. If you wore trousers what would you think of the salesman who took you over to the women's department and tried to sell you a pair of satin slippers? The comparison may seem a bit far fetched, but it is not. If you try to sell a story featuring a man to a company that features a woman, you are displaying no better salesmanship than the shoe store man.

If you .. read this paper regularly, more particularly the stories of the films and the comments, you'll be able to keep posted on what is wanted by the different companies and will be able to market your wares to better advantage.

Selling isn't merely sending out scripts. It's sending out scripts to the right places. Sending them out indiscriminately is not selling—it's gambling.

Personal Privilege.

Some weeks ago we expressed regret that the Motion Picture Story Magazine saw fit to endorse the questionable correspondence school schemes in its advertising and editorial departments. In an effort to "get back" that would be childish, were it not for the gravity of the charge, the January issue of the magazine says:

> Epes Winthrop Sargent, of The Moving Picture World, is very much opposed to photoplay schools. Mr. Sargent has written a book in which he tells all about how to write photoplays, hence the schools are unnecessary. Mr. Sargent is also opposed to cigarettes. He smokes long black thirty cent cigars.

Either Mr. Brewster possesses an atrocious memory or he blinds himself to the truth. He will perhaps now recall that we replied to his suggestion that the Photo Playwright was in need of an editor to the effect that we did not want to mix up with the Boonville bunch. We also explained that we refused to collaborate with J. Berg Eisenwein on a text book and school course, because to do so would be contrary to our expressed faith, though the Eisenwein offer was an honor. Either of these connections would have meant more money in a month than our royalty on Technique of the Photoplay will amount to in the next two years. We are not opposed to the correspondence schools because we have written a book. We wrote a book because we do not believe that any school scheme can give value for the money.

Keep It Close.

A man we know is wrestling with a comedy script. He has been told that the first version wandered too much and so he made a new version that rambled all over town and out into the country. He lost his grip on the idea and it ran away from him and it was a good little sprinter at that, with Marathon tendencies.

Don't let them get the best of you. If you find that the plot is getting restless and fractious tie it down and tie it tight, because once an idea gets away you never can tell where it will run to. In this particular script about half the scenes were padding because the writer had been told to throw overboard a lot of the other stuff. He followed instruction, but after throwing out the useless cargo he took on a lot of rock for ballast and was so badly ladened as before. Never mind if the story does look skimpy. If you've got all the story in and nothing else (be particular about the nothing else) you have something that is likely to sell if the idea is a good one, but the minute you give your Pegasus its head and let it start to run away with you, you never can tell whether you will land in the next county or the hospital.

If you've a starting point and an idea as to where you want to go, get there by the most direct route. Don't write in some pad stuff because it's funny or dramatic according to what it is that you are writing. Keep right along from point to point, using only the essential scenes. Terseness will help a bad play. Padding will kill the best idea ever thought out. When you start to revise a script remember that revision should, if possible, mean condensation as well.

Old-Fashioned Ideas.

Did you ever pick up one of the novels written say in the early '50's, not by a master of English, but by an average writer of the time; one of those "It was a dark and stormy night, down the desolate road a solitary horseman" novels.

There are people who write that sort of photoplay and never seem to realize that they are a half century and more behind the times. Dickens, Scott, Irving and Poe have been visualized, but the solitary horsemen writers stay in the oblivion they deserve, yet stories of this style keep piling into the studio and make quick exits because they are not at all what the editors want.

Write to the 1913 model or you are wasting good paper. Lost wills are passe, and so are scores of other factors that were in high favor when Lincoln was still a lawyer. Don't use them. Get new goods.

Wants Too Much.

We recently received a letter from a lady with a grievance. She had sent a script to the Vitagraph that was properly prepared in accordance with the rules, yet the Vitagraph sent it back with never a word as to why, and later ignored her request for this information though she sent a stamp.

If a peddler comes to your door with potatoes, you do not stop to explain that you prefer rice. You slam the door in his face. The Vitagraph did not slam the door, but it did content itself with a polite no and we fail to see wherein the vendor of photoplays differs from the seller of potatoes.

No author has a right to demand a reason for rejection, nor can such a reason be given a week or so after the script has been read. If you do get a reason be grateful. If you do not, do not get the idea that you are being defrauded of your rights.

Short Cuts.

Most studios ask for a cast of characters. Some like scene plots from those whose work is of a character to pass without an undue change in scenes. If you depend on memory for this data you are apt to forget something. If you pick up the stuff from the finished script you are making a lot of trouble for yourself.

We use three cards or slips of paper placed on the sliding shelf of the desk. The first of these is the cast slip, the second is for interior and the last for exterior scenes. Before we start we name the four or five leading characters and write these names on the slip. If we have a maid in scene five we write:

Maid—5.

Perhaps we shall not need her again, or possibly we use her in scene ten. In the latter case we add the ten and the entry looks like this:

Maid—5—10.

Every time we introduce a character we enter it on the slip and if the character does not appear in more than three or four scenes we note those scenes as we write them. Then the director knows that the maid who plays in scenes five and ten can also play the boarding mistress in eleven and thirteen.

If the first scene is a lawn we write that fact down on the script of action and then turn to the third slip and write:

Lawn—1.

If it is an interior we enter on the second slip instead. Every time we use the lawn we mark down the scene number. After the script is complete we take the three slips and from them write the scene plot and cast without wasting a moment, but before we write the scene plot we count the numbers to make certain that they are all down. If they are not, and sometimes we forget one, we start with one and pick out the figures until we come to the missing number. We save about two days a year this way.

Perhaps you know of some short cut. Send it in.

Cost of Production.

This isn't another suggestion to save the manufacturer money by not asking for an ocean steamer where a rowboat will do. It's your own production cost this time. Are you economical or stingy?

Here's the way we figure it out. We can get paper of a sort for sixty-five cents a ream of 500 sheets. That will make about one hundred to a hundred and twenty-five scripts. That makes the paper for each script cost less than one cent. For another half-dollar we can get paper we are not ashamed of, paper that gains the respect of the editor and is likely to help a sale. The additional cost is one-half cent for each script. Isn't it worth that extra half-cent to be proud instead of ashamed of your paper?

We pay half a dollar apiece for ribbons. We use black record ribbons. They are the shortest lived of all the ribbons we know, but for all of our work our ribbon outlay is about twelve and a half cents a week. Isn't it pretty poor economy to cut down the cost to only five cents a week and pound away on the rag as long as it will make any sort of impression?

Carbons cost $3.50 a box. We do not try to do more than ten copies with one carbon. It costs a cent and a half a script. But we get a clean-cut impression, and when we send out the carbon, as we do sometimes in case of loss of the original when the studio asks for the copy, we send something that is almost as good as the original. Five dollars a year for carbons is only ten cents a week, and any one of those copies may do us more than five dollars' worth of good. Does it pay to get your sheets by the dozen and pound one into a pulp before you discard it?

This may sound finical and fussy, but it's based on experience and we know it pays to put goods up in an attractive package whether it is perfume, pills or plays. Try it.

Where It Belongs.

The other day we ran across a script that on the last page carried a note to the editor, suggesting that certain changes would materially improve the script.

The bottom of the last page is no place for these improvements. It's tough to have to copy over four or five pages of script to get the suggestions into the scenes where they belong, but it is not one-tenth as unpleasant as piling up rejection slips for the script because the improvements are in the wrong place.

Never let a script go out until you feel that it is not susceptible of further improvement. Every time a script comes back, look it over again and see if you can better it. If you can, pull it apart and doctor it up. Don't start an appendix of suggestions. Put the improvement right where it belongs in the plot of action, and if you copy and recopy a dozen times, be cheered by the thought that the more you work on an idea the better chance you stand of making a sale. Unless you are willing to do your work properly it is foolish to try and write at all. We have written a 20,000 or 30,000-word story over two, three and even five times because there was a sale at the end of the job. We didn't add a couple of pages of advice to the editor on how he could fix it up so it could be used. We rewrote the whole story, and then we did it all over again, but when we got the check we forgot how tired we were of the story and thought only of work that was satisfactorily done at last. If your pride in work well done isn't stronger than your laziness, why work at all? If you do work, do the best work that is in you.

Cheer Up.

If you've had a couple of scripts come back and are feeling blue, cheer up. We got back fourteen in one lot the other day. We think this is the photoplay record. Twelve of the fourteen are not at all bad scripts and we are going to sell them some time somewhere, but when you weep over your puny little two think of our fourteen—and cheer up.

The moral of all this is that even the trained writer working with a single company in view cannot always suit his producer, so when you get a story back do not think it means the end of all. Look for someone else to sell it to after you've fixed it up a bit.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

Chicago Regulations Amended.

WE are, by courtesy of the Chicago authorities, in receipt of an amended copy of the New York Rules and Regulations of the Department of Electricity and the Ordinances of the City of Chicago, Governing the Use of Moving Picture Apparatus. Section 1616 provides that all operators must, in addition to their license, have an identification card bearing their photograph and signature. This is a most excellent provision, and is, presumably, copied from New York City. I notice that one of the rules provides that "no combustible material except the operator's clothing, must be kept in the operating room." Reading this caused a smile. Thank Heaven the operator doesn't have to wear asbestós or do a male Venus stunt, anyhow. He is still permitted to retain his ordinary raiment. Another rule, with which we heartily concur, reads: "Operators must report all bad reels of film to the department, and must not use the same." A most excellent rule indeed, and one that other cities may very well copy. The use of anything less than No. 6 B. & S. gauge wire in connection with arc lamp circuits is prohibited; a thing we have long advocated in this department. The use of motors for operating machines is prohibited.

Nowhere in these rules, however, do I find any provision requiring a vent flue of sufficient size to carry off the smoke in time of fire. We find the same old idiotic proposition of requiring fireproof walls and semi-automatic shutters over the operating room openings, without any adequate means of carrying away the flame and smoke, which does the damage by causing the audience to stampede. Presumably, the operator is to stay there and swallow the smoke and flame as fast as it is made. All kinds of fire prevention appliances carefully specified; automatic shutters on the machines; no motors allowed; in fact the same old string of chestnuts, and the one sensible thing which would absolutely protect the audience from any possible injury through a film fire, is carefully omitted. Must we again tell the Chicago authorities, and all other authorities, that it is a childishly simple matter to so construct an operating room that the walls will be thoroughly fireproof, that all smoke and flame will be instantly carried away to the open air and that the shutters will drop over the openings in two seconds of the time a fire starts at either the machine, the film storage box or rewinder and that all the film in the room can burn and the audience absolutely not know that anything out of the ordinary is happening? Are the authorities so dense that they cannot grasp this idea, or is it due to the fact that the pull of the building owner or the theater manager or owner, who objects to the expense of the installation of an operating room equipped thus is so great that it overbalances the item of safety to the public?

Let us face this matter fairly and squarely, gentlemen, just for once. You can eliminate all fire danger if you really want to! You can so construct a room, and so equip it, that you need not care if it be carpeted with loose excelsior, since fire therein cannot possibly do any manner of injury, except to the contents of the room itself, or in the least degree alarm the audience, since they would not know that there was any fire at all. Why, then, don't you get down to brass tacks and enact laws governing the construction and equipment of operating rooms which will contain at least the germs of common sense? Chicago, of all cities, through the experience of the Iroquois fire, should know how much more deadly a panic is than a fire.

That Canadian License.

Indian Head, Sask., Can., contributes the following explanation of the moving picture machine tax, which we severely criticised in these columns recently:

> After reading your reply to our friend in Chelsey, Ont., November 23d issue, I am moved to explain the why and wherefore of matters. In this country every business man has to pay what the authorities call a "floor space tax." The more space used, the more you are assessed. The exhibitor, however, does not pay any such tax, but instead pays a license, amounting, in reality, to the same thing. I think our friend from Chelsey should have explained this, in which case your answer might have been much different. I might add that all operators in this province have to pay $10 per year before they can operate a moving picture machine, but unfortunately any Tom, Dick or Harry can get a license on those terms, so that the really practical operator has no protection whatever in return for his money. And now for a question: I am using a Power's Six; three-wing shutter; 104 volt, 60 cycle current through a Fort Wayne compensarc, pulling 40 amperes on a 70 foot throw. I am credited with putting up a sharp clear picture, but can I go one better by using a two-wing shutter in place of the three winger?

A two-wing shutter will give you a greater percentage of the light; also very much more flicker. The reason for using a two-wing shutter on 60 cycle current is that, if your current is really 60 cycle, and you speed up to about 70 a minute, the wings of the shutter get into synchronism with one side of the alternations of the current, producing a flashing of the light. As to the license question: Your statement puts a somewhat different face on the matter. But the basis of taxation, as described by Chelsey, is absolutely wrong and pernicious, nevertheless. It is not the amount of tax I object to. That has nothing to do with the matter. If taxes are too high I guess the Canadian brothers are amply able to attend to that matter themselves. What I object to is a tax which makes for poor service, in that it discourages the installation of a second projection machine; a thing that every moving picture theater should have. Let the Canadian authorities assess the tax in such amount as they think right and proper. If their ideas are too large, the people themselves will soon fix that. There is, however, no good reason why the house with two machines should pay more than the house with one. In fact, the house with one machine might be very much larger than the one having two propectors, yet it would, under the scheme of taxing according to the number of projection machines, pay the least amount of tax. As to the operators' license: why should the operator pay ten dollars for something having no value whatever? If that is not a cold-blooded holdup, kindly explain to me why it is not. Chicago at one time robbed the operator of $10 per year, though he did at least get a little protection in return. That fee has been reduced to $3 for the first year, and $2 per year thereafter—which is not unreasonable, though New York City exacts no fee at all.

Queer Fuse Trouble.

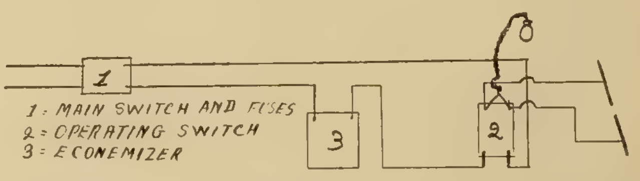
Hays, Kan., sends in sketch of his wiring and writes as follows:

> Attached find sketch of an arrangement which I use to light the operating booth (don't know any such thing, brother. Do you mean operating room?). I have the incandescent hanging right over the lamphouse. When the arc is burning, the lamp almost goes out, but when the arc is off, the light burns up bright. It saves the trouble of turning the light on and off. Enclosed find drawing, exact size, of a three-wing shutter we have used on an Edison Exhibition Model. It is simply an Edison shutter, with a perforated wing taken off and two brass blades substituted. The solid blades are further apart than those of the ordinary interrupter. It works all right, but I cannot see any great difference in the light than with the regular shutter. The lamp wire sketch shows how machine projecting lamp is connected. We are troubled considerably with fuses, as follows: Current is 60 cycle, 110 volt. Main switch is fused up with 250 volt, 60 ampere fuses. Current passes from there through a Sterling Economizer, 100 to 120 volts, 60 amperes, which I keep closed as tight as possible. The fuses never blow out; that is to say, they do not snap out like a fire cracker. But they get hot and gradually burn the coating off the fuse and with the paper all burned and charred they sometimes hold for a couple of weeks. Then again they will get hot and burn out in one evening. I surely would appreciate it if you could locate the trouble. The electric company has given it up. The wire is No. 8 throughout. I have the old handbook and want the other as soon as it is out.



The way you have that lamp connected it would not burn at all when the arc is off, because the operating switch would be open. Possibly this is merely an error in your drawing. However, your operating switch is wrongly located. It should be ahead of the economizer where No. 1 now is, but anyhow I would like that arrangement for lighting an operating room. It is very frequently desirable to have good light in the operating room when the machine is running, though ordinarily I do not want any light at all. Still, if something goes wrong while the machine is running, plenty of light may be an absolute necessity. As to the shutter I do not publish the sketch because I would not consider that kind of a shutter as at all desirable. It would undoubtedly give excessive flicker; even more so than the ordinary two-wing shutter. As to the fuse matter, you can search me. I notice you say you keep your economizer closed as tightly as possible. Do not know what you mean by that. If those fuses act the way you say they do, then they must be made of an alloy that has altogether too high a melting temperature. If it is as you say it is, there certainly is something wrong with those fuses and I would advise you to get some of another make at once. Go to the light company and get some ordinary fuse-wire, put it in, and see what happens. Rip out that No. 8 wiring, particularly between the compensarc and the lamp, and put in No. 6 right away, is my advice to you. The sooner you do that the better. The handbook will certainly be ready for delivery by the time your order gets here. We have been held up and delayed most exasperatingly, but that is over with now. Books will be on their way to purchasers before this answer appears in print.

Handbook Brings the Money.

Mr. Al C. Stewart, formerly of Akron, Colo., has removed to Pendleton, Ore. He encloses $2.50 for the new book and says:

> I am always going to keep the old handbook as a souvenir. I am not trying to throw bouquets when I say the knowledge I acquired from that book has brought me in hundreds of dollars in box office receipts.

We are glad to know the old book proved of such value to you, Brother Stewart. We trust the new one will prove of far greater worth.

What is Wrong?

Moundsville, W. Va., is having trouble as follows:

> The backgrounds of my pictures are out of focus, while the scenery that is taken at close range stands out sharp and clear. Have carefully examined machines, and aperture plates, etc., are in perfect order; also have good tension. We have an aluminum screen. Do you think this could be the trouble? Picture is 12 feet; throw, 40 feet; 110-volt, 60-cycle current. Light is fine and steady. Machine is an Edison Exhibition Model, old enough to vote, but a crack-a-jack just the same. Also have a Motiograph 1912 Model, with a three-wing shutter, which flickers a little, but not much. Am using a 36-degree shutter. Would you recommend a 42-degree one for my throw, or a two-winger? I run on 12 to 15 minute time, though the manager wants it faster. Would you advise me to run faster than this? My pictures are almost rock-steady, except when I get an old film, which happens, however, very often. If Kansas City only cuts out nine patches he can consider himself lucky. I not only get bad patches, but other, and worse, faults in the film.

It occasionally happens, Moundsville, that the foreground of a picture will be sharp and the background somewhat blurred. However, as I understand it, this is the case with all your pictures. Inasmuch as the foreground is sharp, I see no reason why the background should not be sharp also, except that the fault lies in the film itself. Still, many exhibitors declare that aluminum screens make the backgrounds hazy. This occurs mostly on home-made screens which are roughly coated. If any of our readers can offer suggestions, will be glad to hear from them. I would not advise a two-wing shutter, unless you exceed 65 revolutions of the crank per minute. You most certainly do not mean to tell me you get more flicker with a Motiograph three-wing shutter than you would with the old style Edison Exhibition Model two-wing shutter. Scat! Get out! Nothing doing! As to the 36-degree and 42-degree shutter, I am not accustomed to figuring shutters that way. You want the wide blade just wide enough to cover the movement of the film, without travel ghost, and no more.

Wisconsin encloses money for handbook, and writes:

> I hope I will receive the book soon, as I find your work to be very interesting. I am starting a new moving picture show here and am a little puzzled as to what size picture to project. My room is 14 feet high and 26 feet wide. I figured about a 9 x 12 foot picture would be O. K. This would leave the bottom of the picture about five feet from the floor. Do you think it is large enough?

A 12-foot picture would be as large as you could project in that kind of a room without having the heads of the audience interfering in the light, particularly those near the front. It might better be a little smaller even than that, if anything; say 11 feet wide, locating your machine as high as you can. On the whole, I think 12 feet will prove quite satisfactory.

A Suggestion.

Pittsfield, Ill., writes:

> Enclosed find money order for $2.50 for the new Handbook. I would like to suggest that you use a cover of a different color on The Moving Picture World number containing the general index. It would make it much easier and quicker to find the stories and release dates. Did you ever try making the lower loop after the cam pin has left the star and is half way up? I believe it makes a more uniform loop. Why so many patches without scraping off the emulsion? Do you believe an operator would make them that way? The operator is the man who makes the audience laugh, cry or feel disgusted, and, rather than the latter, the manager should assist him as much as possible. I believe some managers get the idea that the operator asks for repairs not because he needs them, but because he wants to be important.

The cover of a magazine has a distinct value, Pittsfield, on news stands; therefore it would be highly inadvisable to adopt your suggestion, though from your point of view that scheme would be all right. You should have bound volumes, with index at the end. Better send your copies to the bookbinder. I never make a loop any other way than when the intermittent is locked. I certainly would not make it when the pin was in the star—hence the movement unlocked, for the intermittent sprocket would then move as you pulled up on the film to stretch it across the aperture. Patches made without scraping off the emulsion are probably samples of "Jimmy, the Usher's" work. Certainly a manager who is a manager will place no obstacles in the way of his operator doing the best possible work. He will also understand that no high speed machine will run forever without repairs, and he will know that it does not pay to use a part until there is nothing left of it. The competent, wise and up-to-date manager will not only supply plenty of repairs, but will insist on the projection machine being kept in the very best possible condition. He will not want to save a dollar in repairs, and in the operation lose ten in the box office receipts.

Good Guess.

Brooklyn, N. Y., contributes the following excellent guess in regard to my recent article dealing with projection in a house near the Atlantic Avenue "L" station in Brooklyn. When work is so raw and absolutely rotten that, out of half a dozen houses in that locality, a reader can instantly select the one I have reference to, the house ought, for the good of the business, to be named. Brooklyn writes.

> Read your article in December issue as regards raw work in a beautiful-front theater near Atlantic Avenue station. If I am not mistaken I believe the name of the theater is the "Oxford." Why, flicker is no name for it! If there is a worse case in Brooklyn I have been unable to find it. It seems the manager is unwilling to expend money for up-to-date equipment, and as to the operators going to sleep, I was talking to them, and they do not care as long as you can see a part of the picture. There are two men on the job, and both receive the enormous sum of $18 per week. This house is controlled by Mr. J. J. Maloney of the Keith circuit. Isn't it too bad that a man of Mr. Maloney's experience and knowledge is willing to stand for such work as this? Is it a matter of unwillingness to pay decent salaries and expend money in the operating room, or what is the cause of such miserable projection in this beautiful little theater?

You surely do not mean that the salary of both operators combined is only $18. A street sweeper gets a great deal more than that. I do not know what the cause of the utterly miserable projection in the Oxford may be, but this I do know: Either it ought, for the good of the business, to be improved, or the Oxford Theater ought to be put out of business entirely.

Yes.

Nebraska writes that he has just purchased a theater which is considered the best picture house in the state. He then continues:

> But still we have our troubles, even here. We are using 220 volts, d. c., through a rheostat. Not being posted on electricity, want to ask you what I am losing. Would a device for saving current be any material advantage, provided it was one of the real "honest-to-gosh" current savers? Enclosed herewith is a check for the new book.

Yes, neighbor, an "honest-to-gosh" current saver would be a decided advantage on 220-volt current. To figure your loss through a rheostat: First subtract 48 from 220, and then multiply that result by the number of amperes you are using; the product will be the number of watts of energy wasted in the rheostat.

Power's Five, Three-Wing Shutter.

Brother Dittman, of the Dittman Theater, Brownsville, Tex., sends in a circular of the Buckeye Machine Company, Zanesville, Ohio, which company has installed a satisfactory three-wing shutter on his Power's "Five" machine. It seems that the Buckeye Company makes a specialty of installing three-wing shutters on Power's "Five" and Edison Exhibition Model machines. Their charge, however, is $25, and they only pay the express one way. This seems to me to be a pretty stiff sum for the installation of a three-wing shutter on an old style machine, which would probably require other repairs and remodeling, bringing the total cost up to possibly half the price of a new, up-to-date mechanism. We are obliged to friend Dittman for contributing this information, in response to a query made recently through the department.

From Canada.

Banff, Canada, sends in the following:

> I noticed an invitation to Canadian operators and managers to contribute to the department. These few lines are to thank you for the help I get through the M. P. W., especially its Projection Department. I am working in that part of Canada which stands on end, and get my films from Winnipeg, 800 miles away. We change every day, and are trying our best to run a clean show. I can heartily sympathize with Bartlesville, Okla., with regard to condition of films; but "New Skin" is better than pins or shingle nails. I have several times come across film breaks "mended" with common pins. Have tried the glass port stunt and find it to be O. K. Was not so much stuck on the carbon soaking business, though perhaps it was my fault that I did not get better results. I have received so many useful hints from the Projection Department that I feel worried that I cannot repay you for them all. However, here is one thing I have found to be very useful: To make announcement slides, etc., in a hurry, use a negative pencil and write on a clean glass slide. Sign writers use these pencils. They are sometimes called soap pencils. They do not cost much, and the writing does not rub off easily. That story sent by Wichita, Kan., about the operator (?) and his fan is the best yet. Many thanks to Milwaukee for his threaded-in-frame hint. If you ever happen to be in the wonderland of Canada, look up the "Harmony" at Banff, Alberta, where you will receive a genuine highland welcome.

To the uninitiated brethren of the Eastern flatland let me say that "stands on end" means the side of a mountain. I had not heard that expression for many years, and it brought back old times, when I myself lived in the country where half "stands on end" and the other half is pretty steep. You need not feel worried about your inability to reciprocate, Banff. We are only too glad that you have received benefit. The greatest pleasure the editor has is to know that he is, through the medium of the Projection Department and his books, helping others, and not only improving projection in the thousands of theaters in this and other countries, but also making life a little easier and pleasanter for the boys who twist the cranks. I would be only too glad to enjoy the highland welcome, brother, but it is a long hike from New York to the Rocky Mountains of Canada.

From Alaska.

Haines, Alaska. encloses $3 for a year's subscription, and writes:

> Through the courtesy of the Seattle Stage & Lighting Company, I have just received the October 5th issue of The Moving Picture World, which I find to be a most interesting and instructive publication. Am only sorry I did not know of its existence before. I have much to learn about projection. I am at present operating my own light plant, consisting of a 4 h. p. gas engine, pulling a 3½ k. w., d. c. dynamo. When I am projecting I use the arc and two 16 c. p. lamps. Get a good light, but am bothered with a dark spot in the center of the picture. Use cored carbons top and bottom. Before striking the arc the line voltage is 110, but the arc pulls this down to 80 or 90 volts. My condensers are both 6½, and my objective is 2½-inch focus, with a 40-foot throw. Don't know what my arc amperage is, or how to regulate that part of it. I am installing a 7½ k. w., d. c. generator at another place, to be operated by an 8 h. p. gas engine. I want to install enough incandescent lamps to offset the load of the arc, so that when I start the gas engine and go to the operating room I can switch from the incandescents to the arc without changing the load on either dynamo or engine. By this arrangement I save a lot in the purchase price, as I will not need a governor on the engine, and can also dispense with a voltmeter and ammeter. Enclosed find postage for return of above information. Will I be able to carry the current from a 7½ k. w. dynamo located half a mile from the theater and have enough current?

Replies by mail are only sent where a minimum fee of $1 is enclosed; otherwise I would have from fifty to a hundred letters to answer every day. Presumably when you say "I use the arc and two 16 c. p. lamps" you mean you use the arc for projection and burn two 16 c. p. lamps somewhere in the auditorium or ticket office. Instead of two cored carbons you should use a five-eighth cored carbon above, and a half inch solid below, but the solid carbon should be a projection carbon, and not the kind the street lighting companies use, as that kind is too hard. The spot in your curtain may be due to: (a) Use of five-eighths carbon below; (b) Lamp not set at proper angle. (c) Condenser too close to aperture; move the lamphouse back. You should by all means have an ammeter, and I would advise you to purchase one. The lowering of the voltage when you strike the arc may be due to: (a) Engine in bad condition and not able to pull the load. This would be indicated by the engine slacking its speed when the load is thrown on. If this takes place I think you need look no further for that particular trouble. (b) Not enough resistance in series with the arc, thus running your generator above its capacity. (c) Wires too small. They should be No. 6, B. & S. The fact that the voltage drops that much indicates something radically wrong. You regulate the number of amperes at the arc by increasing or decreasing the resistance. For a more complete explanation of this I would refer you to pages 107 to 126, inclusive, of the new handbook, which I would by all means advise you to get immediately. A full explanation would be entirely too long to publish in the department. You are in error in supposing you can dispense with a voltmeter and ammeter and a governor on the engine by the plan you propose. You cannot do this, I think, and secure satisfactory results, one reason being that the resistance of a projection arc is a very, very variable quantity, and you cannot prevent its being so. You could, of course, dispense with the voltmeter and ammeter, but I would not advise you to do it. The plan of switching from the arc to incandescents consuming an equal amperage would be all right, provided the generator be located near the theater. It would not be a practical thing to do this and locate the generator a half mile away. You can locate your generator half a mile away by running two separate circuits—one for the arc and one for the incandescents. By this plan you would need no rheostat, since by using the right size copper wire the line resistance will be such as to equal the action of a rheostat, and your voltage will be at the right pressure (about 48) when it reaches the arc. The figuring is as follows: Amperes multiplied by number of feet of wire in both legs of the circuit, multiplied by the constant 10.8, and that result divided by the percentage of drop in voltage you want. In this case you will want about 48 volts at the arc, or let us say 50. This gives you a drop of 60 volts from the dynamo pressure of 110, which is 54 per cent of 110; therefore you want a 54 per cent. drop. Now, 54 per cent. of 110 is 59 (I am disregarding fractions). We therefore have the problem: $5.280 \times 35 \times 10.8 = 1{,}995{,}840 \div 59$, which gives us as a result 33,827, and this is the circular mills the wire must contain to have 5,280 feet of it cause a drop of practically 60 volts. Looking in the wire table, we find that a No. 5 wire has 33,100 circular mills, whereas a No. 4 has 41,740. We might, therefore, better install the No. 4 wire for the projection circuit, and add a little resistance; that is to say, a coil or two of resistance wire; though the No. 5 being in the open air with plenty of radiating surface, would doubtless do the work all right, except it might cause a little too much drop of voltage, thus reducing the amperage below 35. This takes care of the projection circuit, but the incandescent line is something else again. You have not said how many incandescent lamps you purpose to burn, but assuming the total incandescent consumption to be 10 amperes, I think you would find that 70 volt lamps would burn all right at the end of a circuit of No. 8 wire, one-half mile long; but in a proposition of this kind you would have to use all the lamps together, or else introduce resistance in the line sufficient to consume the energy of any lamps you might switch off; otherwise the voltage would instantly rise and burn the remaining lamps above candle power. Now, Alaska, I am not going to guarantee this incandescent information, but it is taken from the best authorities in such matters that I can find, and I think it will prove to be correct. However, you can have it verified by whomsoever you buy your electrical supplies from. You could, of course, burn the incandescents on the arc light circuit, when that was not in use, but you could not burn them on that line when it was in use handling the projection arc; therefore you would practically be compelled to run two separate circuits. Taking all this into consideration, I would not consider it at all advisable to locate your generator half a mile from the theater unless the reasons therefor are very strong indeed. If it is a matter of gas supply, you might better pipe the gas one-half mile.

Flicker.

Illinois writes:

> Have a Power's Six machine and a gold fibre screen. Current is d. c.; the throw about 55 feet. I suppose the voltage is about 50. Use ⅝ cored carbon above and ⅝ solid below. We have too much flicker. It shows more on some pictures than on others. I would like to know if there is something wrong with our equipment, or do cameras make a flicker in the taking?

Your knowledge, brother, is very weak indeed. You say you have the new handbook ordered, and I would advise you by all means to study it thoroughly. You should use half-inch solid carbons below, but they must be projection carbons; not the kind which are used by street-lighting companies. They are too hard. If your machine has a two-wing shutter, you should send to the Nicholas Power Co. and get a three-wing, which will eliminate your trouble. The flicker shows less on dark, dense pictures than on the lighter ones. If you have a three-wing shutter, then the flicker is because you are running your machine too slowly. With a metallic surface screen you should not bring the speed down much below 50 if you are using heavy amperage, and on the light films I would not reduce very much below 60, unless it is absolutely necessary to bring out the best action of the film. The question also arises as to whether what you have is flicker or not. Flicker is a flicker of the light on the screen. Travel ghost is flashes of light up or down from white objects in the picture, or from letters in the titles. Power's three-wing shutter gives practically no flicker at all when the machine is run at a normal speed of 60. Any machine, if run slow enough, will produce flicker. Flicker is caused by: (a) Interruptions of light being too far apart. (b) Interruptions of light being of unequal duration.

Large Claim.

From a certain city in New York state comes a letter claiming that an operator has been experimenting along certain lines which, if true, may prove to be a very, very big thing indeed. He claims to have discovered a very simple device, which doesn't absorb any of the light or affect the illumination in any way, but which is simple and costs very little, and which enables him to hold the full light from a 25-ampere arc on an ordinary inflammable film for several minutes without injuring it in the least. An English inventor is already accomplishing this by means of an air-blast blowing through the light ray. Possibly New York is working along the same lines. If so I fear he will be too late, as the Englishman has, I am told, already applied for U. S. patents.

Sand Papered Condensers.

Torrington, Conn., orders a Handbook and contributes the following:

> I get much good from the Department and will offer my remedy for condenser breakage, when using the round metal mounts. Before putting in a new lens take a sheet of either No. 0 or No. 1 sandpaper and sandpaper the edge of the lens all around, until there is quite a little play when it is placed in the mount. I am using 55 amperes a.c., and before doing this broke many lenses and this put a stop to the breakage. It will take from three-quarters to an hour to sandpaper a lens, but it is worth while.

Quite right, brother, but a coarse grind stone will do the job in a few minutes and do it just as well.

Lamphouse Ventilation.

Texarkana, Tex., writes:

> Enclosed find sketch of new device I have on my lamphouse. I find it improves the light a great deal. I have a Power's Six and a Standard No. 4, both of them equipped thus. By this plan, the fumes from the arc escape from the lamphouse, which doesn't get nearly so hot. In one of the theaters can switch from a.c. to d.c. through a Mercury Arc Rectifier, and in the other from a.c. to d.c. supplied by a Wagner generator, using double throw switches for this purpose. Mr. Rich, of the General Film Co., Dallas, Tex., paid us a visit recently and remarked that we were producing the best picture he had seen in quite a while.

The attachment consists in cutting a hole in the top of the lamphouse and inserting a short pipe 2½ inches in diameter. This scheme was described and recommended in the Department long ago. It was illustrated by a photograph at that time. The plan is excellent, but would not pass an inspector unless the pipe was carried to the open air, or up into a vent flue. The Brother has also added a very clever device, of his own invention, so that the top carbon arm may be tilted up or down by means of a wheel outside the lamphouse. His sketch shows his lamp setting vertically with both carbons angled outward—the old jack-knife set. I would advise him to discard this at once in favor of the regular d.c. set, which is best for both a.c. and d.c. He will find this subject treated exhaustively in the new Hand-book, pages 202 to 210, inclusive.

Correct.

Our friend W. S. Turnpaugh, Fort Worth, Tex., contributes the following:

> The old saying, "All things come to those who wait," came true when, in the November issue, a friend in Dallas asked about the action of intermittent movements and you replied. I have for two or three years past picked my machine with an eye always on the intermittent movement; first as to its construction for speed in the movement, and next for its mechanical strength and durability. I have had numerous bets with other operators, electricians, etc., each of whom had a machine to which he was partial, and each of them seemed either not to know or realize the importance of fast Geneva movements. All of them ignored the percentage of light lost with a slow movement, and all the talking and argument I could resort to was of little use. But when I saw your reply I was pleased to know that some of them would get bumped into a new line of thought. I have had arguments galore concerning the Motiograph machine, and now I want to ask a question. I have an > opinion of my own, which I am positive is correct. A Fort Worth operator, who said he worked in or about the Motiograph factory, claims that their conical shutter cuts off less light than any made. I tried to get him to explain matters, and found he had a fair idea of the vital points of the projector, but would not back his opinion with cash. I told him the percentage of light cut off by the shutter was controlled entirely by the relative speed of the Geneva in placing and replacing the picture to be shown, and that the shutter would have to be wide enough to cover all movement of the film, no matter whether it was a double conical shutter or not; this being modified by the fact that there would be less light cut off the picture by the use of a two-wing shutter than with a three-wing shutter, with any Geneva movement made, and that the form of the shutter—that is, whether double conical or not—was not at all vital. Am I or am I not correct? Now, I hope the Motiograph manufacturers will not feel offended when this is published, for I am anxious to have discussion through the department on this particular subject. I would like a description of the motor speed controller being marketed by the Nicholas Power Company, as I have more or less trouble with such apparatus myself. If you care to use my name in replying to my letters, do so, for I realize that if more operators would allow the use of their names it would be of mutual benefit both to them and the department.

I do not think the Motiograph people will be offended at what is here published. There is no reason why they should be. In the matter of the double conical shutter you are partly right and partly wrong. In the first place, the "conical" part of it has nothing whatever to do with the matter. That is merely a shape given the shutter to allow of its being placed inside the machine. The double shutter, which acts like a pair of scissors, does cut off less light than the single revolving shutter, simply because it closes the aperture both ways—hence closes it quicker. This gain theoretically amounts to the time it would take a revolving shutter to pass from one side of the aperture to the other, because the gain is both in opening and closing, but from this gain must be subtracted a slight lap that these blades must have; hence the total gain might possibly be figured at about three-eighths of an inch as against the ordinary revolving shutter. I have never figured this out accurately, but it reasons out that way. There is, however, another equation which enters, viz.: There is more lost motion in two shutters than there would be in one, and this would probably operate to still further reduce the gain to some extent. The necessary percentage of light cut is governed by two factors, viz.: The speed of intermittent movement and the elimination of flicker. In order to bring the flicker down to its minimum it has been thoroughly demonstrated that the interruptions of light must come at a certain minimum interval of time apart, and must be of approximately equal duration. The normal speed of a projection machine is 60 revolutions of the crank per minute. This means that the shutter will revolve 16 times each second, and that with a two-wing shutter the light will therefore be interrupted 32 times per second. This is not sufficient to eliminate all the flicker, particularly in these days of glass and metallic screens and high amperage. If a third wing be added to the shutter, then the interruptions of light when running at normal speed come at the rate of 48 per second, instead of 32, which goes a long way toward decreasing the objectionable flicker. And now comes the crucial point with a three-wing shutter. The more nearly the interruptions be made of equal duration, the less tendency there will be for the human eye to catch any breaking effect in the light. Now, with the slow intermittent movement the main wing of the shutter must be comparatively wide; therefore, using three wings, the blades and the openings cannot be of equal width. To get the best effect the speed of the intermittent movement must be increased up to the point where the three wings are of practically equal width, and each of practically the same width as the three light openings. You are perfectly right in saying that the operator should pay very close attention to the speed of his intermittent movement. It is a vital point in projection, and one which I believe has been given altogether too little attention in the past, both by most machine manufacturers and by exhibitors and operators.

Silent Players.

From Madison, N. Y., comes a letter from Brother J. R. Van. His letterhead reads, "John R. Van's Silent Players," and that name took hold upon me instantly. If I had a theater I would change its name right now to "Theater of the Silent Players." Good name that, let me tell you. "Van's Silent Players," "Keith's Silent Players," "Orpheum Silent Players Theater." Mighty expressive. Tells the whole story. Satisfies one's imagination and is, in my humble opinion, about 5,000 per cent. better than "Photoplay." Brother Van writes as follows:

> In December 7th issue quite a little is said about gas outfits. I am at present using a Togo gas outfit on the road, made by the Enterprise Company, and like it fully as well as any other. It is easy to handle and carry. Mr. Krass gave some very valuable pointers, but I think I have a few he left out. I project a 10-foot picture at 35 feet, and it is A. No. 1. Have a 12 x 14 curtain, and outline the 8 x 10 picture with a two-foot-wide border of black cloth, which I pin on. This puts the picture in a frame and, to my way of thinking, makes it one-third better. I always use 1¼-inch limes and a 1/30 bore jet. I take care of my outfit and use only the very best ether obtainable. I run six reels a night, and use nine cakes of oxzone, though I get off sometimes with eight. I am doing a fine business, especially in gas towns, making week stands. I am all alone and play most towns on percentage. As I run only one show a night I can either sell or take tickets until I get ready to begin. I carry a set of piano music for moving pictures, and have it marked for each of my reels. I never have any trouble in getting a pianist. My films are all in fine condition, and I do not have a break once a month. This letter may not be interesting enough to publish, but I wanted to show that an A No. 1 traveling show will do business, as I have played for over a year here in Central and Northern New York. If any traveling exhibitor in Pennsylvania can give me some good towns I will do the same for him here in New York state. Do you know of any reliable film renovating company in New York City? The Parisian Co., of Chicago, Ill., have been doing my work, but they are a good way off. "The Death of Michael Grady," Vitagraph; "Fall of Troy," Itala; "Deserter," 101-Bison, and the old Pathe "Dieppe Circuit Auto Race" are always run at least twice in each town by request.

Your scheme of outlining the picture with black cloth should be adopted by every gas man, since it serves to very materially improve the picture. As to film renovating, write the New York Film Company, 145 West Forty-fifth Street, New York. They used to do that work, and perhaps do it yet. Undoubtedly a rightly managed traveling show can make money, but I imagine it is pretty hard sledding at that, Brother Van. Glad to hear from you at any time the spirit moves. You spoke of some particular kind of piano music, but I could not decipher the name. For renovating films, write also to Hochstetter Utility Co., 46 E. 12th St., New York.

And There You Are!

Kansas emits the following wail:

> I wish you would advise me what to do. I am a member of the I. B. E. W., operator and wireman. The man I was working for sold out, went to a larger city and bought a show. He later wrote me that I could have a place with him, but there is an operators' union there affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E. Could I go there and work under my card at our scale, which is the same, or would I have to drop the operator card in the I. B. E. W. and take out one of theirs? I have been operating three and a half years and have a clean record.

Now, here is an unfortunate case. This operator is affiliated with the I. B. E. W., and has probably made the affiliation in good faith, but the operators generally, aside from some few isolated instances, are affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E. Between these two organizations there is no exchange of cards and, I am sorry to say, no overly surplus of brotherly feeling. There is only one thing you can do, Kansas, and that is to join the operators' union in the city to which you propose to go. In joining this union your I. B. E. W. card will be of no value whatever to you—that is to say, you will have to join just the same as though you did not now belong to any organization at all. Presumably you are a lineman. As such you are properly affiliated with the I. B. E. W. The whole trouble lies in the fact that both the I. A. T. S. E. and the I. B. E. W. are affiliated with the A. F. of L., which latter organization has given jurisdiction over the operators to the I. A. T. S. E., yet it allows the I. B. E. W. to issue operators' cards and to charter locals of moving picture operators, thus creating a situation which works injustice in many instances to individual operators who join the I. B. E. W. in good faith, not knowing that the great body of operators is affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E., and that their I. B. E. W. operator's card will not be recognized by that body.

Wichita Replies.

Mr. William Barrie, manager Marple Theater Company, Wichita, Kan., writes:

> In November 25th issue there appears an article headed, "A Devoted Admirer." In answer to same wish to state our side of this case. In the first place the writer is not a competent operator, but a "Mr. Fix It." That is to say, he spends about three hours a day trying to tear down a machine and put it back again. This same boy worked at the Novelty Theater in this city some time ago. Pursuing his usual custom, he proceeded to tear their Edison machine apart, presumably to see what was inside, the result being he never even said good-bye, but went and told another man to come and take the job. At another house, where they had two Power's "Six" machines, he started to dismember, with result that it cost over a hundred dollars to get parts to replace those he took off and "jimmied" so they would not fit. Then came the climax. He set a film on fire—he says from an incandescent light. Well, if that was the case, he must have left it there just on purpose, to see what would happen, for that is his way of doing things. As regards managers working the people overtime, I am sure the hours in this city are but about three-quarters as long as in any other city of this size. This man, however, did work for 15 hours a day, but most of the time was spent in trying to fix the machines, both of which were new last June.

Before publishing this letter I wrote to responsible parties in Wichita, and received the following reply:

> Replying to yours of the 3rd instant, in regard to an operator named ————, in this city, will say that the party is a young operator—only a boy, in fact. He thinks, however, he knows the whole business, but isn't able to hold a job more than three or four weeks at a time. He is not considered a competent operator.

I publish this in justice to the Marple Theater and to Wichita in general; also as a warning that this department cannot be used to vent personal spite. Usually I can spot the letter in which such a thing is attempted, but once in a great while one gets by me. I do not publish the name of the party because he is young—in fact, only a boy—and I have not any surplus of sympathy for managers who employ boys in their operating rooms. I am a firm believer in the employment not only of men of brains, but men of somewhat mature years in operating rooms. At least, they should not be those who can, by any stretch of the imagination, be classed as boys.

Optigraph Machine.

Portland, Ore., asks for information concerning the operation of the Optigraph. Sorry, Portland, but I cannot help you in this matter. I have not seen an Optigraph in years, and do not remember very much about it. It is out-of-date and, so far as I know, is no longer manufactured.

"AN OLD APPOINTMENT" (Edison), December 18.—The first two or three scenes of this picture are delightful in their showing of a few human types.. The millionaire in his office has received a torn postal card. This recalls to him that he and an old friend of his, had, thirty years ago, agreed to meet on their seventieth birthday. The later scenes were made merely to show some curious nooks and crannies of London; they're interesting; but the beginning of the picture made us expect something more substantial. Harry Furniss wrote it and Mark MacDermott with John La Fre play the two old men. The meeting of these two cronies is a fine illustration, but it is not a picture of action.

"SAMMY ORPHEUS" (Selig), December 19.—A picture likely to be popular because of its novelty, but as a story rather than as a comedy. The humor doesn't seem quite spontaneous. There is a mighty good idea in it. Sammy can play on the pipe like a very Orpheus; every one who hears must dance. That's the difficulty; no one can work while he's around and he is always in trouble. At length he lands on a South Sea island where they like his music too well, so he escapes to the jungle and finds a congenial spirit in an elephant, who carries him around and, in hours of relaxation, dances to his tunes. The subject was hardly one to be treated as a fantastic yarn such as a sailor would tell. It is at heart poetic and has an atmosphere inimical to such scenes as that in which the fat, darky chieftainess makes love to Sammy. It would have been better if all of it had been a little coarse or all had been poetical; with two aims, it doesn't hit anyone very hard. Thomas Santschi plays the lead. Bessy Eyton, appearing for a moment, does the best work in it. Besides these, there are in the cast, Eugenie Besserer, Lillian Hayward, George Hernandes (the cannibal queen), and Bunny Feeham. That restaurant scene is very well handled. Lanier Bartell wrote the scenario, which Colin Campbell produced.

"GLIMPSES OF MONTANA" (Pathe), December 19.—All of this series made by Pathe under the sub-caption, "Seeing America First," that we have noticed, have been really meritorious and the audiences seem to like them. Agriculture and mining are Montana's most interesting activities. Some fine glimpses of both are included in this picture. Grand natural scenery fills about a third of it. We should like to have seen something of the everyday life of the average Montanian, a farm house or two or perhaps a street in a small village.

"SIDI HADGI MOURSOUCK" (Pathe), December 19.—On the same reel is this acrobatic picture. Two men and a woman show strength and agility.

"THE MAYOR'S CRUSADE" (Kalem), December 18.—A picture that will be popular, chiefly because of the novelty in the mayor's getting a job in disguise at Dale's sweatshop in order to see for himself how the poor are being ground down. This kind of situation has been liked since the time of great Haroun al Raschid, who used to "gum-shoe" around Bagdad. Yet it would have been much more convincing in a story of modern life, if the powerful benefactor had been someone not in office. The heroine is always the leading character in such a story. Pretty Francelia Billington is very acceptable in the role. The mayor is pictured by William H. West, who knows how to act such a part well. Carlyle Blackwell is the hero, the mayor's son. Paul Hurst is Dale, a conventional miser character. Jane Wolfe has a minor part.

"THE SHERIFF'S LUCK" (Essanay), December 19.—Among other things, the camera man or the producer of these Western Essanays, has got the choosing of outdoor backgrounds down to the point of art. A bit of road with a curve so that one doesn't see too much of it, a picturesque slope behind, so that it's kept near us and in the foreground, a couple of trees with peculiar markings, so that our eyes, looking between them, are naturally focused to the point of greatest interest; this is truly a picture. It is presently filled with action by the posse galloping through and filled also with dust. The usual bad man hasn't very much to do with this story; the sheriff chases him out of it in the first act. On the way back from the state line the sheriff is able to help a widow whose horse has run away and wins a bride. Arthur and Julia Mackley play the leads and give us an amusing sweet scene for a final.

"WHO STOLE BUNNY'S UMBRELLA?" (Vitagraph), December 18.—We can't tell exactly, but it looks as though that umbrella cost Bunny about $10,000. He preferred to lose half that amount, so he told the cop, rather than the umbrella; but is was a mistake in judgment to accuse George Ober of taking it. This little error cost him two fines, a bunch of money that his detective bamboozled him of, as well as taxi fare, etc., and as a final, he is sued for false arrest. The author, J. Walsh, has furnished Bunny with a fine vehicle and, made under the direction of Frederick Thompson, it is an excellent offering.

"AT THE DOG SHOW" (Vitagraph), December 18.—On the same reel is a picture for all who like dogs, and this is nearly everyone. It was taken down at Mineola, L. I., N. Y., and is as clear as need be.

"THE LAST PERFORMANCE" (Pathe), December 20.—A very carefully prepared picture; it shows the skill of its producer in its cumulative interest, which reaches breathless suspense at the climax and also in the simplicity and naturalness of its scenes. Much of its charm comes from the personal grace and good acting of its leading lady equestrienne in a big circus. The story won't bear a too close inspection; but its shortcomings have been covered and it seems plausible. A count falls in love with the circus girl, his father won't consent to a marriage, so the young man joins the circus as a horseman. As such, he becomes the rival of the girl. She is jealous of his success and also of another girl and drugs his horse so that he is killed. We dare predict that it will be a big success everywhere; it was liked by the audience with which we saw it.

"THE DIVORCEE" (Biograph), December 19.—It is surely funny—almost as funny as "The Taming of the Shrew," which it resembles. The author, also the producer and the players deserve much credit.

"PAPERING THE DEN" (Biograph), December 19.—This isn't nearly so good as the first on the reel, but it is a very fair offering and the audience found it laughable. The idea is good, but not new, save in the way it is worked up—it is a better version than any other of it we have seen. If it had been acted with more of that indefinable sense of fun it would have been still better. In a farce, sincerity isn't desirable in the players, the thing that is wanted is more in the line of mock earnestness. There is some in this, but not enough.

"A WOODLAND CHRISTMAS IN CALIFORNIA" (Melies), December 19.—A pretty story, not real at all; but with something of holiday spirit that pleases. There are three children in it and their parents have a Delft stove. This is sold at Christmas time and the money comes in to make a more comfortable holiday; it also wins new friends for them and their parents.

"THE FIRST SETTLER'S STORY" (Edison), December 20.—The author of this story, Will Carlton, has just passed away and the picture as illustrating one of his well known poems is surely acceptable. The poem is not so good as his "Betsy and I are Out," which has also been illustrated in motion pictures; but it is very interesting and makes a fine offering. The Edison people have been fortunate; they had a real forest fire to play it against and have succeeded in making it convincing. James Gordon, as the white-haired settler, tells the story and he with Laura Sawyer, in the log cabin and in the burning woods around it, act the narrative as it is told to a few people on a piazza.

"PULQUE PETE AND THE OPERA TROUPE" (Kalem), December 20.—John E. Brennan and Ruth Roland, as cowboy and chorus girl, entertain us in a farce that doesn't limp. Pulque discovers the truth that a crown makes a head lie uneasy. If one is full of stage fright, if one is a cowboy and is wearing the crown in his home community, the head will more than probably be made uneasy. Pulque's pride goes before a fall of eggs and cabbages. If the picture's promise is better than the thing itself, as we see it, at least the thing itself is very laughable, and the offering is surely commendable.

"RUSH HOURS IN NEW YORK" (Kalem), December 20.—Some interesting glimpses of city crowds. Perhaps your picture is in it.

"WHEN JOEY WAS ON TIME", (Edison), December 18.—Arthur Housman makes Joey a very amusing office boy. There is little in it that isn't fresh, and, while he caricatures the part a bit, it is done with that indefinable sense of comedy that makes laugh after laugh, especially at the end when Joey has been rewarded for his heroism. William Betchel is Joey's employer; Edna May Weick the employer's daughter whom Joey saves from falling timbers. He comes back to the office looking as though he had got in a fight and is fired. Gertrude Clark plays Joey's mother and Elizabeth Miller the girl's mother. The author, Richard Ridgley, deserves credit for having given the leading player a good chance. It is a well conducted, well acted offering.

"THE RECEIVING TELLER" (Pathe), December 18.—Any story may have been used several times and still there will be many spectators who will see it freshly. It may be so with this picture, which tells the story of the bank clerk with a mortgage on his house, who is compelled to carry home a large amount of money and who plays burglar in his own home. He is, as always, shot by a wanderer of some sort who has been taken in by the charitable wife and thinks he is protecting a helpless woman. Octavia Handworth plays the wife with her usual skill and charming personality. Crane Wilbur plays the bank teller.

"PICTURESQUE DALMATIA" (Eclipse), December 18.—An eye-opener in some respects, for most people think of Dalmatia as a rather crude, out-of-the-way place. It seems to be a land of castles and of picturesque ruins from Roman days and, in the country, looks like pictures of Switzerland; a well photographed, good offering.

"THREE ROGUES OUTWITTED" (Eclipse), December 18.—On the same reel is this farce in which three men in dress suits chase three rogues who have just cleaned up the jewels in a house. A three seated bicycle is connected to an electric light wire and and the rogues try to get away on it. There is a mix-up, like others we have seen. It made the audience laugh.

"MADELEINE'S CHRISTMAS" (Lubin), December 17.—A story of sentiment in which a little girl's mother, who has run away to go on the stage and has had hard luck, comes back on Christmas Eve through the great white flakes of snow. Madeleine thinks that she is Santa Claus and lets her in. It is not what one could call a strong picture; it is indeed almost mawkish. Guy D'Ennery plays the child's father; Ormi Hawley, her mother, and the little girl is Henrietta Obeck. Mary Smith and James Humphries have lesser parts. The author is H. A. D'Arcy.

"BUCK'S ROMANCE" (Selig), December 17.—William Duncan, as author, leading man and producer of this picture has made a fresh laughable comedy. Buck's romance comes in a surprise package. He's a married man and doesn't know that part of the stake he is racing with an Indian for is a pretty squaw (Myrtle Stedman). He wins, and the squaw now considers herself his lawful wife. The fun comes from her determination to stay with her husband whether he wills or not. The boys on Buck's ranch thoroughly enjoy the situation as does the audience. Florence Dye plays Buck's wife; Nester Cunio, the squaw's father; Rex de Roselli, the ranch owner, Mrs. C. Sells, the rancher's wife. Buck rides his famous horse, "Kid."

"A CRY FOR HELP" (Biograph), December 23.—This picture has a dramatic climax that is fresh enough, but that reminds us of several other Biograph offerings; it is a picture with a struggle between an unarmed man, on one side of a door, and a madman with a pistol, on the other. Its freshness comes from the trouble a tramp, whom he had befriended, has in rescuing him. A policeman seeing this rough looking man climbing in a window, hinders him and lengthens out the suspense in a probable, convincing and semi-humorous way that is very entertaining. There are three chief characters and, for more than half the film, these kept appearing without any definite relationship. The situation might have been stated more quickly.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 52" (December 23).—No topical could be anything but noteworthy that contained pictures of the Balkan war. Those in this issue are good, though not quite so thrilling as the Lulie Burgos battle scenes in last week's issue. The other items are as usual and very interesting.

"HOME, SWEET HOME (Lubin), December 21.—A conventional picture with a story more like "Robinson Crusoe" than like the song from which it takes its title. The acting is very fair, but the photography is not so good as it might have been. We don't imply that one fails to see enough in the views, but there is little art or beauty in them. With few exceptions, the mechanical work in all the pictures seems to be falling down of late. The tale is of three men, a father and his two sons, who are cast away and remain on a desert island so long that the wife and mother thinks them dead and sells the home. They come back just in time to save it. An ordinary offering.

"A MARRIAGE OF CONVENIENCE" (Vitagraph) December 23.—The author of this narrative is not named. Seeing that there is one group of scenes and one character only in it that is strongly conceived, we read between the lines to this effect, that a scenario with a very trite situation was submitted, but that it gave a chance for the addition and was rewritten in the Vitagraph studio. We take pleasure in expressing our admiration for the artist who imagined the scenes that are good, so good that they raise the whole offering to a high plan of desirability.

Looked at roughly, the picture tells the old story of a girl who loves a worthy man; but who consents to wed the son of a creditor of her father. The character of this good-for-nothing youth gives tone and meaning to the whole situation, even lends an Ibsenesque touch to it. He is a morphine fiend, even his father doesn't know how badly off he is until immediately after the ceremony. There are in the opening a few trite scenes and then comes a scene in which we begin to suspect the reason why the youth's father wants him to get married to any girl who will be likely to make him brace up. He is playing a rather unpleasant game for the sake of his boy. Following this scene, comes the wedding ceremony at which the morphine fiend breaks down and hurriedly excuses himself. The two fathers, in a very fine scene, find him in the next room and discover the reason for the queer action. All this group of scenes is far above the average. It is followed by a tritely pleasant ending. Mr. James Young holds up the opium taker very well indeed. As finely played, by George Ober and Tefft Johnson, are the roles of the girl's father and the boy's father. Edith Story does excellent work as the girl; Rose Tapley as her mother, and James Morrison as her lover.

"WHILE SHE POWDERED HER NOSE" (Vitagraph), December 23.—The central idea behind this picture is fresh and sufficiently dramatic; but, as a whole, the offering seems to lack distinction, notwithstanding the fact that Florence Turner has the important role in it. Her part doesn't give her much chance; it consists chiefly in showing the effect on a sensitive mind of a piece of music, written by her father, now dead, and overheard unexpectedly. She carries it by a tour de force, but it could hardly be made concise or very definite. Lillian Walker plays the role of a selfish but pretty girl. She has, not very cordially, invited Florence, who needs her help in selling her father's music compositions, to call. Meanwhile, the rich man, Courtney Foote, whom she wants to marry, has sent up his card and, while she is prinking, he sits down at the piano. Florence comes, is given a seat in the next room and overhears. The quickness with which the two fall in love and get married is, though possible, not convincing. Tom Powers plays the girl's second fiddle. Marie T. Jacobs is the author and Larry Trimble produced the picture.

"THE CHRISTMAS MIRACLE" (C. G. P. C.), December 24.—Many stories such as this picture tells are designed to stir the sense of mystery that all normal people feel, even the sternest scientists, before that inscrutable sphinx, life. The means that it uses, a magic change in a mysterious stranger, a bundle of rags becoming a baby, poverty in the hut of a charitable woman becoming affluence, are not meant to be seen literally and to some must seem crude; yet there are very many who are deeply moved by them. As Chesterton has just remarked, credulity among the people is creative; the mind gropes back to reality even through such means as these. The picture's story is simply and naturally acted and makes a good offering.

"WHAT KATIE DID" (Edison), December 24.—Edna Hamel makes an effective appeal in this picture as a poor little girl, a mother's helper, whose natural kindliness is rewarded in the end. The story is carefully made and has a fair measure of dramatic suspense; there is only one place where, so it seems to us, it is weak. The treatment of the little girl in the shop of the milliner where she is working after school as a messenger seems conventional and more in the atmosphere of a select school than of a shop; the poor seldom treat each other so meanly. Fellow workers in the shop would probably have helped Edna, not wantonly caused her expense; they would have known how it feels themselves. The author, Charles M. Seay, deserves credit for a human story that makes good entertainment. Kathleen Coughlin has the rôle of a younger girl whom Edna finds lost and sees home. Bliss Milford plays Edna's mother; William Bechtel, the doctor, and Alice Washburn, the boss milliner.

'THE MOUNTEBANK'S DAUGHTER" (Lubin), December 23.—A picture not very different from "Polly of the Circus." The mountebank's daughter, played by Ormi Hawley, is made sick by her father's cruel treatment, and is found and taken home by the minister, Edwin August. In his home she is given a very pretty dress and made one of the family. She's a gypsy and the vestrymen make a fuss because of her. The chief weakness of the picture is that, on the showing, they had reason to think a remonstrance needed. When the minister tells them that the girl is to become his wife they intimate to him that he is not wanted in that church. Another pulpit is offered, and he takes his bride home to it. The offering is not especially noteworthy on any count. It has scenes in a gypsy camp and in the rectory.

"IDA'S CHRISTMAS" (Vitagraph), December 24.—Hazel Neason is the autthoress of this pretty Christmas picture with a child's part, very well filled by Dolores Costello, as its center of inerest. John Bunny appears as Santa Claus. Charles Edwards and Rose Tapley play Ida's parents, poor people with the father lame and out of work. Van Dyke Brooke and Julia S. Gordon play rich people with whom Ida's mother gets a job and who provide for the coming of Santa to the little girl and her parents. Van Dyke Brooke has produced the picture and made it an acceptable holiday offering that will be liked.

"IT ALL CAME OUT IN THE WASH" (Vitagraph), December 24.—Maurice Costello and Lillian Walker play the leads in this love story with George Ober as the owner of a laundry to which Maurice's diamond stud is carelessly sent. It is a lucky chance for him, for the stone is found and he there meets the daughter of the owner whom he had seen on the street and wanted to know in the worst way. The stone is reset and makes a fine solitaire engagement ring. The offering lacks distinction, hasn't much real love in it, but is interesting and will get by. Billy Cook wrote it and Maurice Costello produced it.

"A PROPOSAL UNDER DIFFICULTIES" (Edison), December 21.—The author of "The House Boat on the Styx," John Kendrick Bangs, gives us this original farce in which Alice Washburn, as a sentimental housemaid, carries well tne most important role. Richard Ridgeley, as chef in the kitchen wants to be hers, but he hasn't yet "popped" when Augustus Phillips, a bashful suitor for the hand of the daughter of the house, Edna Flugrath, makes his call. In the library, by way of a dress rehearsal, he puts tender emotion into his plea to a sofa cushion to be his wife. Alice overhears this and accepts. She is driven back to the kitchen by the coming of another of Edna's admirers, William Wadsworth, and tells the chef that he's too late. The farcical despair of this ardent cookie-maker which runs through the rest of the picture, has a pleasing foil in the comedy, being played in the parlor where the two lovers fence for the girl's attention. The knot is finally cut by the chef's butcher knife flashed at Augustus' throat, for this, when it is finally explained, shows Edna a picture of love in distress and she flies to his arms. It makes a delightful, light-hearted offering, just the thing for the holiday season.

"THE INDIAN UPRISING AT SANTA FE" (Kalem), December 21.—An historical picture, not a story or drama. It shows the incident as it was originally enacted by Spaniard and Indian in the years 1680 and 1692, and under the same skies and amid the same hills and mesquit bushes. It is very instructive, but not exciting and will appeal to historians. We give the cast of characters: Governor Don Antonio de Otermin is Col. C. Price; Capt. Gomez is Carlyle Blackwell; Padre Duran is Arthur Travers; Pope is Lorenzo, a San Juan Indian; Jaca is Knute Rahmn; Maria, his daughter, is Mona Knoll, and Juan is Mae Marsh. All these are players in the first episode. In the second we see Gov. Vargas played by Carlyle Blackwell, Padre Corvero by W. H. West, Capt. Roque by George Armigo, Maria by Mona Knoll, Juan by Mae Marsh and Domingo by Emilio, a San Juan Indian. A commendable offering.

"A FARM HOUSE ROMANCE" (C. G. P. C.), December 20.—An amusing Cinderella comedy in which a younger sister is made to dress as a hired house girl so that the older sister will have more chance to win Max Linder. A rainy day and a barnyard courtship make some very laughable scenes. It's a good offering.

"THE DIONNES ON THE HORIZONTAL BARS" (C. G. P. C.), December 20.—On the same reel is this interesting picture which doesn't need further comment.

"HOGAN VS. SCHMIDT" (Lubin), December 20.—A farce of but a few feet; but on the same reel there's a real farce.

"NORA, THE COOK" (Lubin), December 20.—Mae Hotely, as Nora, a cook with an independent opinion of her own, but who, after marriage, is a willing slave to her husband the iceman, makes many a good laugh in a farce almost a whole reel in length and with much that is fresh in it. The cast is a large one and we do not recognize them all; but see a good deal to commend in the acting throughout.

"GIUSEPPE'S GOOD FORTUNE" (Essanay), December 20.—A comedy of many amusing characters; but especially of Giuseppe, who finds a big roll of money in a suit that he had "chased" from Isaac's second-hand store. The narrative runs along rather blindly at first; it made us think that Agustus Carney was Giuseppe, but he merely was his friend. Giuseppe is played by E. H. Calvert. Nearly every one in the large cast plays his or her character well; but John Steppling, as Isaac, had the funniest part. The picture depends more on the wit of its action than on the humor of its characters and Isaac was hardly more commendable than many others. Eleanor Blanchard, Dolores Cassinelli, Ruth Stonehouse, Howard Missimer, Bryant Washburn and Mary Hight also have roles.

"AN EMERGENCY WAITER" (Great Northern), December 28.—A cobbler with a very red nose and quite drunk consents to act as supply waiter at a fashionable dinner. His performances will surely make laughter.

"THE BURNING BRAND" (Broncho), January 1.—A two-reel offering which will come near reopening the old question of marriage between a white girl and an Indian. Some will say the story is impossible and unnecessary, but however that may be, it is certainly strongly presented. From the time the young soldier learns that he cannot marry the white girl he loves, because his mother was an Indian, there is a great deal of exciting action. He tears off his uniform and goes out into the desert to die. The Indians find him and recognize him as the son of Winona, by the cross mark on his forehead. He drills the Indians and encourages them to make warfare on the whites. He demands the girl as a token of surrender, but her father says he will kill her rather than give her up. In the end the half-breed is killed. A production of the intense, gripping kind.

"THE NEW MAGDALEN" (Imp), December 26.—A two-reel offering, with Jane Fearnley, Vivian Prescott and Wm. E. Shay in the principal parts. The story is dramatic and interesting, and mainly concerns two girls whose identities have become exchanged on the field of battle. The scenes are very diverse in character, including views inside the little chapel where Mercy is converted, war scnes, hospital glimpses and later good home scenes. The acting is very capable throughout and altogether the production is a strong one.

"THE OLD FOLKS CHRISTMAS" (Imp), December 23.—A timely offering, full of Christmas spirit. Not a powerful tale, but a sweet and pretty one, showing the manner in which a childless old couple play Santa Claus to some poor children. The children have addressed a letter to the deity asking for Christmas presents, and when the tree and gifts arrive they mistake the old couple for "God and his wife."

"THE CHAPERONS" (Champion), December 23.—A young city man drops into a farm house to get a drink while his auto is being repaired. There is a pretty girl there and he induces her and her parents to visit Coney Island with him. The old couple go through some rollicking performances on the various resort attractions. A light, entertaining reel.

"POOR JONES' VACATION" (Nestor), December 23.—This short comedy shows young Jones having a good time with some pretty girls at a summer resort on a hundred dollar bill the boss gave him. The boss arrives on the scene unexpectedly and decides to have a little fun himself. He sends a wire calling the disconsolate Jones back to work. Clear cut pictures and nicely presented.

"VIEWS AT THE UNITED STATES CAPITOL, WASHINGTON, D. C." (Nestor), December 23.—On same reel with above. Pictures of the national capitol building, congressional library, the various fountains, etc.

"THE AMULET" (Gem), December 24.—A story with a mystical tilt to it, rather well presented. Two Indian braves struggle for the love of a certain Indian girl. One saves her from the other's evil intentions. They are given amulets which will protect them from harm and bring them together in a future life. Centuries later all are born again and appear in a New York Hotel. The fight is renewed, the villain vanquished and the young couple, still wearing the amulets, are happily united. While very imaginative, this is tensely acted and holds the interest.

"THE STORY OF A KISS" (Eclair), December 24.—A youthful comedy, in which an ardent lover strives to carry out the girl's injunction that he should strive to make her kiss him of her own free will. He kidnaps the real Romeo in an amateur performance, but the girl disguises her maid as Juliet and cleverly foils him. She fools him again under the mistletoe and at the charity bazaar, but of course, he wins in the end. Full of life and containing pleasing situations.

"THE HEROINE OF THE PLAINS" (Bison), December 24.—A strong two-reel offering, starting with a genuine prairie fire, in which the hero rescues an Indian girl. Scenes follow rapidly, depicting the frontier town, army post, Indian village, etc. The Indians steal a white girl and two children and rustle some steers out of a corral. Warfare ensues and the Indian girl befriends the white girl and children. A good presentation of gratitude and vengeance as practiced by the redskins. The pictures are clear cut and strongly presented.

"AN ILL WIND" (Rex), December 29.—This begins with a Hallowe'en celebration, in which the girl looks vainly in her mirror at midnight for the face of her future husband. Next day, through loss of a check in the office, the hero is arrested. He is sentenced to three years in prison, which he serves in full. The check is then found, clearing his name. He enters the girl's house on Hallowe'en night, and this time his face appears in the mirror at midnight. The heart interest in this picture makes a strong appeal.

"TRACKED TO THE SANDIA MOUNTAINS" (Frontier), December 25.—After disfiguring the hero for life, Weston goes west and joins the army. Later he deserts and is employed on a ranch. The daughter of the ranch owner falls in love with him. There are some striking western scenes, including a blue print view of the night herd. The hero and his wife arrive and exciting events follow, in which Weston is fatally shot, after somewhat redeeming his name by defending a girl from bandits. The film ranks very well as a western offering of the kind.

"THE BIG WHITE CHIEF" (Nestor), December 25.—The characters in this are somewhat jumbled at the beginning, but later the situation is made clear. It is a comedy offering, with a tribe of Indians taking an active part. The father of the girl disguises himself as an Indian to watch two young men who are making love to his daughter. He gets into some laughable difficulties, from which the hero saves him.

"A BUSINESS MAN'S WIFE" (Rex), December 26.—This is the old plot of the business man who neglects his wife until she falls in love with another man. It is interesting and pictured with considerable power. In the end all results happily, but not before there is a near-tragedy when the husband awakens to the true situation. The interior scenes are particularly good and the leading parts well handled.

"ZIGOTO DRIVES A LOCOMOTIVE" (Gaumont), December 29.—A novel eccentric offering, in which Zigoto runs his engine through houses, under scaffoldings, over dining tables, etc. One of the most joyfully destructive pictures yet shown.

"THE MAN WITH THE PULL" (Gaumont), December 19.—On same reel with above. More original absurdities, dealing with the adventures of Calino. He hides in a mattress and is carried out of prison. Then he feigns suicide and is doused with water. There is lots of good, clean nonsense of an amusing order in this reel.

"PAT AND THE MILLINER" (Lux), December 27.—A comedy offering in which Pat becomes enamored of a pretty milliner and follows her to her shop. He hires out as page boy and has some odd adventures of a fairly amusing character.

"A NEW USE FOR A BIKE" (Lux), December 27.—This, on the same reel with the above, is entertaining. Sporty, the champion bicycle rider, is pursued by a suffragette, who has fallen in love with him. His household goods are moved by bicycles, and she hides in the clock.

"JIM'S COLLEGE DAYS" (Majestic), December 31.—A first class college picture, with the so-called "college spirit" running completely through it. The fraternity dance and rivalry over a pretty girl are well shown. There are some views of Columbia University shown incidentally. The football game is interesting and Jim, of course, wins the game and the girl.

"THE GREAT SACRIFICE" (Kay-Bee), January 3.—In this two-reel picture the interest is divided between the capital war scenes and an exceedingly forceful plot. The atmosphere of this Kay-Bee film, like that of its popular predecessors, is good. There is the southern plantation Christmas, in which the love of the two brothers for the girl is brought out. A good representation of Lincoln and his cabinet is shown, and the signing of the war proclamation is pictured. New phases of warfare are vividly pictured, in the tenches and on the hills. Through it all the plot works smoothly and logically, and after Lee's surrender the final dramatic incidents are shown. A strong production.

"THE DUEL" (Keystone), December 30.—An amusing half-reel comedy, in which the Duke and the Count get into a bloodless French duel over a girl's dog. Fido is put out to sea on a raft and when his plight is discovered the Count and Duke bend their energies toward saving him. Mack Sennett and Mabel Normand are featured in this entertaining picture.

"MABEL'S STRATAGEM" (Keystone), December 30.—This picture, while well acted, is coarse in plot and will give offense to many observers.

"THE PROFESSOR'S DILEMMA" (Victor), December 27.—Good comedy, in which there are some hearty laughs. Owen Moore and Fritzi Brunette have the leads.

"AS THE DOCTOR ORDERED" (Imp), December 28.—A burlesque.

"A WIDOW'S WILES" (Imp), December 28.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this rather broad comedy in which Fred Mace has the lead.

"A DRY TOWN" (Eclair), December 26.—A comedy parodying the temperance town. The writer evidently had had experience in such places. It is funny.

"TOYS OF DESTINY" (Powers), December 27.—A two-reel drama. The scenes intended to point out that the husband was a drunkard were drawn out more than necessary to establish the fact. Also the release from prison on the word of the district attorney without other legal formality was hardly in conformity with customary procedure. There are some strong scenes, however.

"THE PADRE'S GIFT" (Nestor), December 27.—This story is enhanced by charming photography and beautiful settings. The picture is worth seeing.

"EL CAPITAN AND THE LAND GRABBERS" (Bison), December 28.—A fine melodrama in which Charles Inslee has the lead. There is a good story and it is competently put on. There are large numbers of people in the cast and advantage is taken of the beautiful California scenery.

"INSECT HUNTING" (Eclair), December 29.—An interesting scientific study.

"GONTRAN, A KIDNAPPER" (Eclair), December 20.—On the same reel as the foregoing is another of the comedies featuring this popular comedian.

"HER VISITOR" (Crystal), December 29.—Broad comedy. It is not just clear why "Gentleman George," when he found in the traveling bag of the man he had robbed an invitation to spend a week-end, should have assumed that he could successfully take the place of the man robbed—i. e., that the intended host did not personally know his guests. There are some amusing moments.

"THE ELOPEMENT" (Crystal), December 29.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this not particularly strong comedy.

"HER INSPIRATION" (Milano), December 28.—A story of a girl who pined for the love of a musician. She writes an opera which he produces. He not only conceals the identity of the composer, but gives his love to the woman who interprets the leading role. The story is not strong.

"PURSUED BY A LIONESS" (Lux), Jan. 3.—Following a duel with revolvers, in which one man is killed, the hero is given three days in which to visit his mother. A friend stands surety for him, and if the man fails to appear, the friend will be shot in his stead. The hero, on his return trip, is thrown from his horse in the jungle. He fights barehanded with a leopard and later is trailed by a lioness, which he handles in the same way. How does he do it? That is the question observers will ask, and this will go far to insure the success of the offering, which is quite remarkable in its way. We suspect that the animals have not been out of captivity long, but we would prefer to meet them through the medium of the screen. The release of the hero and his friend, after the former appears, is effective. Something new and attractive.

"GAUMONT WEEKLY, No. 42" (Gaumont), December 25.—A weekly of unusual interest, containing many novel and instructive features. Shows jackrabbits rounded up and killed by the hundred in Washington, the Lord Mayor's parade in London, stump pulling and ditch dredging, a Paris chrysanthemum show, first views of the now famous suffragette march to Albany, etc.

"THE WOMAN BEHIND THE MAN" (Solax), December 27.—Contrasting scenes from the lives of two married couples, Mr. and Mrs. Spendthrift and Mr. and Mrs. Frugal. The first wife brings her husband to failure by expensive traits, the second helps her husband to fortune. This is intensely interesting, not so much because of the strong moral it conveys, but because it is so true to life and so well acted by both couples. A first-class moving picture "morality play," with a helpful bearing on the problem of modern married life.

"THE FINGER PRINTS" (Solax), December 25.—This is a live, clean-cut detective story, without the usual sensational drawbacks. From the time the banker is found murdered in his chair and Detective Karr takes charge of the case, the interest is not allowed to wane. The chase across roof tops and the struggle on the fire-escape were well done. The detective's appearance in the guise of a Pike County farmer savors a little of a five cent novel methods, but the denouement is exciting and well worked out. A good offering.

Inquiries.

NOTE.—Replies cannot be sent by mail. State name of character. Do not ask for "leads" or "that man." Addresses cannot be given here, but a list of studio addresses will be sent for a stamped anr self-addressed envelope. Oily questions of general interest will be answered. Replies cannot be repeated.

H. M.—The law does not provide for the copyrighting of unproduced photoplays. Your recourse, if necessary, lies in common law.

W. A. C. L.—Sends in a piece of film showing Frank Lanning in a western Pathe release. Others have also advised that he is with the western company.

G. H.—The Universal does not now list its casts, and data is not now at hand.

ATLANTA—Note that the return of Miss Mabel Trunnelle and Mr. Prior to the Edison forces has already been announced. We do not get that Selig title. Are you sure that's it? Miss Ruth Roland, not Miss Joyce, had the part in Kalem's "The Mummy and the Cowpunchers."

F. L. W.—We have seen too many duplications to believe that a company steals your idea. If you are certain you have been made a victim, see an attorney, but first be certain. The royalty idea for payment is absurd under film conditions. It is clear that you do not know the business. Next time you send a letter of that length we are going to charge you five dollars just for reading it.

J. D. G.—Some of your questions are without answer, others cannot be answered here. For capitalizations see the Secretary of State, where the company is incorporated. Next time send your address.

A. R. M.—Few studios now read scripts that are not typed.

MILLINER—Miss Pickford is now playing in Philadelphia in "A Good Little Devil." Private advices state that she is doing splendidly. Other advices state that she is not yet through with photoplay, but expects to return some time soon.

M. P.—The studio list is revised whenever a sufficient number of changes of addresses render it necessary. There is no set period.

J. C.—Of the companies you mention, only Frontier is in the market for scripts and able to pay for them. Address them to the Los Angeles address of the Universal.

L. O.—We do not place the three players you mention. The first two are no longer with Lubin.

R. ROE—Walter C. Miller was the husband in "Brutality." Miss Anna Q. Nilsson was the judge's daughter in "The Toll Gate Raiders." Miss Fritzi Brunette is Owen Moore's leading lady now that Miss Lawrence has left Victor.

ORIENT—Charles Mailes was the father, and Lionel Barrymore the minister, in "The New York Hat." Buster Johnson was Dan in "Twixt Love and Ambition." You can obtain the copies desired by addressing the business office. The December issue carries a six months' index, the March a three months'.

CONN—Sign your name next time. Harry Benham was Mlle. Cleo in Thanhouser's "Dotty the Dancer."

R. C. M.—Thanhouser does not purchase scripts. Scripts that might fit the Rex should be sent the Universal and not direct to Rex. There is no limit to the number of scenes.

W. E. W.—There are not two "male leads" in the play you name. What are the characters you want? Tom and Owen Moore are brothers. Never heard of the film company you mention.

M. R. F.—C. G. P. C. (Compagnie Generale Cinematographiques et Phonographs), is the designation of the French pictures of the Pathe Freres. The company is licensed, but now and then you'll see one in the Independent theaters that has been purchased abroad, notably "The Courier of Lyons" and the "Grotto of Torture."

C. L. H.—Sorry, but it is not practicable to query Universals of late. It was not Mr. Garwood whom you saw.

J. H.—The Photoplay Magazine, Chicago, will reach the publication you seek. It is devoted to fiction stories of the Independent films.

AMATEUR—A plot is too weak when it does not contain the proper elements of strength. If your photoplays come back regularly and promptly, we think you are correct in suspecting that they lack strength. The paper you send does very well, the trouble is with the plot, not the paper. No story would be turned down because it was written on the wrong sort of paper.

ADMIRER—Read the paper more carefully. The return of the O'Kalems was announced in October, when they got back. See week before last for the new Gauntier Company.

E. B.—A licensed film is supposed to be retired from circulation after a decent interval of time. Independent film is not returned to the maker. Film too old to be shown is sold and the silver in the emulsion recovered by chemical processes. Old Independent reels passed up by the exchange may sometimes be purchased They bring from $10 upward per reel.

J. C. W.—The Broncho does not reveal the names of their players, but it has not yet become necessary to locate an identifier.

AZO—We do not give addresses and cannot name the cameramen.

E. F. M.—There is a Mutual Film Exchange in Boston. Ask them where Keystones may be seen.

MARBLEHEAD—The subscription is one dollar yearly. See advertising pages for addresses. The Pathe and Gaumont weeklies are films.

MRS. A. H.—Do not ask questions Tuesday and look for the answer on Saturday. Miss Selbie is the only woman player named by Essanay in the cast of "The Ranch Girl's Mistake."

X. Y. Z.—The sheriff in Kalem's "The Girl Bandit's Hoodoo," was Ed. Coxen. He is the only man named. The minister in Essanay's "Down Jayville Way," was Dwight Mead. The girls were the Misses Eleanor Blanchard, Mildred Weston and Lily Branscombe. We have not the Pathe cast on file. Miss Ruth Roland is with the Santa Barbara section of the Kalem Company. Mr. Blackwell is at Glendale. Arthur Johnson went to Lubin from Reliance.

PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT—The best guide is the screened production.

M. S. T.—Where one scene gradually replaces another it is a "dissolve." If part of the scene only is displaced, it is a "vision." If a scene fades, not to be replaced by another, it is a "fade." You seem to suggest a dissolve.

H. H.—Please ask for names, not "leads." The technical terms are often misused. The lead in "The Strange Story of Elsie Mason," was Miss Alice Joyce. The leading man was Tom Moore. Miss Enda Payne was the lead in both "The Silent Signal" and "The Water Rats." Miss Blanche Sweet was the older daughter in "The Painted Lady."

L. A. W.—The title role in "Bettina's Substitute" was played by Richard Rosson. We have no Broncho casts. No one ever will know who played in that Lubin. The studio went out of existence before the casts were learned. It was not a regular Lubin company, but was making stuff on speculation.

A. B.—The Answers Man was taking a belated vacation, which accounts, in part, for the delay in replying to your question, but at best the answers must wait their turn. The post office box is the correct address for mail, but please be a little more patient.

D. T.—Miss Blanche Sweet had the lead in "Blind Love."

W. D. McC.—Nestor made "Hearts and Skirts." We do not know the cast.

W. S. T.—It did not take four weeks to discover your script to be unavailable, but it may have been four weeks before your script was reached. Our opinion is that you should be glad to get the script back. We fail to see that you have any grounds for complaint.

DOROTHY R.—We have no cast for the first, but believe that it was Mrs. Mackley. Frederick Church was the revenue officer in "A Moonshiner's Heart." Please note that Biograph has no definite pairs of leads, but casts as circumstances direct. The triangle in the Selig of that name, were Tom Santschi, Herbert Rawlinson and Miss Bessie Eyton.

F. W.—The first cast is not available. The other question has been answered above.

J. A. C.—No Universal casts. Universal owns both brands named.

M. M.—The company will not state names.

J. S. V.—Having complied with the formalities, send your scripts elsewhere. The fact that your letter was returned does not alter the case. You have complied with the rule and your script is released.

M. V.—We cannot call you Flossie. The original Flossie is a friend of ours, and we shall uphold her trademark. The married couple in "Gold and Glitter" were Elmer Booth and Miss Grace Lewis. Miss Bernard is in a stock company. Miss Williams has not left Selig. Which "fellows" do you mean in "So Near and Yet so Far"? There were several.

L. D.—Earl Metcalf was Harry Tennant in "A Girl's Bravery." We do not sell photographs. We cannot understand why you should not see Miss Joyce in pictures. They are released regularly.

T. L. D.—In writing photoplay it is not necessary to write dialogue. Write the action and have that action tell the story clearly. This is very different from the fiction narrative. Better order a "Technique of the Photoplay" and read it.

J. N.—Perhaps some reader can tell you what magazine published the photograph and biography of Miss Pickford. We do not recall having seen it.

ORIENT—Miss Adele Lane was the moonshiner's sister in "The Detective's Conscience." Mr. Walthall was Miss Pickford's lover in "Friends." The minister is not cast as such in "The Struggle of Hearts."

T. H. S.—You'll have to do better than "the cute girl in the striped dress." In any event, we cannot buy a five-dollar book just to see if she looks like a picture.

CORRECTION—Several correspondents advise us that it was Earle Williams as the young doctor and Charles Eldridge as the old physician in "The Love Sick Maidens."

A. K.—We have to pass up that shorthand question. We do not think that there is much difference though each new system is supposed to be an improvement on the Pittman. A plain color thrown on the screen during the projection of a photoplay will fade the picture in proportion to the strength of the light. The angle of such a throw does not effect the result. Ask Mr. Richardson about the net. The use of a net to diffuse light appears to have originated with Richard Wagner in the Bayreuth Opera House. We think three columns is about all we can coax from the editor of the Photoplaywright Department. We refute, in indignation, the suggestion that we write with an acid pen. Its a typewriter, and we are the sunniest little Answers Man that ever was.

R. E. M.—Miss Neva Gerber is cast as Mabel in "The Water Right War." The baseball picture was released a few days after the championship series. Broncho Billy's Mexican wife is not named by the company.

MISS S.—We think that Miss Lawrence herself would appreciate some information as to her next engagement. She has made no arrangement yet.

W. R.—Robyn Adair was Bob and Romaine Fielding Roy in "The Family Next Door." We cannot identify the third character.

J. A. VAN E.—Walter C. Miller was Miss Pickford's lover in "So Near and Yet So Far." See reply to Milliner. She is playing in Philadelphia now.

R. L.—Send synopsis and plot of action. You would not try to sell an egg by showing the shell as sample, would you? A good synopsis might work into a poor play, and vice versa.

D. D.—You have Miss Greenwood correctly placed. Mr. Shaw has gone independent. John Halliday has been playing with Lubin to finish off some scenes that had to be taken over, but left when this was done to take part in "The Whip," now playing in New York.

J. H. T.—We do not know much about Crystal's purchases, but we would wait sixty days for any company. Edison seldom passes on a script under a month. If you are a newcomer, mark this down: Give the companies plenty of time (eight weeks), or you'll become known as a fusser, and all your scripts will be rushed back without reading.

C. D. M.—The general rule allows three or two feet of film for the lines as they appear on the film. Twenty to twenty-four letters would constitute such a line.

MRS. T.—Mr. Kerrigan was not killed by an automobile lately. If all the players reported killed really died there would not be a sufficient number of undertakers to bury them. The length of a reel depends upon the amount of action, not the number of scenes.

P. H.—Miss Phyllis Gordon was Helen in "The Vintage of Fate." We cannot name Universal players. Miss Myrtle Stedman was Dolly in "The Ranger and His Horse."

MARBLEHEAD—K-B casts are not to be had. We do not know why the same battle was made to do for two pictures. We could tell you the reply to the third question, but not here.

A LOS ANGELES BEAR STORY.

Director Richard Garrick, of the Western Universal forces, has worked a genuine sensation in his last picture, a tale of the Northwest. In it there is a fight between a bear and a man. It is most realistic. The bear was no small skinny animal, either. He stood seven feet high when standing, and weighed 1100 pounds. The audiences will see the man approach the bear with a knife and the huge animal awaiting him with his jaws wide open. They will see the actual fight and the man and bear fall, the man striking at the bear with his knife. They also see the bear slowly relax and let the man go, the man rise and stagger and then deliver a final fatal blow with his knife.

The Moving Picture Educator

BIBLICAL AND RELIGIOUS PICTURES.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

IT is exactly two years ago that under the above heading there appeared in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD an article advocating and explaining the proper and timely use of sacred pictures. There is no doubt the article in question was the means of inspiring special efforts along these lines. At that time there were probably less than a dozen genuine attempts to produce pictures along true and original lines, or under proper conditions, and with satisfactory surroundings. During these two years probably upwards of a hundred sacred pictures have come from the film manufacturers' studios; of these it is interesting to enquire how many fill the required conditions. It should be noted that these have been made in various parts of the world, giving every scope and opportunity for all sorts and classes of people to show their ability along these lines.

While it might reasonably be expected that those countries lying nearest to the times and scenes of the original sacred doings would produce the best results, they have not done so. It also seems only natural to expect the best results from those pictures the subjects of which prompted the idea that they should be taken within the area of that land which gave them birth; chiefly in the Holy Land and Egypt. It certainly is the height of folly to produce pictures of this class in local American studios and country scenes when so much is dependent upon those natural surroundings which are a part of the subject itself. This does not mean that none of these pictures can be produced in this country, but to this date there has been little discrimination between the pictures which may be made here and those which must be made abroad. The desire of the writer of this article is not to find fault with the merit or ability of those engaged in the work; the photography is always good, the acting is commendable, and the directors show a desire to meet conditions, but there is too often a strong evidence that two things are lacking:

First, the Bible itself teaches that its contents are written in such a way that "The letter killeth but the Spirit giveth life." The life of the spirit of the subject is almost entirely lacking in the majority of the pictures now before us. The result is that even when an attempt has been made to follow the letter of the story the proof that the "letter killeth" is found in a killed picture. Manufacturers must know that if they have not with them those well able to interpret the life-giving spirit of the subject, they cannot be surprised when the pictures are not accepted by the very class of people for whom they are prepared.

Second, the law of "the fitness of things" must be rigidly observed. It is not enough for anyone to suppose that the help received from the Tissot pictures is sufficient; they are splendid aids, but cannot be used as substitutes for original conditions and surroundings. Because of the great demand for sacred pictures, manufacturers have seemed to try to meet that demand with a rush, absolutely regardless of the two most essential conditions named above.

The terrible mistakes which occur so frequently in so many of the home-made pictures ought surely to arouse the makers to a realization of the fact that, without casting any reflection upon the splendid men in their employ, it is absolutely impossible to produce this class of picture without that help which can only be given by men whose lives have been trained in the work, and who know the "spirit" as well as the "letter." No minister could ever advise that a heavenly visitor, whether angel, or archangel, should come from the realms of peace, clad in a coat of armor; neither can the interpretation of that which occurs in the Old Testament, be always carried forward and made to interpret that which is found in the New Testament.

Another evident mistake is that a sort of studio license seems to be taken with the language of the Scriptures, as though, when in a tight place concerning the necessary interpretation of any language or subject, the original has been strained to fit in with studio conditions, instead of the contrary course; that, no matter what labor or cost is required, the original must be faithfully produced.

Lest it might be supposed that these suggestions are applied only to Biblical pictures, the writer wishes to consider a religious picture the original of which comes within more recent times. This picture, while of English origin, was produced by a foreign firm, with all the foreign settings, which entirely robbed the subject of its most valuable tone. This may be the better understood if we try to imagine what would be the results if a company of Germans, French or Italians, or even Japanese, endeavored to produce in their own studios a series of pictures depicting the American Indian in his native surroundings, or the famous Western cowboy.

We are certainly casting no reflections upon the ability of those who work in these foreign studios, when we say at the outset that we are confident that they would be a libel upon American types and customs, and we should look for mediocre if not comical results. From our standpoint we know perfectly well how they would be lacking in letter, spirit and conditions, and do not hesitate to claim for ourselves the ability to advise or criticise them. This rule must work both ways, and makers of sacred pictures must not feel aggrieved when those who know the requirements of such pictures venture to suggest to them when and where they fall short of a required standard.

The educational world is waiting for these pictures, and it is therefore a matter of necessity that they shall educate; to do so they must be true in thought, word and deed, and any advice or criticism which has that object in view should be sought for and welcomed by all those who have at heart the desire to produce these subjects which are to be masterpieces of cinematography.

ENLIGHTENED.

A leading New York daily has been very energetic in its war against the moving picture. Many people do not know that sensational news and truth are often strangers to each other. That spirit of wholesale denunciation which characterized this particular paper two years ago is still rampant. In a wild endeavor to appear as highly cultured moral censors they overlooked the fact that it is universally conceded that the evils of today lie more with the conditions under which the pictures are shown than with the pictures themselves. This yearning after notoriety leads to an unhealthy desire to pose as critics and reformers, so that when, through other causes, changes for the better have taken place, these sensation mongers lay claim to the credit, in a sort of "we brought it about" boast.

In the case of the paper above referred to, however, a number of people interested in the best side of moving picture work waited upon the editor, and pointed out to him the error of his ways. It is not surprising that, as an intelligent man, he was obliged to see the true situation and admit his paper was fighting a wrong battle. As a result of this interview this newspaper is now "enlightened," and beginning with its next issue there was a noticeable change in the tone of its moving picture talks. In the future there is little doubt but that the news and editorials of this now "enlightened" paper will be along lines consistent with the true needs of the situation.

In this instance the action of this self-appointed committee was most commendable, and in line with the advice so often given on these pages. This is not the first time such a course has been taken, and with similar satisfactory results. If at least another and more "yellow" New York paper can be brought under the enlightening influence of the true conditions there will be good reason to hope that the desire to eliminate anything and everything that hinders the moving picture from fulfilling its splendid mission to all classes, especially those in the less favorable conditions in life, will be accomplished.

THROUGH ALASKA AND SIBERIA.

The cause of educational cinematography has been enriched by this elaborate, thorough, and painstaking series of pictures by Beverly B. Dobbs. They form a valuable collection of travel, scenic, industrial, and knowledge imparting pictures. For institutional lectures they are a welcome and entertaining addition; while in schools and colleges they will prove invaluable as teachers. The first reel is of pictures taken on the ice, two miles from shore, in front of Cape Prince of Wales, the most westerly point of mainland in North America looking toward the Diomede Islands, twenty-four miles away. A field of ice sixty miles wide is moving at the rate of one mile an hour into the Arctic Ocean, the scene being described as one of surpassing beauty. In the trip "Through the Heart of Alaska" there are many interesting and entertaining features, such as gold mining and hunting. The various methods of mining and washing gold with all the necessary machinery, are illustrated and explained. One of the most thrilling incidents of the trip was a polar bear hunt. This is also a splendid piece of camera work; standing at the bow of the swiftly moving vessel, the fast swimming animal is soon within rifle range, the striking of the fatal shot is plainly visible, and the dead monster is soon hauled on board.

A patriotic scene is that of the celebration of the Fourth of July on the bank of the Snake River at Nome, Alaska. A boat race between the natives of Nome, East Cape, Kings Island and the Diomede Islanders is an exciting affair, and wonderfully descriptive of their aquatic habits and powers; the winning team is seen scrutinizing the forty silver dollars they have won.

The canoe-like boats of the natives are wonderfully well constructed; the dexterity with which the occupant can turn over in the water and as readily right the boat is most interesting.

A journey with the United States mail team is taken from Nome. These dog teams are in themselves worthy of considerable notice, a smaller and gentler team being used in the streets, while the larger and more vicious dogs are needed and used in the open. The sagacity of the loose "leader" dog which leads the way, sets the pace, and inspires the pack with courage is very marked. On one of these journeys the most unusual picture of an almost blinding blizzard is shown, giving an idea of an Arctic storm, as well as a courageous bit of photography.

A fur trading trip to Siberia gives opportunity for a new series with a look at another hitherto unexhibited land and people; we are introduced to the natives with their homes, and manner of living. The walrus hunt is perhaps the masterpiece of the series. Islands of floating ice with hundreds and often thousands of these sea monsters upon them pass in panorama before the eye; a hunt by the natives is followed with intense interest; going out in their boats of walrus-hide, they are soon within range of the herd. Killing by shooting is the method adopted and the return with seventeen huge animals marks a successful day.

Securing the hide and tusks is now the work of the natives; this done, the carcass is again consigned to the deep. From a practical standpoint the two hours spent in viewing these pictures is the equivalent of a year's travel with the attendant expense and difficulties incident to a trip through these Arctic regions. Mr. Beverly Dobbs is a benefactor to us all, not only in undertaking such, at least, an uncomfortable journey, but also in securing such excellent films. We were interested, enlightened, educated; wonderful as are the pictures, however, they would be of little value without the connecting lecture (another tribute to the value of the voice with the picture). Mr. Dobbs makes, with proper descriptions, his Northern trip one of the masterpieces of practical, interesting, and educational cinematography.

"THE VITAGRAPH GLOBE TROTTERS."

A tramp made application at a farmhouse for work. The farmer, after providing him with a generous meal, told him he could get busy on the wood-pile. The gentleman of leisure looked up at the calendar and said, "I am very sorry, boss, but I couldn't think of starting work on the 13th of the month. It is an unlucky day!"

"The Vitagraph Globe Trotters," who are now making a tour of the world, are not believers in signs. If they are, they certainly defy tradition and throw superstition to the winds. The Vitagraph Company has so often overthrown all precedence in its marvelous and marked success, no doubt "The Globe Trotters" will add to it in their twirl around the world. "The Vitagraph Globe Trotters" was conceived on Friday, June 13th. Some of the trotters left New York on Friday, the 6th, the balance on Saturday, the 7th, making a total of 13; leaving on the 2:13 train, and one of the company was assigned to Lower 13 in the Pullman. They left San Francisco for Hawaii, on Friday, December 13th. They had twenty-six pieces of baggage, which divided by two, makes 13.

They will take steamer from Nagasaki for Shanghai on Monday, January 13th, 1913. They will reach Rangoon on February 13th, 1913, and call at Aden on their way to Port Said on Wednesday, March 13th, 1913.

They are expected to turn homeward on Friday, June 13th, 1913, and will probably arrive in New York City on Saturday, September 13th, 1913.

With this record of thirteens, the "Vitagraph Globe Trotters" will all be eligible to the "Thirteen Club," and should occupy the seats of honor.

Those who are doing the Vitagraph globe trotting are Mr. William Ranous, director; Mr. William Smith, business manager; Mr. Maurice Costello, Mrs. Costello, Dolores and Helen Costello, Mr. James Young, Clara Kimball Young, Mr. Eugene F. Mullen, scenario editor and Mr. Harry L. Keepers, camera man.

Five of the trotters have thirteen letters in their names: William S. Smith, William Ranous, Eugene F. Mullen, Harry L. Keepers, and Helen Costello.

Count them! Just thirteen letters in "Globe Trotters."

There is always a fascination in doing the unusual and placing your fate in the hands of destiny, thirteen or no thirteen. Optimism is the incentive to success. He who does the right thing at the right time, regardless of dogma or adage, is the one who does the most good for others.

Our best wishes are with "The Vitagraph Globe Trotters." May the year 1913 add still greater accomplishments to the Vitagraph Company's great performances of all past years.

CAMERAMAN WITH TAFT PARTY.

L. J. Simons, the photographer of the Feature Film Mfg. Company, of Washington, D. C., accompanies President Taft as one of the immediate official party on his tour of inspection of the Panama Canal. Every event of the official inspection will be taken and in addition to this the recently completed mechanical features of the great ditch, such as the mammoth locks, artificially created Lake Gatun, the immense dam, etc. Many of these features of the canal are just completed and are photographed for the first time; so in addition to the great educational and historical value of these pictures, they will be the very latest and best pictures of the great canal, presenting 2,000 feet of original features. As the present demand is for educational and historical features there is no question that this will be one of the foremost popular favorites of the moving picture theatergoers and will prove a real money maker for the live wires who get it first. The tour occupies from December 19th to December 31st and the Feature Film Mfg. Company will place the films upon the market January 6th, but a few days after the completion of the tour, while the newspapers are still devoting columns of space to the trip, thus securing the most valuable advertising possible. Be the first in your territory to secure this money maker.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

ABOUT two months ago, the Independent Exchange Company, a corporation formed by fifteen Independent exchanges, which buy the Universal Company's product, was launched. I was fully informed at the time of the object and purpose of its organization; and as it was then deemed best not to exploit the news in an article, because of the wrong impression it might make on the minds of exhibitors using Universal programs, I refrained from giving the matter publicity. Now that a New York contemporary, which treats the moving picture business only as a side issue in its columns, has seized upon the item at this late day for sensational news purposes, I am at liberty to lay bare the facts surrounding the birth of the Independent Exchange Company.

The contemporary in question seems to imply, in its first reference to the existence of the Independent Exchange Company, that Mr. Blache of Gaumont, Mr. Gray of the Comet, and Mr. Froebel of the St. Louis Moving Picture Company, who chanced to be in Chicago on Dec. 3 and 4, had attended and participated in a meeting of the members of the Independent Exchange Company held in Chicago on the dates mentioned. Furthermore, the article in question seeks to make out that the exchanges represented in the Independent Exchange Company had decided to secede from the Universal.

Joseph Hopp, of the Standard Film Exchange (Chicago and Louisville), being interviewed on the subject, states that the charge of secession has no foundation whatever in fact, and that Messrs. Blache, Gray and Froebel had not been invited to attend, and were not present at the meeting on Dec. 3 and 4, during the business session of the members of the Independent Exchange Company. Being in Chicago at the time, as a matter of courtesy, Messrs. Blache, Gray and Froebel were invited to meet the members of the Independent Exchange Company after the business session was over.

"The exchanges interested in the Independent Exchange Company have no interest whatsoever in the manufacture of films," says Mr. Hopp. "Seing that the buying exchanges of the Film Supply Company are represented by the Mutual Film Corporation for the protection of their interests, and that the exchanges allied with manufacturers of the Universal Company are also represented and protected, the fifteen buying exchanges of the Universal product considered it only right and fair that they should organize for mutual protection. At no time has the Independent Exchange Company had in mind the antagonism either of the manufacturers of the Universal or of the exchanges owned by them. Its members, as good business men, should have provided against future contingencies, which might arise to injure their interests.

"The Independent Exchange Company is an incorporation, in which the members have agreed that each will pay into a common treasury a substantial amount weekly, as weekly dues. This fund has already reached a considerable sum and will continue to increase. As the sum paid by each member aggregates a certain amount, he is issued a certain number of shares of the company's stock. In case occasion should call for it, the members will thus be in a position to protect their interests.

"Such occasion can arise only when the manufacturers of the Universal are disposed to discriminate against the interests of the exchanges which comprise the Independent Exchange Company. We have never had any intention to create a cleavage in the ranks of the exchanges now using the Universal programs: the policy of the Independent Exchange Company is constructive and protective—not destructive

"It is our object, however, to be in a state of preparedness, in case our interests should be endangered by our being placed at a disadvantage.

"The members of the Independent Exchange Company have some minor grievances, which, it is hoped, will be redressed at a meeting, to be held in New York, Jan. 8th."

Following are the names of the ten directors of the Independent Exchange Company: President, William Oldknow, of the Consolidated Film & Supply Co., Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas and Memphis; Frank Drew, Detroit Universal Film Co. and Toledo Film Exchange; Frank Bailey, Pacific Film Exchange, Butte, Pacific Film Exchange, Seattle, and the Independent Western Film Exchange, Portland; J. M. Jackson, Cincinnati, Buckeye Film Exchange; E. V. Powell, United Motion Picture Co., Oklahoma; A. S. Davis, Independent Film Exchange, Pittsburgh; M. Markovitz, California Film Exchange of San Francisco and Los Angeles; C. R. Plough, Anti-Trust Film Co., Chicago; Joseph Hopp, Standard Film Exchange, Chicago and Louisville; and Earl Miles, of Miles Bros., San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Nine of the above directors have qualified and the tenth will qualify shortly.

The treasurer of the Company is under a heavy bond, furnished by the American Surety Company. Judge George A. Trude is counsel.

The New Grand Central Theater, St. Louis.

Wm. Sievers, secretary-treasurer of the Grand Central Amusement Co., St. Louis, writes that there have been several unavoidable delays in the opening of the New Grand Central Theater, which is being built by his company. This house, when finished, will have cost close to $140,000. The St. Louis Mirror has the following article in its holiday number, on the new house and its management:

"The New Grand Central Theater, now being erected at Grand and Lucas avenues, will, on completion, be one of the most handsome, sanitary and safe of its kind in the city. It will have a seating capacity of over two thousand, and will be furnished with the most elaborate and up-to-date ventilating system in St. Louis, the mere cost of its installation reaching close to the twenty thousand dollar mark. It will change the air in the house every three minutes, distributing it everywhere at an equal temperature, under and over every seat and in every nook and corner of the theater. In summer it will be cool and pleasant, in winter "comfy." Two immense exhaust fans, with a capacity of eighty thousand feet a minute, will carry out the impure air as fast as the fresh comes in, thus reaching the highest point of modern theater sanitation requirements. The upholstering will be both luxurious and comfortable throughout. The most careful precautions are being taken against fire, both in combustibility of stage materials and in abundance of exits, and it is safe to say that in sanitation, and in immunity from fire panic, the New Grand Central Theater will have no equal in St. Louis.

"The theater, when completed, will be under the same management as that of the Grand Central Theater located at Sixth and Market streets, and the intention of the management is to entertain the public in the new theater with exclusive picures de luxe, such as will scarcely be seen in any other house in St. Louis. They will be life portrayals taken from the best known writers in the world, and there will be the cream of the highest efforts in advanced cinematography.

"The Grand Central Theater at Sixth and Market streets has the reputation of being the best conducted moving picture theater in the city. However, Mr. Sievers, the manager, asserts that there is not a really up-to-date picture show in St. Louis, and it is his aim to feel that he can demand and deserve the patronage of St. Louis theater-goers by enabling them to enjoy, at the popular prices of ten and twenty cents, the masterpieces of up-to-date motion-photography. Special care will be taken in the censorship of all pictures, so that nothing will be shown that may hurt the sensibilities of any, and every effort will be made to make every patron feel safe in bringing his women folk and children with him without first inquiring as to the propriety of the pictures on the day's programme.

"A select and competent orchestra will render appropriate musical accompaniments to the pictures on the screen and, in addition, a large pipe organ, now being built by Kilgen and Sons, organ builders in this city, will, during the interludes, furnish the choicest musical gems from the masters of ancient and modern melody."

Fine M. P. Theater for Little Rock.

Plans are being formulated by Abe Stiewel of the Little Rock Trust Company for the erection in Little Rock of what he states will be the finest and largest moving picture theater south of St. Louis. The building, which will be located at Fifth and Spring streets, will cost, it is estimated, about $65,000, and will be erected upon a plot of ground 150 x 150 feet. A feature in connection with the erection of this new theater will be a park which will be laid out by landscape artists, and will occupy all that part of the theater grounds not used for the erection of the building.

The preliminary work is being pushed with all rapidity. The small buildings which at present occupy the space which will compose the site of the theater are being moved, and Mr. Stiewel states that he expects to let the contract for the erection of the building and the beautifying of the grounds by the first of January. Theo. Sanders is drawing the plans for the building.

The cost of the new theater, according to Mr. Stiewel, will not include the grounds, but the theater alone, which will be the last word in theatrical architecture. No expense will be spared in making the building modern in the smallest detail, he declares. This policy will also be followed in regard to the park which will surround the building. The park will be free to the public and will embody the latest ideas of the landscape artists.

The building will be occupied by the theater alone and will not, according to the promoters, be used for, or in connection with, anything other than moving pictures. No apartments or storerooms will be erected in connection with the building.

Fire from Picture Theater Sweeps Village.

The following despatch to the Chicago Examiner from Maysville, Mo., Dec. 21st, shows that the village has been almost wiped out by a fire which started in the Opera House, where moving pictures were being shown:

"Fire which started shortly after 9:30 o'clock tonight in a motion picture show in the opera house threatens to destroy this town. There is no water to fight the flames and in an hour after the fire started one side of the central square had been destroyed and the flames are spreading rapidly.

"An overheated film caught fire in the picture show. Earl Cundiff, manager of the show, was probably fatally burned in rescuing his mother from the theater. Several spectators received slight burns.

"On the south side of the square, which is entirely destroyed, were the opera house, Bank of Maysville, drug store, grocery and hardware store. The new four story hotel across the street is burning. Other buildings are catching fire and the entire business section of the town seems to be doomed. No estimates have been made of the loss at midnight. Maysville has a population of 1,000."

Chicago Film Brevities.

Theo. E. Clemmons, of the Imperial Theater, Beaumont, Texas, state organizer of the M. P. E. L. of America, for Texas, writes that he is working hard to secure 500 new members before Jan. 1. He has mailed a circular to every exhibitor in the state, and urges immediate membership in the League. The World hopes that Mr. Clemmons will not be disappointed in his expectations.

He reported good business for exhibitors, throughout the City of Indiana.

"LARRY" McGILL HOLDS A BARBECUE.

"Larry" McGill, representing the International Feature Film Company of New York, in making a picture in Tampa, Fla., gave a barbecue to several hundred persons, and says he has got really a "big scene." He was portraying a political gathering, which was enlivened by a debate by two political rivals. When Mr. McGill directed the gathering to smile there was enthusiastic response. When the director requested his guests to manifest anger they did so, but it was assumed. The picture ought to be worth seeing.

THE CLEVELAND FILM FIGHT.

Chaotic Conditions in the Forest City a Puzzle to Picture Men.

Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 23.—After two weeks of bitter warfare between Mayor Baker and the Cleveland police force on one side, and the film exchange men and exhibitors of this city, a truce has been declared which is much in favor of the latter side.

The war developed when Mayor Baker notified policemen to act as individual censors of moving picture shows, the result being that a score of arrests were made. The first person tried, Miss Jean Oster, was discharged by Judge Kramer on the ground that the affidavit filed against her was defective. Police Prosecutor McKay at once issued new warrants for all arrested, and their cases have been continued until the first one is tried. Louis H. Becht, Mall Theater owner, held for exhibiting the Liet. Petrosino pictures, which, the police charge, violates the Ohio statute prohibiting "pictures of crime or lust," demanded a jury trial and he will go before the jurors this week. Upon the outcome of this case depends the other cases.

The mayor and the film men held another conference Friday, when the latter asked that police censorship be discontinued and a board of censorship be appointed. Attorney Ernest Schwartz, for the exhibitors, cited the seizure the night before of the Solax film, "The High Cost of Living," and the subsequent arrest of the manager of the theater where it was seized.

"Well, that's a crime," remarked the mayor, smiling.

"We are fighting it," said Schwartz.

Baker said he had no power to name a censor board, and told the film men to do their own censoring. He said he would notify the police to stop interfering.

"I am very much pleased with the progress that has been made in eliminating the kind of films we objected to," he said. The facts are that none of the exchanges withdrew any of their reels, and the only ones suppressed were those seized by the police. The film services are much the same now, and were during the fight, as before, and the raising of such a hue and cry, while it will in the future no doubt have some effect toward eliminating some very objectionable films, has resulted in very little having already been done, as the quality of shows before the fight was first class and could stand little improvement, taking it as a whole.

The Humane Society's committee, which has been investigating film shows in a quiet way, suggested at the meeting with the mayor that the city establish a department of recreation, to include supervision of picture theaters.

The local exhibitors' league passed a resolution to abolish all posters, and this order goes into effect January 1st. It is understood among the members, however, that this is not to continue in force if it proves unsatisfactory after 30 days' trial.

Mr. A. Warner, of Warner's Features, returned to New York Sunday last, after a strenuous week in Cleveland. He reports matters in a very chaotic state, and that the exhibitors are entirely at the mercy of the police department, each member of which is authorized to act as a censor of films, using his own judgment in seizing pictures.

VERSATILITY OF DIRECTOR MACDONALD.

Director Joseph Farrell MacDonald, of the Powers company, one of the recent arrivals at Los Angeles, is making his headquarters at the Hollywood Studio. He has with him the following company: Edwin August, leads; Robert Ross, juvenile leads; character and heavy, Joseph Ray; Jeanie MacPherson, leads; character, Edith Bostwick. Mr. MacDonald has an interesting personality and a varied experience. He has been a civil engineer, a mining man, a cowpuncher and an actor. His first appearance was as a minstrel where his voice stood him in good stead. In fact so good was his voice that it was decided that he must study music and this he did at the London Guildhall School of Music. He developed a basso cantante voice which took him into comic and then grand opera. He was for years with Dolly Catte, and sang his melodious way through all the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. Then came a long period of drama with McKee Rankin, Robert Mantell and Nance Neill among others. He also took out his own company on tour with "The Man of Mystery."

Mr. MacDonald's experience in the motion picture world covers quite a period. He was first with Selig under Anderson, then with Imp, then followed a time with his own company, the Ajax, then Pathe, and finally the Universal.

A Dip Into Society

A Bright Comedy Release by the Crystal Company, With Miss Pearl White in Clever Character Comedy Role.

PEARL WHITE is the whole show in this picture. Her acting as a household drudge is something that those who know Miss White's style of work will hardly be prepared for. When pretty leading women forget about good looks and play character leads that call for ugly features, it may be taken for granted that they are beginning to take their art seriously. The amount of acting that one expects from the usual run of leading ladies is hardly more than may be expected from some kind of a trained animal, and, as a rule, so long as the woman is pretty the spectators are satisfied. But when it comes to sacrificing beauty to do some real acting there immediately comes a great divide—a division of leading ladies who can act from those who cannot.

Miss White belongs to the former class, and she demonstates it quite forcibly in this comedy. The facility with which she can tie knots in her face puts her in a class with that other versatile genius, Miss Florence Turner. Pearl's role in this comedy concoction is that of "Maggie," a slovenly kitchen maid. The character is distinctly unattractive, though funny. The story is all about a long-haired pianist, Mr. Bumski, who happens to be cutting more or less of a dash in more or less high society. Maggie's social aspirations, at the opening of the story, have never risen much above her own class. To be precise, she is at that very time smitten with the physical grace of the gentlemanly butler, apparently with indifferent success. Meanwhile the pianist, Bumski, is making great inroads upon the affections of the unmarried mistress of the house, much to the disgust of the brother of said mistress.

Scene from "A Dip Into Society" (Crystal).

The brother is a sort of man of the world—one who has little use for such a "sissified" specimen of masculinity as the long-haired Bumski. He concocts a plan to be rid of him, and enlists Maggie, the servant, as his principal weapon of attack. He procures for her an evening gown and bids her to be ready to enter high society when Bumski appears at the house that night. This scheme has the effect of arousing in Maggie the germ of social ambition which has lain dormant in her system throughout her life. Arrayed in her evening gown, she is wonderfully improved, but suffers an attack of near-sightedness and loss of memory to the extent that she can scarcely see the butler, or even remember him, much to the butler's great chagrin.

Bumski calls at evening, and Maggie is introduced to him by the brother while his sister stands by, ready to yank out Maggie's hair at the slightest provocation. This is all an insult to her, which she determines to avenge in the shortest possible time. As the evening goes on Maggie gets along beautifully with Bumski, because he is more in her class than any other. Maggie likes him all but his hair and mustache. Bumski leaves the house forthwith to sacrifice his lengthy locks for her sweet sake. Next day the sister has her revenge. Bumski calls on his new affinity, and the sister leads him to the kitchen, where Maggie is upon her knees massaging the floor with soap and water. When Bumski sees Maggie in her proper sphere he flees in holy horror, and sister's revenge is complete, as is also brother's, who has handed himself a big laugh in the bargain.

The remainder of the reel contains a shorter comedy, entitled "The Fake Gas Man," all of which will be released on January 19th.

"A TAMMANY BOARDER": A BURLESQUE (Eclair).

The Eclair studio has produced a single reel comedy which will make many laughs. The film is plainly entitled just what it is—a burlesque. A man who from all external evidences is a real bad one from the wildest and wooliest West, carrying, in fact, two guns, stops at a boarding house. His only baggage is concealed in an enormous basket. The boarder puts in one night at his new home. In the morning he informs his landlady that he is going down to the saloon, but that the baggage will serve as his sponsor. The landlady is from Missouri, and is naturally anxious to see what sort of contents there are in the mysterious receptacle. It does not take her long to ascertain when the lid is off. A good husky tiger bounds out into the room, and is in command of the house. He gets into the dining room and before he makes his exit he has upset the table and about everything else. The animal goes to the room of an English tourist (Alec Francis), and the gentleman with the elegant whiskers takes refuge in a folding-bed closet. This goes to the floor along with the rest of the movable articles. His Tammanyship visits two of the girls, and they are badly frightened before they get the door closed. In another room one of the girls crawls under the bedclothes. The animal bounds across the bed, making use of the huddled figure as a human springboard.

Scene from "A Tammany Boarder" (Eclair).

Later, when about everybody in the household is in a state of collapse it occurs to the tourist, who has in the meantime been rescued from the closet in a rather flattened condition, to repair to the saloon and obtain the assistance of the owner of the animal. The Tammany boarder is eventually safely secured in his basket.

"BETHLEHEM" WELCOMED IN CHICAGO.

Almost 100 exhibitors and churchmen were present in the projection room of the Majestic Film Service, 216 N. 5th Ave., Chicago, on Friday, Dec. 20, when an advance exhibition of Thanhouser's "Star of Bethlehem" was given by Manager R. C. Seery. The picture will be used in many Illinois churches after it has toured the theaters, according to Mr. Seery. He states that ministers of all denominations have expressed an interest in it. Rev. G. W. Hinkle, of Waterloo, Iowa, wired C. J. Hite of Thanhouser, as follows on Dec. 23:

> "Star of Bethlehem was given in Christ Episcopal Church. The impression made upon the great audience was a reverent appreciation. All felt that they were at a religious service. The value cannot be over-estimated."

Foreign Trade Notes

BRITISH NOTES.

By Our Own Correspondent.

The difficulty to produce in Britain films comparable to those from American or Continental studios is one of old standing and a continual sore spot to the home trade. The problem is neither financial nor experimental, but scientific. In brief, as soon as science makes the intensification of atmosphere possible, then can we hope to screen productions with the clarity and brilliance of those by foreign makers, but made in Britain. Personally, I have both seen and heard of many untiring and admirable attempts by indefatigable workers to establish successful studios in various parts of the island. To designate one and all indiscriminately as being unsuccessful in their results would not only be unfair but untrue. Yet, on the other hand, none can really claim success as it is imported from the U. S. A., despite the praiseworthy attempts. In the months of June and July, when the light here is most actinic, a few very fair subjects, humorous and dramatic, have been filmed on the south coast, where the light is strongest. The Hepworth, Clarendon, Barker, Cricks & Martin, Cosmopolitan, Empire and the British Kinemacolor patentees have been the principal producers during the past summer.

Until a few months ago a studio in the north of England was as rare as the dodo. Now, however, what I should state as the most pretentious move in the home production department has recently been made by the director of the New Century Picture Company, Mr. S. Carter. This gentleman, who has been associated with the industry since its infancy, some time ago decided to try his hand in the production of films comparable to those imported, and as he himself (or, rather, his company) is a large importer of foreign stock, it was realized from the first that the lighting would be the prime point. Accordingly a suitable site was selected high on the famous Yorkshire moors, literally sandwiched between heather and sky, and a studio theater on the American principle is, according to latest reports, being erected. Meanwhile a few experimental lengths have been released, and those I have seen have been more satisfactory from a technical standpoint than any other I have seen among British productions.

The Christmas rush here is, as everywhere, a fight for the field. "Cinderella" has been released by three different companies, and at one theater in a provincial town "Cinderella," "Babes in the Wood" and "Jack and the Beanstalk" are being shown as a special Christmas show. Is not this overdoing the pantomime idea a little?

An amazing—in some cases amusing—feature of the recent development of the picture show here has been the conversion of every conceivable form of building into the modern picture hall. Saloons (or, as they are better known here, pubs), clubrooms, and even chapels are every-day examples, and arouse no comment. A stable and a blacksmith shop are perhaps a little more out of the mediocre, but even not so startling as the announcement made yesterday by a suburban purveyor of fried fish and stewed eels that in future his business would assume the shape and form of an animated picture show. One of his showcards, "Fresh Supplies Daily," may now come into its truthful vocation.

Mr. Siegmund Lubin is at present enjoying a short tour around our metropolis, Paris and Berlin. It is rumored in the trade that the visit of the Western manufacturer foreshadows an important development of the European business of the firm.

Mr. E. H. Montagu, the very much alive agent for Selig's, is offering to pay the expenses to London of anyone who will substantiate an adverse criticism of two forthcoming Selig releases, "Monte Cristo" and "The Kings of the Forest."

NEW ZEALAND NOTES.

From Letter of Fred Foley.

The continuous picture house is making itself known quietly. I think the first to open in New Zealand was about eighteen months ago in Wellington, a city of approximately 80,000, including suburbs. Now there are four continuous houses and three permanent nightly houses. Prices charged by the continuous shows here are sixpence and threepence, equivalent to 12c and 6c. I think New Zealand boasts in all of about twelve continuous picture houses and some building.

At the permanent picture houses, six nights a week and one matinee, two and one-quarter hours nightly, prices are one shilling and sixpence, one shilling, and sixpence, or equivalent of 35c, 25c and 12c. At above class of houses programs are changed twice weekly. Previous to the permanent picture houses, about eight or ten years ago, the touring picture men charged three shillings, two shillings and one shilling, or 75c, 50c and 25c.

You ask if American films are popular. Well! you should just be in the audience when John Bunny makes his appearance. Helen Gardiner also has her admirers away out here in the antipodes and Miss Florence Turner too has a big following. Another popular picture actor with New Zealand audiences is Essanay's Anderson. New Zealand audiences are keen and critical and splendid showgoers.

There are perhaps half a dozen picture supply houses in New Zealand, the largest being Messrs. John Fuller & Sons. This firm controls fifteen or more permanent picture houses, with seating capacity of 800 to 2,000.

THE SCREEN CLUB WILL HOLD A BALL.

The Screen Club will hold a ball. The Board of Governors has so decided, and the arrangements have been accordingly put up to the Eentertainment Committee. At a meeting on Monday night of the latter committee it was decided to hold the affair in the week following Easter Sunday if a suitable hall could be procured, or the first available date thereafter. The price of the tickets has been set at two dollars for each couple, extra tickets for women to be one dollar each. There will be a stage entertainment for an hour and a half probably, in which the entire club will appear, probably through the medium of a minstrel show.

The members of the entertainment committee are Victor Smith, chairman; George Terwilliger, Harry R. Raver, Pierce Kingsley, J. H. Gerhardt, Darwin Karr, Maurice Costello, Calder Johnstone, C. Jay Williams, William "Bob" Daly, Arthur Johnson, George Blaisdell, Bert Adler, P. Thad Volkman, William Garwood, Charles Abrams, Alfred H. Saunders, C. A. ("Doc"). Willat, Hopp Hadley, William Quirk.

On sub-committees the following are chairmen; Hall, Victor Smith; program, Charles Abrams; publicity, Calder Johnstone; printing, Worthy Butts.

The stage entertainment will be under the direction of William "Bob" Daly; and there need be no fear that there will be a dull moment while "Bob" is in command of the ship. He already has framed up some stunts that will make an audience sit up and take notice.

A. I. C. P. DEFENDS FILM.

The New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor is now to be numbered among the innocent victims of the New York Evening World's moving picture crusade. Charging that manufacturers of films were issuing Holiday programs "mixing flashy with sacred subjects," the newspaper said:

> "Another company offers 'The Star of Bethlehem.' The week before it offered 'Brains vs. Brawn' and 'The Other Half'."

The "Brains vs Brawn" in mention was a simple comedy, in which a brainy man outpoints an athlete who aspires to the hand of a certain beauteous maiden. "The Other Half," was issued by Mr. Hite in special co-operation with the A. I. C. P. Officers of the latter have written to the crusading newspaper in defense of the film, which they say is a most clean depiction of the adventures of an East Side family and merely shows the advantages of systematized charity over indiscriminate almsgiving.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

ARRANGEMENTS FOR OHIO STATE CONVENTION.

The big annual state convention of Ohio is causing the exhibitors all over the state to get busy. Great enthusiasm is apparent everywhere in the state. The motion picture exhibitors of Ohio now realize that they have a chance to secure a square deal for the first time in the history of the organization. They propose to present such progressive bills to the legislature as will meet the approval of the people of Ohio as well as the motion picture exhibitors. It is confidently expected that there will be at least one thousand exhibitors in the city of Columbus on the 21st and 22nd of January, 1913. Letters are pouring into the state president's office stating that the writer will be at the convention. The only program that will be gotten out for the convention will be a very small one announcing the time and date of convention and the entertainment to be given. The program will be as follows:

January 21st, 1913, the convention will be called to order at 1.30 p. m. at Southern Hotel hall, to adjourn at 5 p. m. Will again meet at 7.30 p. m., where pictures, vaudeville and other entertainment will be given until 9 p. m., when all will go to the Colonial Theatre and enjoy a splendid entertainment arranged for them by the local committee.

At 10 o'clock Wednesday morning, January 22nd, the convention will meet in executive session, and will adjourn promptly at 11.30 a. m., and on the invitation of Gov. J. M. Cox will proceed to march in a body to the capitol, where Governor Cox and his staff will be in waiting to receive them. After paying their respects to the Governor they will with the Governor go in a body to the front of the state capitol, where a motion picture will be taken, then they will adjourn until 1.30 p. m., when another executive session will be held. At 7.30 p. m. the night of the 22nd a big banquet will be given in the large, beautifully decorated dining room of the Southern Hotel, where it is expected not less than five hundred will partake of the bountiful feast prepared by the Southern Hotel. Gov. J. M. Cox, Sen. J. B. Foraker, National Attorney; J. J. Lentz, Associate Attorney, and several other distinguished speakers will be present. Mr. M. A. Neff will act as toastmaster. During the banquet arrangements have been made to secure some of the most attractive and pleasing artists in the vaudeville world to assist in the entertainment. If there is no time left after the banquet is over, the National Vice-President's Committee will meet on the morning of the 23rd of January, and remain in session until the executive business is transacted. It will probably take more than one day to get through with the National Committee's business, as many things of great importance will come before the committee.

The first day meeting will be an open one. Everybody is invited. All of the manufacturers, film men and those who are not members of our League are invited. In fact, everybody that has an interest in the uplift of cinematography will be welcome.

The Committee on Local Arrangements appointed by the State President are as follows: Clem Kerr, Dayton, Ohio, Chairman; John Pekras, Dreamland Theater, Columbus, First Vice-Chairman; W. R. Wilson, Columbus, Ohio, Second Vice-Chairman; J. W. Swain, Pastime Theater, Secretary; Max Stearn, Exhibit Theater, Treasurer; J. H. Maddox, Colonial Theater, Chairman of Press Committee.

The convention will be held under one roof. There will be ample time given for all to see the exhibits, as every exhibit will be in the lobby of the hotel, or in the parlo., or on the second floor, where there is plenty of room for the exhibition of goods. A reasonable price will be charged, and as there will be no program advertising, all who wish space to exhibit their goods are requested to write to M. A. Neff, No. 1003 Mercantile Library Building, Cincinnati, Ohio, and diagrams and prices will be furnished. First come, first served. The Dayton Convention was a large one; the Columbus Convention will be second to none that has ever been held. There will be no delay or confusion and no room for complaint. A Bureau of Information will be established at the west end of the Union Depot, which will furnish all information to those attending the convention. A Reservation Committee will be in waiting, and a committee on securing new members and a committee to arrange for the comfort and convenience of the ladies attending. In fact there will be committees to look after the comfort and wishes of everybody attending the convention, and it is proposed to make this convention one of the grandest and most pleasant conventions possible.

A special invitation is given to all the newspapermen, and they will be given every assistance possible to secure all the news to keep the public advised on all that is being done.

MEETING OF NEW JERSEY LEAGUE.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New Jersey will hold its next state meeting on Monday, January 6th, at 10 a. m., at the Pabst Hotel, 12 Green Street, Newark, N. J. This will be an important meeting, and every member of the league should consider it his duty to be present. At this meeting definite plans will be adopted for the campaign for a legal Sunday opening in New Jersey. There will be outlined also a plan of procedure for the purpose of nullifying the 16-year children's admission law. Other matters of importance to state exhibitors will be taken up. The session will not be a long one, and business will be expedited. Following the session there will be a luncheon served at the hotel, and if a sufficient number of exhibitors are on hand there will be a beefsteak dinner instead of a luncheon. New Jersey exhibitors reading this article who did not read President Robinson's ideas in last week's issue are especially advised to do so.

FOLKS ORDINANCE BEFORE MAYOR GAYNOR.

Attitude of New York's Chief Executive Indicates That He May Veto Censorship Joker Attached to the Bill.

A HEARING on the Folks ordinance, was held in the presence of Hon. Wm. J. Gaynor, Mayor of New York, at the City Hall, Tuesday, Dec. 24. This bill was passed by the Board of Aldermen on Dec. 16. It contains a number of clauses dealing with structural improvements which, if the measure becomes a law, will benefit the exhibition business of the city immensely. It will be of particular benefit to the smaller exhibitors who are at present obliged to limit their seating capacity to 299, inasmuch as it will set the maximum seating capacity of exhibition halls, not classed as theaters, at 600. Another of the good features of the bill is that it automatically does away with cheap vaudeville. At the last moment a censorship clause was tacked on to the ordinance by Alderman Dowling; evidently with the intention of rendering the bill unconstitutional.

Those who spoke in favor of the censorship clause were Canon Chase, of Brooklyn; Wm. J. Morrison, president Brooklyn Teachers Assn. J. Lewis Hartsock, of the Methodist Ministers Assn.; George R. Brennan of the Brooklyn Young Republican Club; Mrs. Gilbert H. Montague, Women's Municipal League; Dr. Walter Laidlaw, Secretary of the Federation of Churches, and the Rev. Charles H. Gilbert of the Social Service Committee of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York. A letter from Cardinal Farley in favor of the clause was also read. Those speaking against the clause were Alderman Folks, who introduced the bill; Joseph M. Price of the Recreation Alliance and Michael J. Furst, member of the Mayor's Committee. It is probable, from the Mayor's remarks, that he will sign the structural parts of the ordinance and veto the censorship clause.

During the hearing the Mayor expressed opinions that are greatly to his credit. They show him to be a man of broad mind and human principles. He seems to be quite well aware that the general public wants the motion picture, and it is entirely believable that much of the censure that he has endured has come from agitators with axes to grind, and that they have reviled him because he has refused to turn the grindstone for them. There is wisdom in what he had to say, which follows in part:

"Our forefathers abolished the censorship and declared for freedom of speech and a free press. Now, apparently, you want all these things and yet you are arguing for a specific censorship. Have we the right and the power to censor pictures in this way? If we carried it (the censorship of pictures) out, wouldn't we have a right to say what pictures should appear in the press? The Constitution of the State says: 'No law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press.' I haven't any objection to this ordinance, but it's a new thing. An attempt to censor the press has never been made in this State. If this ordinance is legal here it may be equally applicable to the press if the Aldermen choose to pass it. For all I know this ordinance might deprive us of a personal liberty."

The Mayor, also indicated his disbelief in the theory that boys are driven to crime by the things they see in the shows. President William J. Morrison of the Brooklyn Teachers' Association, produced two revolvers, two knives and a pair of handcuffs taken from boys in his school who were addicted to the "movie" habit.

"One of these knives," he said, "was used to stab another boy; and this pistol was used by six boys who had just witnessed a holdup scene in moving pictures. One of them said: 'Let's grab bags.' The boys then went out, held up a little girl and seized her pocketbook. I think that is evidence enough as to the cause of crime in that case."

"Are you sure such things as that done by boys are caused by moving pictures?" asked Mr. Gaynor. "I am not at all sure of it. When I was a boy we used to do them too."

The censorship clause, introduced by Alderman Dowling provided that the Board of Education should be given the power to censor all motion pictures. Immediately the question of the legality of such a proceeding was raised on the introduction of the amendment by Alderman Marx. He pointed out definitely that the Board of Aldermen has no right, legally or otherwise, to prescribe new duties for the Board of Education. He is right on that point, and Alderman Folks did not oppose the amendment very strenuously, knowing that the Mayor has power, under Section 40 of the City Charter, to sign the original bill and veto the censorship clause. He is relying upon the good sense of the Mayor to see through this transparent effort to invalidate the ordinance and veto the joker while signing the measure as originally drafted. The Mayor's remarks signify quite clearly that he will do this, therefore the general run of New York exhibitors "should not worry," and to all appearances they are not.

A PROTEST THAT FAILED.

Chief of Customs Halstead Declines to Hold Up "The Miracle."

The attempt of Mr. A. H. Woods, the theatrical agent and producer, to stop the importation into this country of more copies of "The Miracle," the well-known mystery play in moving pictures, has failed signally according to dispatches from Washington. It appears that Mr. Woods claimed the sole and exclusive right to a moving picture representation of the famous old legend. On his protest three new prints of The Miracle consigned to Henry G. Schultz of the New York Film Company were held up by the custom house authorities and Mr. Schultz was invited to attend a hearing before the Chief of the Customs, Mr. Halstead. Mr. Schultz was heard at length. He conceded that Woods had in July of this year registered a dramatic production which he called "The Miracle." "It is entirely possible, though wholly bootless to register, say the story of Genesis as a dramatic production. That would not prevent any man from filming the story of Genesis. I have brought with me and now submit to you the Grimm edition of "The Glories of Mary," by St. Alphonsus de Liguori. By looking at page 197 of the first volume you will find the complete story of The Miracle. St. Alphonsus wrote it in 1750, and he drew his information from The Lives of the Saints by the Bollandists, who started their work in the early part of the seventeenth century and drew their information from numberless old legends antedating the invention of printing."

Chief of Customs Halstead decided to instruct the New York Custom House to release the protested films. The Miracle has been exhibited by a number of large theaters in all sections of the country. The attorney of Mr. Woods has made some threats, but no actual interference was attempted anywhere.

WARNING TO CHICAGO EXHIBITORS!

The Masko Film Company informs us that an unauthorized person, named Booth, has offered to book their four reel production of Blanche Walsh in "Resurrection" with exhibitors in Chicago and vicinity. As this picture is fully protected by United States copyright, exhibitors are liable to heavy damages under the law if the film be rented from an unauthorized person.

The exhibitor can be of great service to the manufacturer if he will compel the State right owner to exhibit his authority before booking a State right feature. All manufacturers give such written authority to their State right owners and the latter would only be too pleased to exhibit same. The authorized owners of Blanche Walsh in "Resurrection" in the City of Chicago are the M. & F. Feature Film Service.

NEW THEATER AT SOUTHINGTON, CONN.

Hallberg, a Power's 6-A with Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizer; a two-machine asbestos booth and a full line of supplies. Mr. Hallberg also shipped a Power's 6-A to B. E. Wilson, New Hartford, N. Y., and a Motiograph to H. Mulkey, Clarendon, Texas.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"OUTWITTING A RIVAL" (Great Northern).

The genuine humor incorporated in this comedy is calculated to make a strong appeal to lovers of this form of entertainment. The makers claim that it is one of the best they have produced, and the Great Northern Company has presented many of the sterling brand. During a visit to America, the family of Mr. Johnson, a wealthy German manufacturer, meet an American who is possessed of considerable money and whose name is Anderson. Alice is the only daughter of the Johnson household and is in love with Mark, who is a journalist and blessed with an abundance of good looks. Soon after the return of the Johnsons from their American tour, they receive a telegram from Anderson, the American, apprising them of the fact that he has just arrived from America and intends paying them a visit. Soon thereafter he sends a photograph of himself, so that Alice may more closely study the features of the man who is about to propose for her hand. Mrs. Johnson is delighted, but Alice and her father never have had any great regard for the American suitor. As may well be imagined, Mark, the journalist, is chagrined and disturbed in mind. While he is paying a visit to the Johnson home the father, mother and daughter excuse themselves and leave him alone while they go to the railway station to meet Anderson. Mark is struck with a happy idea. He sends a wire to Anderson in care of the station master in one of the towns the latter must pass through requesting him to alight at Junction station, some four or five miles away. Then he sends word to his friend Lund, an actor, to come to him in all haste. The conspiracy is soon hatched. Lund is shown the photograph of Anderson and proceeds to make up to resemble him. When he has finished, the likeness is remarkable.

Scene from "Outwitting a Rival" (Great Northern).

Anderson follows instructions and gets off at Junction station, but he finds no one to greet him. He waits for an hour or more and then resumes his journey to the city in which the Johnsons reside. In the meantime Johnson, his wife and daughter have grown tired of waiting for the American and return to their home. Shortly after their arrival Lund, the actor, appears and is greeted as Anderson. He has been in the house but a few minutes when he proceeds to drink all the liquor in sight, embrace Mrs. Johnson, overturn vases and otherwise make a spectacle of himself. After a time he is ejected and Mrs. Johnson is obliged to admit that her choice of a husband for her daughter has been a mistake. Then Anderson finds his way into the family home and the reception he receives is calculated to jar his sensibilities. He is ejected by Mark, the young journalist, and after mamma has given her consent, papa Johnson grants the customary paternal blessing to Mark and Alice, "Bless You, My Children." Anderson does not return.

"THE HEIRESS." (Essanay).

Of all the comedy films released for the last few months the "Heiress" is without a doubt one of the best. The situations are unique, the portrayal excellent and the plot exceedingly interesting.

Jimmy, the impecunious, arrives at the club, where his fellow members are engaged in a game of cards. He helps himself to a cigarette and borrows a five spot from one of the boys in the same breath. Paxter, a fellow club member, receives a message from the family doctor, stating that he had better return to his home immediately. Arriving at home he sends a message to the boys at the club, telling them that the heiress has arrived and, that some of the nice marriageable fellows had better come up and meet her. Enthused with the spirit of being "near uncles," they buy everything from a rattle to a rocking horse, and with the cargo under their arms, swarm in upon the new father. In their excitement, they leave the message on the table at the club. Jimmy picks it up and returning to his home, dresses for the unusual occasion of meeting an "heiress." Out of funds, he returns to the club, where he makes a small touch. Returning to his home again, Jimmy takes all of his earthly belongings and proceeds to a pawn shop with them. He then calls at Baxter's home and, mistaking the maid for the heiress, invites her out to dine. With his roll of hard earned money be buys the best of everything for her from soup to wine. Mason, one of the club members, sees Jimmy and the girl, and tells Baxter about it. They all go to the restaurant, where Jimmy introduces the girl to his friends as his fiancée. Baxter invites them all to his home. The second maid brings in the baby and, the proud father introduces the baby to Jimmy as the heiress, and explains that the young lady Jimmy has been dining with is his maid. Realizing his terrible mistake, Jimmy dashes madly from the house, leaving behind a heart-broken imaginary heiress, and a hilarious congregation of club colleagues.

Scene from "The Heiress" (Essanay).

John Steppling portrays the part of Jimmy in a most pleasing manner. E. H. Calvert as the proud father of the heiress, distinguishes himself admirably. The story is an absolute laugh of a thousand feet.

A Frontier Providence

By George Blaisdell.

IN this two-reel Bison subject Otis Turner has produced something that is as novel as it is thrilling in the way of Western melodrama. To be sure, a Bison director is in possession of a rare equipment for the doing of big things. There are good people to call out for the leads, there are cavalrymen, and there are Indians, red ones, grim, stolid; there are wonderful rolling grassy landscapes and wooded mountain sides every detail of which under the matchless California sun and in the crystal atmosphere is sharply defined.

"A Frontier Providence" has many strong situations. The strongest, of course, is where the two men, one of them disabled, and a woman take refuge in a cabin against the attacking Indians, who from a hill behind the house hurl down upon the roof great stones and burning brands. The red men are cautious of exposing themselves. If in the open, they are always running. They comport themselves as would men who have respect for ball cartridges as distinguished from the blank sort. There is real Indian atmosphere. The statement holds equally good of the situation outside of the hotel, where the settlers and the Indians are grouped about the quarreling ranch owner and the intoxicated Indian chief.

In the cast there is to be noted a circumstance that lends realism and interest—mother and daughter are portrayed by a mother and her daughter—Eugenia Forde and Victoria Forde. There will be those who, unaware of the actual relationship existing between these two fine actresses, will feel inclined to believe the woman portraying the mother too young for the part; which will go to prove that it is unsafe to be too set in our judgments. Charles Inslee well sustains the part of Bill French, the ranch owner who makes all the trouble. E. E. Thilbrook is a convincingly true-to-life ranch hand. Harry Tenbrook has the role of Young Bear.

Scene from "A Frontier Providence" (Bison).

Tom, a ranch hand, meets Edna Lee carrying a pail of water from the well. In a short dialogue we see that the two are in love. Tom rides away and Edna starts to the house. French appears and offers to carry the pail. The girl refuses to permit him. French attempts to embrace Edna. Tom, riding back, interferes and French is knocked down. The ranch owner in ugly mood goes to the village, enters the saloon, invites everybody in and gets into an argument with the chief, who has declared himself in on the invitation. The old Indian is thrown out. His son tries to pacify him, but fails. Later the quarrel is renewed and the chief is shot. Young Bear, now chief, calls his followers to war as soon as his father is buried according to the Indian custom.

Edna, with her father and mother, start for the town in the wagon. Tom, setting out to get stock, bids the three goodby. At the brow of a hill he sees the Indians coming and hurries back to warn the Lees. It does not take Tom long to reach them, as there has been a very lively runaway, the wagon has broken in two and the father sustained a broken leg. The injured man is helped to a cabin nearby. Edna takes Tom's horse and rides for help, her lover remaining with the father and mother. While the redmen are attacking the cabin from all sides, keeping a discreet distance, Edna rides until her horse, covered with foam, collapses. French comes upon her, but declines to give her his horse that she may continue her way to the fort. He will help her only if she will marry him first. In her terror she agrees and climbs to the back of French's horse. The two go to a justice of the peace and are married. Then the alarm is given and the troops set out.

Back at the cabin there are stirring scenes. Young Bear, impatient at the failure of his men to capture the three defenders of the cabin, gets to the roof and is tumbled into the cabin through a shot from Tom. The Indian is disarmed. When the troops approach the Indians retire. Young Bear remains unnoticed. With the troops are the two just married. Edna confesses to Tom what she has done. The Indian has been getting around behind French. He has picked up a knife. As the ranch owner turns he sees the Indian about to strike. His pistol is just too late. The two fall together.

The indications are that Tom will marry a widow if not a maid.

"THE MEXICAN SPY" (Lubin).

The Mexican Spy is a two-reel special to be released by the Lubin Company, January 17th. It is a dramatic story typical of the army life of Mexico and the United States. The scenes are laid on the border and constitute a powerful lesson against gambling, which is only too common among the officers. The picture is made with every attention to the local and military atmosphere of the two republics.

Mary Lee, the daughter of the paymaster, is in love with Colonel Loring's son, Tom, he is a reckless chap given to gambling and other bad habits. Mary endeavors to reform him, but unsuccessfully. At last Tom steals $5,000 from the paymaster's safe to pay a gambling debt to Senor Luis Rivera, who is a Mexican spy. Rivera offers to return the money if Tom will steal the plans of the fortifications from the office of the Colonel. The deal is made and Tom secures the plans. Mary discovers the treason and by pledging her jewels gives her lover the money, and forces him to return the papers. Tom later joins the army on the border and Mary receives an appointment as a Red Cross nurse. One day she is sent to a distant point and when the wagon pulls up for the trip she finds that Tom is the driver. The wagon is attacked by Mexicans with Rivera in command. A battle ensues in which Tom is badly wounded, but Mary nurses him back to life. For bravery he is made a lieutenant, and for love wins his old sweetheart.

Scene from "A Mexican Spy" (Lubin).

"LOVE UNCONQUERABLE" (C. G. P. C.).

In another sketch written by himself, Max Linder is with us again and sure to provide his many friends with an opportunity to enjoy twenty minutes of good, hearty laughter. The film, entitled "Love Unconquerable," is in a way a sequel to the very successful "Unskillful Skater," and like the latter is produced by C. G. P. C. It will be released January 7th.

Max, a struggling artist with a joyous disposition, wins the love of Aimee La Farge. However, he has yet to win the consent of Aimee's father, a retired banker, and this proves to be a difficult job. The old gentleman flatly refuses to consider Max's application for membership in his family and Max decides to win by persistency. Wherever Aimee and her father are, there also is Max much to La Farge's unconcealed annoyance. The old man has a bright idea to rid himself of Max. He hurriedly informs his daughter that they are to start immediately for the Alps. On the ice at the mountain resort La Farge is awkwardly skating with his daughter when he collides with—Max. Both men get to their feet and flounder around with their arms about each other. It is in this scene that Max shows the cleverness that has made him deservedly popular.

Scene from "Love Unconquerable" (C. S. P. C.).

The following morning, bright and early, the banker takes his daughter with him on a mountain climbing expedition. At a high point he slips and falls. Aimee screams for help and her call is answered by—Max. Max proves that he is a business man as well as a hero when he extracts the old man's promise to give his consent to the marriage in payment for his rescue.

Comedy is the life of any program and good comedy is rare, therefore you should book this film on January 7th.

EXCHANGE MEN ORGANIZE.

There have been several meetings held in Chicago by a number of exchange men, who have formed an organization to be known as the Independent Exchange Company. The purposes of the organization, as outlined by its president, William H. Oldknow, are solely of a protective nature. Nothing of a radical nature is intended.

"It is true that various exchange men from throughout the country have organized," said Mr. Oldknow, "but the statement that we anticipate withdrawing from the ranks of those buying from the Universal Film Company is absolutely without foundation and is unauthorized. Our organization is one which has been formed for the sole purpose of protection and for the general improvement of the exchange business and all concerned. There is absolutely no disaffection with the service we are now securing from the Universal Company, and, quite to the contrary, we are proud of the programme we are now privileged to offer."

Mr. Oldknow, Mr. Frank Bailey, of Butte, Mont., Mr. Bert Crumpacker, of Seattle, and Sol Lesser of San Francisco have been in New York for the past week looking over the situation.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE MAID" (Essanay).

Mr. G. M. Anderson in his world famous character creation of "Broncho Billy," distinguishes himself admirably in the story of "Broncho Billy and the Maid." Jim Clay, a rough Western ranchman, kisses his beautiful daughter goodbye, and departs for the town saloon. Entering, he sees four of his comrades finishing a game of cards. Broncho Billy, one of them, wins all the money. Clay exits and seats himself on a barrel in front of the place. Broncho, with his winnings, departs from the saloon, meets Clay and together they proceed to the ranchman's home. Broncho is introduced to Clay's daughter, who at the time of their arrival is preparing the noon day meal. The ranchman and Broncho engage in a game of cards. Broncho detects Davis taking some cards from his boot. A fight ensues in which the ranchman is shot in the head and Broncho in the leg. The daughter hearing the tumult, rushes into the room to aid her father. Broncho has escaped. Crawling on his hands and knees he finally reaches the stable where he manages to climb into an oat bin. The girl, thinking only of her wounded father, secures a revolver, and tracks Broncho by the drops of blood. Finding him in an exhausted condition, she drags him into a store-cellar and washes and bandages his wound. Later, when Broncho has almost recovered from his wound, she gives him a revolver and tells him to go. Clay swears vengeance. Seeing Broncho leave the cellar he rushes after him. His daughter, fearful of her father's safety, because of Broncho's quick draw, intervenes and prevents him from being shot. She then tells her father that she loves Broncho. Seeing that it would be madness to bear grievance against Broncho, Clay shakes hands with him and the feud is ended.

Scene from "Broncho Billy and the Maid" (Essanay).

Superlative features as the above are aristocratical in every detail. This production is booked for release Saturday, January 4th.

PALEY RELIEF FUND.

Repeated attention has been called by the Moving Picture World to the unfortunate condition of that famous veteran of the motion picture business Mr. William Paley, who is now crippled and destitute in Los Angeles, Cal., and dependent upon the favor of friends. As before told in the World Mr. Paley met with an accident while in the employ of the Nestor Company, the result of which has been weeks of suffering and the loss of a foot. In this crippled condition it is hardly possible that he will be able to continue in the harness. Mr. Paley is about 65 years old and has a wife of about the same age dependent upon him. It is an unfortunate condition but one that can be lightened by his friends. The Moving Picture World is pleased to say that some of these have already come to his assistance. ## "LIFE OF BUFFALO BILL" CLEANING UP.

According to reports received from the Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill Film Company, the "Life of Buffalo Bill" has re-awakened great interest in western productions of a historical nature. One of the state right buyers, Joseph Gondos, who has bought three states so far, writes that he is playing to record-breaking houses. The picture seems to appeal chiefly to school children. In several towns where Mr. Gondos has shown, the principals and teachers of the schools have arranged for the children to see the "Life of Buffalo Bill" after school hours. Mr. Gondos made a special arrangement with several lecturers of the different towns, and in that way introduced the life of the scout to the children. Reports from California and eastern territory seem to verify the statements of the popularity of the life of the scout. In the city of Boston the same tactics were pursued. School children were permitted to see the pictures and to hear a lecture on the life of Buffalo Bill, with the result that in the evening the theaters were jammed.

GATES—GENEZ.

Harvey Harris Gates, a critical writer on the Dramatic Mirror, was married on Saturday, December 21st, to Miss Lucy Genez of West Hoboken, N. J. The ceremony was held at the home of the bride's parents. In the evening there was a merry gathering at Mouquin's in celebration of the event. Mr. Gates, while young in years, is doing work that is receiving much favorable comment. He and his bride will have the best wishes of a host of friends in the moving picture industry. The match, which is said to be the culmination of a bit of romance, is a peculiarly happy one, as Mrs. Gates is not only an accomplished musician but has marked literary tastes.

VITAGRAPH NOTES.

The Vitagraph Company's staff of directors has been augmented by Robert North, who was employed as a stage director at the New Theater, New York City. He is a man with years of experience in matters theatrical, and his ability has already been displayed in the production of several of the recent Vitagraph portrayals.

Bert Angeles is another addition to the directorate of the Vitagraph. He has had exceedingly broad experience as director for Frohman, Belasco, Klaw & Erlanger and numerous other theatrical concerns. He is doing excellent work, displaying remarkable skill in the pictures he has completed.

Jean, the Vitagraph dog, is the proud mother of six puppies, two daughters and four sons. Mr. Trimble, the Vitagraph director and owner of Jean, is very much elated at this latest addition to the stock company.

Director Fred Thomson has the distinction of producing a picture possessing more variety in scenery than anything which has heretofore been produced. One of the scenes was taken of Tiffany's on Fifth avenue, another on Forty-second street and Broadway, and still another on Thirty-fourth street. The picture then turns attention to several of the West Side streets in the center of the red light district. The picture gives a very realistic portrayal of life on upper Broadway in the glare and glamour of the great white lights.

All the employees of the Vitagraph Company were made happy the day before Christmas by the presentation of a good-sized turkey and some other appropriate remembrance which tended very materially to making their Christmas a very merry one.

TWO MORE CONVERTS.

Everywhere public officials and educators are awakening to the possibilities of the moving pictures as a means of instructing large bodies of people. Two of the latest converts are Park Commissioner Stover of Manhattan and Richmond, and President Meeker of the Centenary Collegiate Institute, Hackettstown, N. J., both of whom have installed Edison Underwriters' Kinetoscopes.

The Park Commissioner has placed the machine in the Arsenal at Central Park, where it will be of inestimable value in helping the residents of the menagerie to pass the long winter evenings, and will serve many other useful purposes. The girls of the Centenary Institute are to receive part of their instruction via the picture screen, and there is no doubt that they will find the new method far more interesting than the old text-books. The Edison people are very much pleased over the choice of their machine in both cases.

FIVE LICENSED REELS MISSING.

Fifty dollars reward will be paid for the return to the Queens Theater, 993 Third Avenue, New York City, of the following reels, lost or stolen from the office of Arthur Brady on December 22nd: No. 11208, Edison's "Christmas Accident"; No. 11133, Biograph's "Brutality"; No. 11025, Vitagraph's "Billy's Pipe Dream"; No. 10402, Kalem's "The Family Tyrant"; No. 10342, Lubin's "The Senorita's Remorse."

LOUISVILLE.

THE strike of union musicians, believed to be of comparatively little importance, has assumed serious proportions through the sympathy of union operator, and exhibitors are now facing a strike of the latter. It is stated, however, that little inconvenience will be suffered by the exhibitors, as operators have been gathered from nearby cities and are now waiting to take the places of the men who walk out. The manner in which the Louisville Photoplay Association has acted as a unit in handling the proposition has been an example to organizations in other sections of the country, and friends of the exhibitors are proud of their businesslike handling of the situation. The operators' strike was directed at the Broadway Amusement Company, controlling the East Broadway, West Broadway and Ideal Theaters. Those houses recently installed automatic musical instruments, following the walkout of the union musicians. The operators announced that out of sympathy with the musicians the operators in the three moving picture houses would walk out on Saturday, December 14th. This ultimatum was submitted to the Louisville Photoplay Association, composed of owners of 18 theaters. The association replied that should the operators in the houses designated leave their work, the 15 employed by the other association members might also leave a week later. The operators at the three theaters obeyed the instructions of the Operators' Union and went out on the date above mentioned. Accordingly the association gave due and formal notice to the operators employed in the other houses controlled by the association that they could leave on a date later in December. Preparations have been completed with non-union operators in other cities, and no delay is expected should the operators leave. The men coming into Louisville will be paid the union scale of wages, while the head operators will be allowed expense accounts to cover living costs. It is believed that if the operators once leave, their services will never be required in Louisville motion picture theaters again. All of the theaters in Louisville, with four exceptions, are members of the Louisville Photoplay Association. Non-members are the Hopkins Theater, Norman Theater, Avenue and Palace. The operators' difficulty followed that of the musicians, which was caused over a disagreement in regard to the time clause in the contracts between exhibitors and musicians. The original trouble was one which might have been adjusted had the musicians kept their heads and refrained from dictation. Theaters which will be affected should the operators strike, which seems certain, are the following: East Broadway, West Broadway, Ideal, Majestic, Royal, Hippodrome, Olympic, Sun, Pastime, Novelty, Casino, Columbia, Crystal, Orpheum, Crown, Preston, Clifton and Empire. Non-union operators took the places of the regular men at the theaters deserted by the union employes, and those houses have been operated as in the past.

The annual meeting of the Louisville Photo-Play Association, held at the Novelty theater on December 5th, was marked by the election of the old officers and board of directors of the organization. Louis J. Dittmar will serve another year as president of the Photo-Play Association. Other officers are: Irvin C. Simon, vice-president; Max L. Simon, treasurer and Joseph Steurle, secretary. The Louisville organization, incidentally, has a rather peculiar method of election. It chooses a directorate, which in turn elects officers, a trouble-saving procedure, which makes the annual meetings short affairs. Besides re-electing the old corps, the members of the Association, individually and collectively endorsed the sale of Red Cross Christmas seals, now being staged by the Louisville Anti-Tuberculosis Association, and agreed to use advertising slides showing the latest in Christmas seals. The funds raised by the sale will assist the Anti-Tuberculosis Association in combating the great white plague during the coming year.

Moving pictures of the annual Thanksgiving football game in Louisville were recently shown at the Majestic theater. The Majestic is curtailing the number of daily performances slightly during the renovation of the lobby.

Charles Olson, of the Central Film Service Company, of Indianapolis, was a visitor in Louisville recently. Mr. Olson reported that Manager Shrader had returned from his honeymoon and was again supervising the affairs of the Central.

Some confusion has been caused in Louisville moving picture circles by the newspaper announcement that Hopkins theater will be opened by Col. A. C. Steuver, of St. Louis, with first run pictures. Edward W. Dustin is to be manager of the house. The opening date of the renovated house has been announced, and exhibitors are awaiting the first performance with much interest. Admission prices will be five and ten cents, the former applying to the gallery. Manager Dustin, who assumes his old role as head of Hopkins, will give explanatory talks with such films as require elucidation.

A moving picture show was a recent Saturday feature at the Indiana State Reformatory at Jeffersonville, Ind., directly across the Ohio river from Louisville. The performances will be made a weekly affair, as long as the inmates show proper appreciation. Baseball games kept the convicts interested on Sundays during the summer, and the officials have been puzzled since that time. They recently hit upon the idea of a moving picture show, and the first proved a huge success. Much care was exercised in the selection of films, which were secured from a Louisville agency, comics being mainly shown. The audience was one of the largest which ever witnessed a moving picture performance in Kentucky or Indiana, 1,200 "shut-ins" being given tickets for good behavior. Many of the inmates who had been incarcerated in the Reformatory for a number of years had never witnessed moving pictures, and the performance held them spell-bound. One reel of 1,000 feet was shown, and it is probable that the program will be enlarged, so great was the delight over the show.

The Princess Amusement Company, of Louisville, lost out in a suit in which it was the defendant, damages to the extent of $700 being awarded Sylvester T. Ritter, a professional singer. The Princess, headed by Irvin C. Simon, will take the case to a higher court. Ritter alleged that the amusement company had violated a verbal contract, and the singer asked damages of $2,340. The jury cut this to $700. Ritter alleges that President Simon agreed to pay him $40 a week for the first four weeks of the season beginning October, 1911, and $50 a week for the remaining 40 weeks of the season, ending August, 1912.

C. W. Freeman, an exhibitor of Livermore, Ky., closed his moving picture house during the week a neighborhood church conducted a revival meeting. Mr. Freedman's concession to the religious folk of his community has excited much comment among exhibitors and the public.

The B. S. Hahn Company, of Tyrone, Ky., has leased a new building in that town, and will shortly remove its moving picture apparatus to the new quarters. Alterations are to be made at once, and the new theater will be opened late in December.

Exhibitors of Corydon, Ky., got off lightly at a recent meeting of the city council of that place. The license on moving picture shows which charge

If you fill these requirements, then we have a treat in store for you when you inspect the Simplex

The Peer of Motion Picture Projection Machines

We would like it if every man who is going to buy a moving picture machine is expert in mechanical construction, so he could see, compare and judge for himself the relative merits of the machines now on the market.

Don't accept as final the word of the man who makes the machine. He is prejudiced. He has an axe to grind. Don't take our word for the supremacy of the Simplex projector.

Judge for yourself. If you haven't the special experience necessary, surely you are acquainted with someone who has that knowledge—who is an expert mechanic and unprejudiced. Ask him to go with you to look at different makes of machines. Pay him for his services, if necessary. It will be money well invested.

We are willing to submit the Simplex for inspection and test to any unprejudiced expert.

The Simplex projects absolutely flickerless, steady pictures. No eye-strain where the Simplex is used. Anyone but a blind man can see that, but the mechanism which projects the pictures—will it stand up? What is it going to cost for repairs? Is it easy to make adjustments and replace parts? Will it project as good a picture in six months or a year as it does when new?

These are the points to know, not guess at, when you spend your good money for a machine.

five cents admission, was placed at $1.00 a year, while those which charged ten cents must pay an anual fee of $10.00.

The Rex theater, Hopkinsville's new house, opened recently at that place. The new theater is one of the handsomest in Western Kentucky, having been erected especially for a moving picture theater. Souvenirs were presented to patrons who visited the place on opening day. Will Grau is manager of the theater. Both ticket-takers and ushers are uniformed, this feature being a pleasing one to the Hopkinsville public. Music is provided by a pianist and trap-drummer.

Manager Masters, who controls both the Elite and Columbia theaters, of Bowling Green, Ky., has put into commission the idea of publishing weekly programs for his two houses in the form of a booklet. The program, containing the titles and synopsis of the films to be shown during the week ahead, will be mailed to patrons of the houses in Bowling Green, while a mailing list of residents of the surrounding country also has been secured. The cover of the booklet, to be styled "The Weekly Doings" is printed in two colors. The program will contain sixteen pages.

L. H. Ramsey and other exhibitors of Lexington, Ky., have decided to give two reels of first run pictures, with a daily change, for five cents, at the same time eliminating vocalists. The majority of the theaters have hitherto been showing four or five reels, with singing, for that price, and have found that the expenses have been too heavy to justify a continuation of that policy. L. H. Ramsey, in a recent interview, asserted that the change was due as much to public sentiment as any other factor, however. Mr. Ramsey operates the Annex and Hippodrome theaters in Lexington. He announces that the admission price at the Hippodrome will be ten cents on Sundays only. Three reels, with singing act, will be presented on that day, while two reels of first run pictures will be shown on week days for five cents. Other theaters of Lexington will follow suit shortly, it is said.

The Consolidated Theaters Company has purchased the Airdrome theater, in Owensboro, Ky., and will begin the construction of a new motion picture house about the first of the year. The consideration involved in the recent deal was $15,000, while the same amount will be expended on the proposed theater. The property is located on Frederica street. The seating capacity of the new house, according to preliminary plans, will be 1,200.

The Louisville Photo-Play Association has vetoed the showing of pictures of the marriage of Jack Johnson to Lucille Cameron, and will ask President N. A. Neff, of the National organization, to request members of the league to follow the example of the Louisville Association.

Arthur V. Sheckler, hitherto Louisville representative of the Gomes Theatrical Exchange, of Cincinnati, has resigned that position. The booking of moving picture theaters with vaudeville will hereafter be done from Cincinnati, it is announced. The offices of Mr. Sheckler, in the Novelty theater building, have been leased by A. F. Mayer, Louisville manager of the Central Film Service Company, and Mr. Mayer will take possession the first of the new year or shortly after.

An electric piano has been installed in the lobby of the Crystal Theater, on Market Street, and is attracting attention from passersby.

Louisville exhibitors have received notification that R. A. Schnitzer, of Toledo, Ohio, has assumed the management of the Central Film Service Company, with headquarters in Indianapolis.

A ten-piece orchestra has been added to the attractions at the Orpheum Theater, conducted by the Princess Amusement Company. The Balalaika Orchestra, as it is styled, has made a pronounced hit with patrons of the Jefferson Street theater. Madam Tangeleskai is the soloist for the orchestra, which will remain at the Orpheum for an indefinite period.

"Dr. Gar-El-Hama," a Great Northern feature, attracted favorable attention when it made its first appearance at the Casino Theater recently.

Louis J. Dittmar, manager of Majestic Theater, has been elected to membership in the Rotary Club, of Louisville. The organization includes on its roster but one representative from each line of endeavor.

The Majestic Theater is featuring Kinemacolor pictures, which are proving a popular adjunct to the ordinary black-and-white presentations. The Kinemacolor films shown recently are clear as their kindred, and their presentation will probably be continued.

Hopkins Theater opened to the public on Sunday, December 15, to good crowds. A program of Mutual films was presented, with Natiello and his band also a feature. Harry A. Bilger, who managed Fontaine Ferry Park for Col. A. C. Steuvers, has supervision of Hopkins, while Edward W. Dustin will give explanatory talks. The house has been renovated, an attraction being the installation of a rest-room for feminine patrons. Admission prices are five and ten cents, the latter being for the first floor.

The Dixie Theater Company, of Nashville, Tenn., will shortly open a new motion picture house in Russellville, Ky., having leased the Auditorium in that place. A. Mitchell will manage the new theater, which will begin operations late in December.

Hurley Brothers, of Mt. Vernon, Ind., will shortly open a new moving picture theater in Providence, Ky. A store building has been leased and alterations will have been completed by the first of the year. Roy Hurley will manage the house.

The Manring Theater, Middlesboro, Ky., under the management of Brown & Son, has added vaudeville to its program. The management also is stimulating attendance by giving away a prize of five dollars in gold nightly.

Mary J. and Moses C. Service, who purchased the Colonial Theater, 948 Monmouth Street, Cincinnati, last July, from I. Frankel, have sued to have the sale set aside on the ground that Frankel misrepresented the business. The amount involved in the purchase of the Colonial was $9,000, $1,500 being cash and the remainder in a mortgage on property owned by Mrs. Service. The plaintiffs allege that Frankel set the earnings of the theater at from $100 to $125 weekly, net, and that he declared that a new theater which was being erected in the same block was not to be a moving picture house. Mr. and Mrs. Service ask to have the sale set aside, because they have lost money; also ask for $10,000 damages from Frankel, and that he be enjoined from foreclosing the notes he received for the theater.

PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA'S numerous motion picture exchanges are soon to be increased by one more. Arthur Rosenbach and Thomas Bible, who are already extensively interested with the picture business in this city, are going to open their new exchange on January 1st. The new establishment will be known as the "Pioneer Feature Film Company" and the main office will be at 1202 Race Street. Branch offices will soon be opened in several nearby cities, the first of which will be located at Baltimore, Md.

Reading's newest motion picture theater is being built at the corner of Church and Spring Streets. The building will occupy a plot of ground 40 feet by 100 feet and the contractor is Clement U. Gery, of 702 Franklin Street, Philadelphia. Calvin James Young is the architect. The main entrance will be at the intersection of Church and Spring Streets. The lobby will contain the manager's office and the ticket office, and will be embellished with handsome mosaic tiles. The screen will be 14 feet by 16 feet and a double booth will be installed for the machine. Four 4 by 6 grill ventilators will be placed in the ceiling to afford sufficient fresh air for the audience, and a steam heating plant in the basement will furnish the heat. The seating capacity will be 550, and there will be three four-foot aisles and four exits to provide for the safety of the patrons. The construction is of cement and the exterior finishings will all be in stucco. The roof is of slag. Gas and electricity will both be used, the electricity for general illumination and the gas for exit indicators and emergency purposes. The word "Subway," which is to be the name of the theater, will be emblazoned over the entrance and will be illuminated with electric lights.

Moving picture shows are fast becoming a menace to saloons is the cry of Philadelphia saloon keepers, who claim that a large portion of their trade is being drawn away from them. This is of much joy to moving picture managers who are inclined to be temperance in their views, and they trust that moving pictures will still aid in cutting down the profits of the saloon keeper.

West Philadelphia is to have another moving picture theater. This new place will be built at Woodland Avenue and Sixty-Fourth Street, and will measure 19 x 157 feet for the frontage of the structure and 48 x 85 feet in the back. The structure will be of the latest in design and will include everything to make it one of the most efficient places of its kind in the city. Bernard Shaw, the owner of the new theater, will spare no effort to make it an ideal place for the picture loving public.

The trade was pleased to have Messrs Schreck and McFadden, of Renova, Pa., call upon them during the past week. The two gentlemen were looking for new ideas in the picture line, and it is without a doubt that they returned to their own city with some very good thoughts for their own use.

Mr. Harry Davis, the leading picture man of Milton, Pa., and who owns the Bijou Dream, of that city, accompanied by his wife, made a short trip to Philadelphia to do their Christmas shopping. While here Mr. Davis made it a point to visit all the theaters possible, and he was well received by all the members of the art. Mr. Davis reports exceptionally good business in Milton, because of the fact that he advertises.

H. S. Ellis, formerly owner of the Colonial Theater, of Bristol, Pa., has taken over the Hippodrome Theater, of Camden, from C. G. Powell.

One of the most efficient men in his line, Mr. H. T. Herr, has been giving illustrated lectures in different cities on the recent advance of the "Steam Turbine Art," and he is meeting with much success before all of the leading Engineering Clubs of the East.

The Local Auxiliary, No. 37, I. A. T. S. E., has changed its place of abode from No. 33 North Ninth Street, where it maintained club rooms, to No. 232 North Ninth Street, in the building occupied by the United Trades Association Hall. H. D. Cherry is the business manager.

Machine operators of Camden, will hereafter have to have a license to operate. This act has just been handed down by the authorities of that city, and it has met the full approval of most of the exhibitors.

C. H. CONGDON.

PITTSBURGH.

CONSIDERABLE agitation has been aroused among the exhibitors in this city by a proposed amusement-license ordinance. The proposed act provides for a new system of taxation on all moving picture shows and amusement theaters, and if made a law, will possibly raise the usual license fee of some picture houses to higher figures. At the present time all the moving picture theaters pay the same license fee, $20 a month. The new ordinance provides a graded system according to the seating capacity. All shows with a seating capacity of 200 or less are to be taxed $10 a month, those up to 300 capacity are to pay $15, and those seating more than 300 are to pay a license fee of $20. The exhibitors are protesting, not upon the new system which in a great many cases will reduce the present, but are making a strenuous kick upon being taxed at all. A hearing was held recently by the councilmanic committee upon the proposed ordinance and representatives of moving picture men were present to argue against the bill. Attorney William J. Brennen, representing several proprietors of photoplay houses, based his opposition to the ordinance on the principle that it is not just to single out certain business enterprises for taxation. The proposed license fee, he said, is illegal and not justified, for it is not based upon land or income but entirely upon the number of seats the moving picture theater might have. Three owners of picture shows, among them H. W. Poke, former councilman, who have theaters in the residential sections of the city, said that their places were open only three hours at night and that it was hard enough to make both ends meet without having to pay additional fees. Attorney S. S. Robertson, who represented the Grand and the Alvin Theaters said that all license fees were supposed to be based upon some service rendered by the municipality and he wanted to know what service more than it is now giving the city expected to supply next year when the new licenses are to become effective. There is no more reason why a moving picture theater should be taxed than any merchant, and no merchant in Pittsburgh is paying the city a tax for the purpose of doing business. He said the theaters pay a tax for their property and that they should not be expected to pay a license just for being in existence. The committee announced that there would be some changes made to the proposed ordinance and that additional hearings would be held.

The Pittsburgh Photoplay Company, of No. 412 Ferry Street, is compiling a "Current Events" film of interesting and important occurrences in and around Pittsburgh. The idea of making a film that will have a special appeal because of its locality would seem to be a good one. The "Current Events" film will be issued once a month.

The Feature Film and Calcium Light Company has as a special feature for Christmas week, "The Star of Bethlehem," manufactured by the Thanhouser Company. The Feature Film Company states that "Custer's Last Fight," is being received with more enthusiasm at the present time than when it first came out. Many of the state theaters made a special exhibit of the picture and not a few of them charged 25 cents admission for it alone.

Moving pictures are going to play a large part in the school extension work program of the Board of Public Education if the plans now being formulated by Superintendent of Schools S. L. Heeter, are taken up. The idea at present is to equip each school with a moving picture machine and give entertainments by means of instructive and travelogue films. The board is planning a regular series of entertainments, the purpose of which is to bring fathers and mothers of the various school districts into closer touch with their children's work and to serve as an additional means of education.

The Feature Film Company, of New York, has established an office and show room under the management of Mr. S. Barkey, in this city. The office is at No. 127 Fourth Avenue and comprises, besides an executive office, a finely equipped stock and display room. The display of posters is made a special feature and complete and rapid handling is secured by the facilities of the new Pittsburgh office.

A number of exhibitors throughout Pennsylvania, and more especially in the vicinity of Pittsburgh, are endeavoring to co-operate with their fellow-exhibitors in their own towns to raising the usual price of admission to ten cents. At Greensburg, the exhibitors have reached an agreement upon this point and within a short time the admission price will be changed from five to ten cents. The exhibitors claim that their net receipts have been shaved too close by the numerous expenses that are incurred through active competition and the demand of the public for higher grade and more expensive films. By raising the price the Greensburg picture men hope to be able to give their patrons better shows and at the same time make their margin of profit a little larger. The raising of admission, of course, can only be accomplished simultaneously and co-operatively. One hold-out is likely to destroy the entire idea and unless all the exhibitors get together the scheme cannot be successful. Nearly all the towns of West Virginia have a uniform admission of ten cents and because of this they are able to put on better pictures and come out a little better for themselves at the end of the year. In the Eastern part of Ohio there are only a few towns where the exhibitors have come together and simultaneously raised the admission. In Pennsylvania, Greensburg is the first large town to accomplish this needed reform. Johnstown, Altoona, Wilkes-Barre and other cities have endeavored to work the same idea but usually through the "back sliding" of one or more exhibitors the plan has never materialized. The increase of all operating expenses and the ever growing demand of the public for more feature films will have to be offset by a raise in the prices of admission, and the progressive exhibitors of the neighboring State of West Virginia will no doubt soon be followed by the exhibitors of Pennsylvania in making a price of admission that allows a fair profit to the owners and managers.

The former M. & T. Film Exchange has now become the Keystone Film Company, with offices at No. 404 Ferry Street, this city. The company is under the management of Mrs. C. Townsend, the only woman manager of a large film exchange in the country. The company makes a specialty of feature films and carries a large stock of advertising sheets.

Moving pictures are to be used to aid in the educational campaign being carried on in connection with the sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals throughout the city and country. An Edison film, named "Hope," has been secured by the association in charge of the sale, and the picture will be shown in houses in all points of the city. Nearly all the exhibitors have agreed to put on the picture in addition to their regular show and it is thus hoped to increase the sale of the little Christmas stamps.

ST. LOUIS.

DWIGHT Elmendorf's travel lectures on "The Heart of the Rockies" shown recently at the Odeon here proved highly entertaining and instructive. Mr. Elmendorf is an enthusiastic cameraman who believes in "seeing America first" and his pictures are veritable works of art.

Nathan H. Hall a member of the House of Delegates refuses to sponsor the bill recently introduced in that body and prepared by City Counselor Walther unless the superintendent of schools, a business man, representatives of the film companies, the exhibitors and the president of the city council are allowed membership on the Board of Censorship. The original plan had been to allow the public recreation committee full swing in the censoring of films. Mr. Hall made it known that in appointing the different parties he had mentioned, a fair and impartial way to handle a public question could be gained.

Suit has been filed in the circuit court here by the St. Louis Motion Picture Company against A. C. Wagner, former vice-president of the Company, for the sum of $5,500 which it is alleged is due on a transaction arising over the sale of stock. Officials of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company refused to discuss the suit other than the matter was in the nature of a friendly suit filed with the knowledge of Mr. Wagner who is not a resident of St. Louis.

Mr. J. H. Gerspecher has succeeded Basil Webb as press agent for the Talbot forces here. Mr. Webb is now located at Dayton, Ohio.

Otis Kkinner, star of Kismet which played to capacity houses here the past two weeks, commends moving pictures as thoroughly worth while, educational and a cheap entertainment for the masses. Mr. Skinner however, decried the absence of the lost gallery god who was often very audible in his remarks in contrast to the staid and conventional parquet and balcony habitue. "The Theater is a vital factor in the life of the country" and while he thought the gallery audience had been lost forever yet he was of the opinion that the future of theaters is assured.

Moving pictures showing the International balloon race at Stuttgart, Germany were shown recently at the banquet given by the Million Population Club of St. Louis at the Planters Hotel.

B. F. KEITH theater, Portland, Me., gave up stock company attractions on December 30th, order to present a picture program. to present a picture program. Vaudeville will probably be used in connection with the pictures, and prices will be ten and twenty cents. With the prestige of the Keith name standing back of the programs, it is believed that nearby vaudeville and picture houses will find the new competition very keen.

On Christmas Day the Savoy theater, Fall River, Mass., began presenting stock company attractions instead of vaudeville and picture programs, Mr. H. Pierce has leased the theater for this purpose, and is to continue this indefinitely.

The Puritan theater, Fall River, Mass., changed its policy on Christmas Day, when Marcus Loew vaudeville was used, in connection with the picture programs.

Conn's theater on School street, Concord, N. H., is doing a most satisfactory business, as the house jumped into favor immediately after its opening. The theater is well located, and is of brick construct. Vaudeville and pictures are the regular "diet" at the house.

Mr. James Boylen reports that his new theater at Taunton, Mass., is nearly completed, and that it should be ready for its opening performance the middle of January next. This house, which is to be known as the Boylen theater, is a beautiful theater, with a seating capacity of about one thousand, including the balcony seats. The Boylen is fireproof and up-to-the-minute in every way and Mr. L. V. Wilson has been secured as manager, a man with a good reputation behind him as a money-maker.

It is now definitely announced by Mr. William Bradstreet that he intends to build a new theater at Dudley street, Roxbury, Mass., as was rumored recently in these columns. The new house, which of course, will be known as a "Scenic Temple," will seat about two thousand and will be erected in the characteristic Bradstreet style, which means a thoroughly modern up-to-date theater, to play vaudeville and pictures.

Theo. Baylies, formerly manager of Hathaway's theater, New Bedford, Mass., was in Boston last week, just looking things over. Mr. Baylies is well known among the New England trade, as he is an old time picture man. Mr. Baylies expects to announce a new connection shortly after the new year.

R. D. Marson reports that his new enterprise, the R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company, is doing very well, and that his offices at 597 Washington street, Boston, are very busy. Mr. Marson has behind him the cumulative results of years of experience, gained as New England manages of the General Film Company. Feature film service and a full mann's Feature Films, at 655 Washington street,

Another live wire exchange in Boston is Kellman's Feature Films, at 655 Washington street, which books two and three reel state-right subjects. A. A. Kellmann is opening up a good trade.

Mr, James Donovan thinks he has found a big thing in Mutual film service for his Central Square theater, Lynn, Mass., and he is not at all backward in telling people so. Mr. Donovan "put one over" on his Lynn competitors by getting Mutual service exclusively for his city.

The First Methodist Church of Waltham, acting upon the emphatic advice of Rev. James E. Coons, the pastor, has installed a complete moving picture outfit. As usual, the reason for this wise and good move is the desire of the church to stimulate interest among lax church-goers. Stereopticon slides will be used in addition to religious and educational films.

The announcement that the Film Supply Company will shortly add to its programs the releases of the All-Star, Monarch, Magnet and Anchor Companies is greeted with enthusiasm in New England.

The Windsor theater, Windsor, Ontario, was opened December second, and reports good business. This house plays several reels of photoplays besides vaudeville acts, and changes its program on Mondays and Thursdays. A seating capacity of a full thousand permits this house to offer big shows. The writer is reliably informed that the Windsor is just about the finest theater of its kind in Canada. The Windsor theater Company are the owners, with Mr. J. M. Ward as president and general manager. Mr. W. W. McEwen is resident manager, who has the reputation of knowing his business. When it is known that Windsor is a town of about 50,000 population, and that the Windsor is the only real theater there, it will readily be seen that this theater should "clean-up" very easily.

Mr. H. I. Dillenback, formerly manager of the Nelson theater of Springfield, Mass., has left that city to take charge of Mr. S. Z. Poli's theater at Bridgeport, Conn. Mr. Dillenback is well known in New England and he has the best wishes of the trade in his new position.

Dante's Inferno is still a feature to be reckoned with, as was proven when these famous reels were exhibited at the Dreamland theater, Lynn, Mass., this week. Manager Sam Grant is getting big results from this theater, as he formerly was general manager of the Gordon Brother's theater. On December 9th, the Dreamland exhibited pictures of Lynn's school children no license parade, which took place just before election time.

Mr. Arthur E. Lord, manager of the Pastime theater, Lynn, Mass., is seriously considering enlarging this house, as the present seating capacity is entirely too small for the crowds wishing to attend.

Mr. A. A. Kellmann, proprietor of the Park theater, Taunton, Mass., intends to add a little vaudeville to his programs of pictures. Business has responded remarkably well since Mr. Kellmann acquired control of the sevral theaters recently lased by Mr. Kellmann.

Assistant Supt., John J. Mahoney, director of the Public School Association, announced at the Cambridge, Mass. Latin School that he intended to introduce educational films at the Kelley School, East Cambridge, after the Christmas holidays, for the purpose of reaching the illiterate foreign population. The writer is informed by Mr. Mahoney that the first lesson will consist of reels along historical subjects such as "Washington Crossing the Delaware," "The Battle of Bunker Hill," etc. Later on so Mr. Mahoney says, if the course proves successful, the scope of the cinematographic studies will be enlarged to include botany, zoology, travel, and the manufacture and preparation of commercial staples. The plan is to interest and teach adults who cannot read. Mr. Mahoney argued that the illiterate foreigners who are to be made over into good English-speaking Americans, must be first attracted to the school-building by some extraordinary means, and then held by some interesting and inspiring studies. Superintendent Fitzgerald is also a great believer in the idea.

The General Film Company's Boston offices are at present giving their advance exhibition of releases for managers at the State House, pending the present dispute as to the advisability of continuing advance exhibitions at the Boston offices.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

MUNICIPAL interference in affairs of Peoria, Ill. picture shows may be asked by negroes of that city who claim they are being discriminated against by the managers. One colored church which is reported to have taken up the matter at a meeting of the board, sent out investigators who declared that at two photoplay houses they were charged ten cents admission while the persons just before them paid but five.

John Buss, proprietor of the Orpheum theater at Freeport, Ill., told the city council he believed he should be allowed to open his vaudeville house on Sunday if the picture houses were permitted to give performances. He was not asking for the action against the photoplay managers but a privilege for himself.

The municipal legislation in Springfield, Ill., proposed to safeguard theaters will take the form of an ordinance requiring operators to pay a fee of $3.00 and apprentices $1.00 for examination. Operators are to be at least twenty-one years old, apprentices eighteen and not more than three persons are to be allowed in the booth at any one time. The examining board will consist of the city electrician, the building commissioner, and the secretary of the city civil service board. Local proprietors are not fighting the measure although the fee clause is not satisfactory.

Affairs of the White House theater in Moline, Ill., a picture show, have gotten into the courts. Earle B. Scott, one of the managers, filed a bill for a receivership in the Rock Island County Circuit Court alleging that he had no voice in the management, his partner Thomas B. Keyes assuming unwarranted control. H. M. Railsback of East Moline, Ill., was appointed receiver. H. A. Sodini, who leased the building which is the old Barrymore theater to the partners, found it necessary to file a petition in court before he could secure possession of it.

The Bio theater has opened on Fifth avenue, between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets in Moline, Ill. Licensed pictures are used. T. M. Wheelock is singer.

The Nesemann Moving Picture Machine Company of Chicago has been incorporated with a capital stock of $6,000 to manufacture and sell moving picture machines. The incorporators are Henry W. Alm, Edy Logan Reeve and Harry A. Tiffany.

J. A. Lisy, proprietor of the Family theater at 215 West Third street, Davenport, Iowa, and Charles Grilk, an attorney, are said to be contemplating the opening of a new theater which will be either for vaudeville or moving pictures, at 219 West Third street.

The Oak Amusement Company of Berwyn, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000 to do a general theatrical business. The incorporators are John Jarces, Frank P. Miller and John J. Kelly.

The Modern Star theater at Elgin, Ill., has opened as a part of the B. & K. circuit and is featuring pictures.

The Dearborn Film Company of Chicago has been incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000 to manufacture and deal in moving pictures, moving picture machines, etc. The incorporators are Thomas J. Lynch, John J. Lupe and K. Jennings.

The Peoples Circuit Company of Indianapolis, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000 to operate theaters. The incorporators are George W. Ray, E. Schoenneman and J. C. Hall.

Films of the county fair at Marshalltown, Iowa, which were made last summer by Morse & McCoy of that city, were loaned to the Y. M. C. A. for an entertainment for boys. The Y. M. C. A. of Lincoln, Neb., included motion pictures in its Christmas dinner for the newsboys of the city.

Pana, Ill. Elks chartered the Grand for a show for all the poor kids of the city.

Manager Reilly of the Princess theater at Alton, Ill., was able to hold over the reel of Alton pictures for several days because of its popularity.

The making of moving pictures will be explained at the electrical show to be held by the Agricultural College Engineering Society in Fargo, N. D. Moving pictures will also be used for entertainment purposes.

Owners of the five vaudeville and moving picture houses in Aurora, Ill., agreed to make the first week in 1913 a benefit week for the new hospital fund which is being raised in that city.

F. H. MADISON.

AMONG THE EXHIBITORS.

The Wives of Jamestown

KALEM 2 Reels

Bryan O'Sullivan, an Irish lad of humble birth, rescues Lady Geraldine from drowning as her boat capsizes, thereby meriting her lasting gratitude. Forgetful of his station, Bryan falls madly in love with Lady Geraldine, who momentarily listens to his pleadings. Her acceptance of attentions from O'Rourke angers Bryan and he upbraids her for falseness. The nobleman draws his sword, but Bryan wrenches it from his hand and breaks it to pieces. Knowing that he cannot now remain, Bryan bids farewell to Lady Geraldine and sails for America. Bryan O'Sullivan, Irishman, becomes John Pierce, Colonist of Jamestown, Virginia. Years later Lady Geraldine suffers many vicissitudes; her castle is besieged by the Cromwellians and she with many others is sent to Jamestown to be sold to the colonists as wives. John Pierce is startled to see Lady Geraldine, but she fails to recognize him because of a heavy beard. Seeing that he is an honest man, she offers to become his wife. He takes her to his cottage and stepping into another room shaves off his beard, and begins to play the flute, which he so loved in days gone by. Lady Geraldine, who is about to end her life, hears the music and stepping to the door recognizes John Pierce, her husband, as Bryan O'Sullivan, her lover, and love claims its own.

It Is Never Too Late to Mend

EDISON 2 Reels

Meadows realizes the futility of his efforts to win Susan by fair means, and plans George's undoing and his own aggrandizement. George goes to Australia to seek his fortune; and Meadows, sure of success, selects the house for his bride, and ousts the present tenant, Isaac Levy, thus gaining the enmity of the Old Jew. Levy has been protected from Meadows' cane by George Fielding, and he now determines to protect George from the plotters. He rents an office next to Meadows, and through a hole which he bores in the wall keeps informed of their plans. Meadows' schemes are frustrated, and George returns with six thousand pounds to clear the home and claim his bride.

Romeo and Juliet

Pathe 2 Reels

SHAKESPEARE

A Wonderfully Colored Film of the Immortal Playwright's Great Romantic Play

Romeo, of the House of Capulets, and Juliet, of the House of Montagues, scorn the family feud of years, and love each other with all the fervor of Veronian youths. The ardent wooer sings his love beneath his lady's window while the stars wink their approval of the lovers' happiness. Juliet's father urges her marriage to Tybalt, a man of his choosing, but Romeo determines she shall not, so together they visit the venerable Friar Lawrence and are secretly united in marriage. Romeo is challenged by his rival, Tybalt, and in the encounter wounds his antagonist, for which he is exiled. Romeo's departure leaves Juliet open to the demands of her father, who insists upon her immediate marriage to Tybalt. In terror she flees to the old Friar, who gives her a powerful sleeping potion, and on the day she is to marry Tybalt, her friends are horrified to see her fall into a deathlike swoon. She is interred in the vault of her ancestors, and Romeo, hearing of her death, returns home, enters the vault and after gazing upon the face of his beloved plunges a dagger into his heart. Juliet awakens to see him expiring, and in her agony seizes the same dagger, inflicts a death-wound, and expires beside her lover.

One day he surprises her alone and forcibly carries her off to his canoe. Red Hawk appears just in time to see the act, and springing into the stream soon overtakes his rival. A desperate struggle follows in which Red Hawk's arm, strengthened by the "Great Spirit," mortally wounds his treacherous enemy. Red Hawk and the maiden return to the village and the wounded Indian painfully makes his way to shore, where he tells a greatly distorted story of Red Hawk's crime. The accused warrior is ordered before the great chief "White Eagle," and the death sentence imposed: "He that kills a brother must die. Twelve moons hence his spirit shall join that of the dead warrior." Red Hawk's heart is filled with bitterness and he leaves his tribe to join the army of the pale faces. His bravery in surmounting indescribable difficulties to destroy a mountain bridge, thus checking the advance of the enemy, gains him the high regard of the army, but his happiness is short lived as he remembers the sentence and returns to his tribe to pay the debt of a red man's honor. With his beloved June Dew he is taken to the funeral pyre and their souls go forth to join the Happy Hunting Ground of the "Great Spirit."

With his Hindoo servant, Arthur follows the trail until it reaches the City of Tunis, where it is lost. The sisters arrive in the city, are sold to a wealthy merchant and accordingly enter his harem. Budlong finally learns of the abode of his beloved and her sister and despatches his servant with a note to them, giving his plans to effect their release. Ourida is overjoyed and Fatima feigns to be, but instead, turns informer, and when they come to the gate to await Budlong's arrival they are met by servants and brought back to the harem. Arthur and his servant reach the gate and after a desperate struggle with the guard they rescue the girls. Finding that Fate is against her, Fatima gives vent to her jealous anger. They hurriedly leave her, to act as principals in a wedding ceremony.

THE KISS OF SALVATION (Jan. 16).—A daring highway robber is terrorizing a western settlement by his depredations. A new minister and his daughter have come to the settlement and the attendance at the little church is augmented by the admiring cowboys. The new minister's daughter, Molly, goes for a walk one day and "Handsome" Jack, the bandit, caught at last, is about to receive his just deserts at the hands of the indignant cowboys, when sentiment causes them to lose their heads. The minister's daughter comes upon the scene at the psychological moment. She is asked to give "the pore feller a good-bye kiss, seein' as he has no one else," and the bandit makes a daring escape by snatching her gun. The cowboys pursue, but are not successful. "Handsome" Jack, after riding hard, finds himself free and at last dismounts. He thinks long of the sweet girl whose kiss had set him free and decides to live straight for her sake. He writes a letter to the sheriff and sends back the spoils of the hold-up, then obtains employment at a far-away ranch. He makes good and studies hard in his spare moments, applying to his new pursuit the same energy and acumen which had made him a successful bandit. He is admitted to the bar and sets up his small establishment with great pride. His first few cases bring him money, and, having always thought of Molly, he sets out to find her.

Late in the afternoon Molly unconsciously wanders to the scene of her romance and absently pulls daisies and winds them into a chain. A light step behind her, and Jack holds her up with her own gun. He returns the gun, then tells her of his love and how the memory of her kiss had made a man of him. She listens, blushing, with downcast eyes. Her shyness bids him hope and he begs her for a kiss. Smiling she turns from him, refusal on her lips, temptation in her eyes. He takes the chain from her fingers, twists it about his neck, noose-like, and makes a mock gesture of hanging. "Now will you kiss me?" he asks. Her eyes, then her lips meet his and she goes to his arms.

KALEM.

THE USURER (Jan. 6).—Because of his wife's illness, David Mills, a young clerk, is forced to solicit a loan from Grydes. The latter is a soulless man with an overshadowing passion for money—unprincipled and devoid of sentiment. Unable to repay the exorbitant interest, David is mercilessly bled into bankruptcy by the human vampire.

Ernest Renard and his sister, Beatrice, rich philanthropists, seek a suitable person to fill the position of superintendent for a large institution—a home for crippled children—which they have founded. The scheming Grydes sees the advertisement and makes written application, representing himself to be well qualified for the position.

Renard determines to personally investigate the applicant and visits the town where the loan shark lives. On his way to Grydes' home, Renard is attacked by a thug and left in a desperate condition. He manages to reach Grydes' house, where the unscrupulous agent, failing to recognize the stranger, shows his true colors by refusing him assistance. Literally thrown out by Grydes, Renard is picked up by David, who helps him home and tenderly cares for him. The developments following the occurrence of this incident, while highly pleasing to David and his wife—as the young clerk secures the position of superintendent—fall with crushing force upon the heartless Grydes.

THE MANICURIST AND THE MUTT (Jan. 8).—James Hicks, a barber, finds that business is bad and he sees that only some decided innovation will attract customers. He therefore writes to Clippem's School of Barbers, requesting the management to send him an attractive lady tonsorial artist.

In a few days Marcella arrives on the scene, but the way she handles the first customer makes it imperative that Hicks dispense with her services. She walks up the street and is engaged as a manicurist by Hicks' competitor.

Marcella is a flirt and soon has a number of love affairs. Seeing that she must make some disposition of the several cases, she decides to realize as much as possible. As a result each of her four suitors presents her with a diamond ring. She makes an appointment with each for eight o'clock on a certain night. When eight o'cock arrives Marcella boards a train, but Tom, Dick, Harry and Joe wait in their respective trysting places, nervously fingering further tributes. Finally each resolves to visit the shop and learn what is detaining Marcella. The meeting of the four victims enables each "to see a great light."

JOHNNIE GOES DUCKING (Jan. 8).—Johnnie tramps through the marshes and discovers what he supposes to be a flock of canvasbacks paddling along the inlet. Failing to shoot any of them and seeing that they still swim composedly, he creeps forth to investigate, and gets into an argument with a real hunter, whose decoys have been disturbed. Johnnie, undismayed, determines to secure a duck at any cost and he succeeds in shooting one in a barnyard. When the owner appears, Johnnie pacifies him through misrepresentations and invites him to dinner. When the dinner is finished, Johnnie inquires, "Well, how do you like your own duck?" and how the guest replies is best explained by the picture.

THE WIVES OF JAMESTOWN (Jan. 10).—A synopsis of this two-reel feature subject was published in the advertisement of the General Film Company on pages 1316 and 1317 of the issue dated December 28, 1912.

GRANDFATHER (Jan. 10).—She knew no joy to equal the companionship with her father until the stranger came into her life. He was from a different world and soon won her heart, but the young girl knew that she could not hope to gain her father's consent. Thus it was that she stole away from home one night, little dreaming of what the future held in store.

Visions of happiness were shattered when she found that husband and lover held little in common. His world and hers were not the same and he would not compromise.

By the fireside an old man, who found the years crowding down upon him, waited patiently for some word from his loved one. At last there came a messenger to call him to his daughter's bedside, where he was given a trust—the care of his grandchild.

A strange fate caused the grandson to wander off at his game and to be found by his prodigal father. The slumbering spark of manhood was kindled and the father carried his son to his humble home. The same old fate took the father's life and the little one was placed amid strange playmates.

As the days passed the old man could find no comfort until fate, now more kind, led him to the playground. Grandfather and grandson returned to the old fireside and, with a prayer of thanksgiving, the happy trust was renewed.

A SAWMILL HAZARD (Jan. 11).—Mrs. Herton, a widow, lives in comfortable circumstances with her son, Roland. Over forty years of age, she is still an attractive woman, but lacks self-reliance and is greatly impressed by Geoffrey Stern who seeks her hand. Roland objects to Stern and endeavors to convince his mother that the selfish and unscrupulous suitor has been attracted by the comfortable home and timber lands owned by the widow. But the good woman is deceived by Stern's well-feigned devotion and agrees to marry him.

Shortly after the marriage a violent scene takes place between Roland and his stepfather. Seeing that his mother has, in a manner, become estranged from him, he leaves home and finds employment in a sawmill.

Roland, through his industry, wins the esteem of his foreman and meets his employer's daughter, Martha. An attachment springs up and the young couple become engaged. Roland, wishing to introduce his fiancee to his mother asks her to accompany him to his old home.

When Martha and Roland enter the cottage a pitiful sight confronts them. Geoffrey Stern, in an attempt to realize on his wife's property is on the point of securing her signature to a mortgage. Roland roundly denounces his stepfather and takes his mother to his sweetheart's home.

Stern determines to be revenged, as he sees that Roland stands between him and the accomplishing of his designs. He therefore goes to the sawmill when Roland is alone and through an act of startling boldness places the young man in peril of his life. Martha, disturbed because Roland has not come to the house for lunch, visits the sawmill and Stern is turned over to the authorities.

SELIG.

PROMPTED BY JEALOUSY (Jan. 6).—Laura Venning in saving the life of Detective Martin's child, wins the friendship of a man of cunning who serves her when she is imperilled through the attentions of an adventuress, who uses her to revenge herself upon Miss Venning's brother. Jack Venning in a moment of insane wagering gives a check for $5,000 to secure a gambling debt. The dashing Jack is admired by Mrs. Romaro, a society adventuress, a passion that is not reciprocated and turns her fondness to hatred. She overhears Jack's confession to his sister concerning the check and his plea for $5,000 to save him from prison. The hostess of the evening has a pearl necklace of great price that is broken, so she puts it in a crystal jewel box in her boudoir. The wily and revengeful widow gets the necklace and places it in the vanity bag of Laura. The latter, disconcerted by her brother's story is about to leave the house when the loss of the necklace is discovered, and Laura is accused of the theft. The officers, Mrs. Romano adroitly eggs them on and calls Martin the chief of detectives on the case. How he discovers the real thief is one of the cleverest bits of picture work in recent film plays.

THE GUN FIGHTER'S SON (Jan. 7).—Jeff Scott, a quick and determined fellow, who has been brought up by foster parents unmindful of his father's record, is so outrageously bullied by Sam Carey, that he gets a gun; but, declines to use it after having the drop on Sam. The latter, a human hound is not compunctious over plugging his generous adversary, and is sentenced to serve time although his markmanship is not fatally accurate. After some years' service he escapes from prison, captures Jeff's little girl and leaves a note that he has left her at the mercy of the wolves. Again the blood-blot fills the brain of Jeff and he reaches the man who tried to kill him and then rob him of his treasure. The thrilling fight in which he casts aside the temptation of a gun to evoke vengeance with his naked hands, stops just close enough to the dim border of tragedy to make the over-true tale telling and intense.

THE MAN WHO MIGHT HAVE BEEN (Jan. 8).—Bob Hale, the son of a well-to-do country banker, neglects his opportunities so frequently that he is dismissed from college. He comes back to the humdrum country town and finally is placed in a position of trust in the bank. When one of the gay companions of his ill spent college days comes that way, they review their past in the old way, and Bob is influenced to seek the excitements of the great white way in the big city. In order to secure the money for this adventure, he pockets the funds of the bank and becomes a fugitive from justice. He goes down and down in the scale of humanity until he reaches the scum line of hobodom. Weary of the husks, the shell of his former self, he rides the trucks back to his old home, to find his indulgent parents, himself a stranger, broken, disgraced, and despised.

THE FALSE ORDER (Jan. 9).—The sensational crux of jealous revenge in "The False Order" is a head-on collision of two enormous locomotives. A realistic effect that heavily discounts any stage device ever materialized to thrill. A page of vivid romance torn from the life of a young engineer, who is lured on to seeing certain death by the deadly lie of a drunken rival. Happily he is saved for a long and useful life by a trick of fate, and the well directed energies of a wrecking crew.

THE COWBOY EDITOR (Jan. 10).—A gambling cowboy taking a long chance, comes into possession of the Rawhide Weekly Rattler, and strikes a job that outdoes a brace of bucking-broncoes for real nerve rack. The town-bore, the town-gossip, "visitors", old "subscriber", "Vox Populi" and all he other well meaning patience wreckers on his trail and will not even be dislodged, or discouraged even by exploding kegs of powder. As a finale he takes to the hurricane deck of a pony and flies to the high country, leaving it in charge of its comedy conceit, which keeps a patient husband toying with an expensive pair of opera tickets, until nearly midnight. Until the lady comes in fully panoplied, to find her husband also panoplied, likewise "full" and asleep in the shadow of a tel-tale decanter.

LUBIN.

COURAGEOUS BLOOD (Jan. 6).—Romanzo Fernandez, a vaquero, noted for his bravery, courage, and honesty, is appointed Chief of Scouts on the Mexican border, which is infested by Rock and his rustlers. Rock visits Mary Burke's ranch, with a view of stealing her cattle, and incidentally makes love to her. Fernandez appears. Mary has never met him and being attracted by his picturesque costume, asks for an introduction which Rock grudgingly gives, Fernandez being his old enemy.

Mary and Fernandez are mutually attracted, much to the disgust of Rock, who later has his rustlers steal a bunch of her cattle, and while she is out riding she accidentally stumbles across one of Rock's camps. She realizes then for the first time he is a cattle rustler. Rock insults her but she gets away from him. He gives chase with some of his men. Fernandez having been warned of the cattle stealing by one of his scouts comes upon the chase, gets the girl under cover in the rocks and requests her to go for help while he holds the rustlers off. The girl secures aid from some prospectors who return and overpower the rustlers. Fernandez, who has been shot requests that he be permitted to smoke a cigarette. With a puff and a smile he sinks into Mary's arms, dying as he lived "a man."

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH (Jan. 7).—The story opens showing Dexter Pratt, the village blacksmith in his early married life surrounded by his wife and children, Annie, Tom and Dick. Herbert, the Judge's son and who is a playmate, is a thieving, fighting, cowardly boy. Ten years elapse and the mother is dead, Annie is a loving girl and unfortunately she falls in love with the Judge's son, who simply plots her seduction. Tom Pratt is suspicious and watches. Herbert, influencing the girl, plans an elopement. He takes his horse to the blacksmith's shop to be shod and then steals off with Annie to have a fake marriage ceremony performed by a college friend, who will pose as a clergyman.

Tom discovers the plot and rushes to the father urging him to interfere. The blacksmith drives a long nail in the horse's hoof he is shoeing. Tom then hurries to the scene of the mock marriage but he arrives too late and finds only the counterfeit parson. The Judge's son gets his horse and, mounting the girl behind him, starts off. Tom and the father pursue the runaways and the horse going lame, they are easily captured, The truth is exposed to the poor girl and the young reprobate driven away. The blacksmith and his daughter take sanctuary in the church and the vision of the dead mother smiles down through the stained glass window.

TWILIGHT OF HER LIFE (Jan. 9).—Mr. and Mrs. Willis and two daughters live contentedly. The older girl Lillian is engaged to a young man who, after asking her hand in marriage of her parents, leaves for the city. Sonetime later the mother, who is an invalid, dies, and leaves the younger girl as a sacred charge to Lillian. The young man returns from the city, but Lillian will not marry him, telling him that her duty is with her father and sister. He leaves despondent.

Years later May, the younger sister, has grown to womanhood, and they walk to the last resting place of their mother and father. May has a sweetheart, and he asks the elder sister for her hand in marriage. She consents, on the condition that they will make their home with her and they do so.

Two years later May is the mother of a lovely baby, and her life is very happy, while Lillian by the fireside, dreams of what might have been. In the city, her girlhood lover dreams, too—and of her. One evening, Lillian is sitting out in the yard, and in the house, the younger sister is singing a lullaby to her baby. The light shines from the open window on her face, showing a longing infinitely sad. To her side comes the girlhood lover from the city, and he too, sees the picture over her shoulder. When Lillian turns, she finds herself in the arms of the man she has loved through years.

STAGE STRUCK SALLY (Jan. 10).—Sally is a new girl at the Cort's, who do not know that she has an ambition to go on the stage. When she studies her part in the kitchen, Mrs. Cort comes to the conclusion that Sally is crazy and is made nervous. Meantime Sally finds the butcher knife too dull to cut the bread, and goes to ask her mistress that it be sharpened. Mrs. Cort is certain that she is to be killed and faints. Sally, all excitement, runs for the doctor, forgetting to put down the jnife. The doctor thinks she is crazy, and telephones the police. The reserves come and cart her off to the station-house, where Terrance, her policeman sweetheart, offers explanation, and Sally is turned loose. Sally has a bad case of "stage struck," but Terrance will try to cure her.

AN ACCIDENTAL DENTIST (Jan. 10).—Policeman Murphy leaves his post to take lunch with Nora, a fashionable dentist's maid, during the absence of the dentist. Two thieves seeing the dentist depart, enter the place to rob it. When they hear some one coming they decide to pretend they are patients and hurriedly tie their heads up. The policeman, noting the evidence of a robbery, and seeing through the ruse of the thieves, pretends he is the dentist and placing one in the chair, administers laughing gas. The second thief attempts to escape, but the policeman overpowers him, forces him into a chair and also gives him laughing gas. Nora and the policeman return to the dining room to finish their banquet, when the dentist returns, and, peeking through the window, sees Nora entertaining the policeman. He indignantly reports the policeman's absence from post, and the captain returns with the dentist and peeks in the window. Nora sees them and hides the policeman under the table. The captain sees nothing wrong, and the policeman emerges from the house with the two prisoners, who prove to be noted criminals for whom the police have long been searching. The policeman becomes a hero and is praised instead of blamed.

SAN XAVIER MISSION, TUCSON, ARIZONA (Jan. 11).—A beautiful educational picture showing the atmosphere of a typical Mexican Mission house. The building is a stone structure of large proportions, which will impress the traveler. Interesting scenes are pictured of the negro boys and the sisters of the mission going to mass. Inside of the mission we see the employment. Boys and girl are weaving and fashioning Mexican hats, baskets and other useful articles.

THE ARTIST'S ROMANCE (Jan. 11).—Johnson, a rising young artist, goes on a rabbit hunt. He and his dogs are hot on the trail of a rabbit. Bunny hides in a clump of bushes, but Johnson spies him and fires. The rabbit is wounded. So is a girl who has been sketching on the other side of the bushes. When Johnson, holding the wounded rabbit triumphantly aloft comes bounding through the thicket, the girl forgets her own slight wound. She scolds and pleads with Johnson to give her the rabbit, which he does. After scolding Johnson roundly for what she calls his brutality, the girl takes the rabbit home and dresses its wounds. The brutality of man strikes the girl so forcibly that she is inspired to paint a picture on the subject, and calls it "The Brute." The tenderness of the girl in pleading for the rabbit's life so impresses Johnson that he is also inspired to paint a picture, and in return calls his canvas "The Appeal." Later, both paintings are hung at the same exhibition, where Johnson meets the girl. Although at first his efforts to gain her friendship are repulsed, he eventually wins out, and the rabbit, which the girl has made a pet, is taken to the spot of the event, and being freed, returns to his native woods.

CINES.

A SISTER'S HEART (Jan. 4).—Helene is a proud, high-spirited girl, and strongly opposes her brother's desire to marry little Marie Carter, whose family is poor, and who is obliged to work as a milliner's apprentice.

Realizing that his sister's attitude is unalterable, Victor becomes melancholy, much to the distress of Helene, who dearly loves her brother. Finally she persuades him to take a long sea voyage in the hope that he may forget the girl.

After his departure, the family servant learns through Marie's mother that the girl has become dangerously ill. He informs Helene, whose sympathy being awakened, pays a visit to the humble home. Touched by the misery and sweet face of Marie, Helene's heart warms toward her, and love conquers pride and prejudice. She immediately telegraphs for her brother to return, and upon his arrival, all former discord is forgotten in a happy gathering of the three young people.

A MAID'S DEVOTION (Jan. 7).—Elvira is devoted to her mistress, Mrs. Dale, and is heartbroken when she sees her idol in tears, following her husband's severe reprimand for paying too much attention to a young artist.

Later, when Mrs, Dale has retired for the night, Elvira secretly watches the husband search the room and discover a letter from the artist, requesting an interview for the following afternoon. She then informs her mistress, who is thus enabled to write a note of refusal which is purposely permitted to get into Mr. Dale's possession.

This note entirely restores Mr. Dale's confidence in his wife, but he spends his fury upon poor innocent Elvira, who cannot explain, for that would incriminate her mistress. So after bidding the latter a tender farwell, the girl leaves in disgrace, but with a secret reward of money and eternal gratitude from the woman whose happiness she so loyally guarded.

THE WOES OF A PEACEMAKER (Jan. 11).—Albert and Louise, newlyweds, are both of a high-spirited disposition and are inclined to quarrel at the slightest pretext. Finally in desperation the bride's parents suggest that Uncle Anthony should pay the young couple a visit and do his best to keep the peace.

The old uncle arrives, and for a time all goes well, but one day a loud exchange of words arises, at which the good man becomes alarmed, and summons the parents to assist him in quelling the disturbance. But, in the meantime, the warring pair have made up their differences and Uncle is severely censured by the parents for his folly.

Another quarrel of a similar nature gets started and again proves to be a false alarm. At this, Uncle Anthony swears to turn a deaf ear to all disturbances in the future. Before long, however, a real disagreement ends in Albert's departure from the house vowing never to return. Louise frantically rushes to her parents, who, realizing the gravity of the situation, call upon Uncle Anthony to save the day. The latter is not inclined to be a peacemaker again, but at length capitulates and successfully brings Albert back to his wife. Uncle Anthony's word is now law in both households.

ECLIPSE.

KIDNAPPING THE FIDDLER (Jan. 8).—Billy, a fiddler, has a lucky chance. The famous violinist, Lubekik, being unable to attend a concert at the home of Madam Stafford, that lady gives instructions to her head butler to find a substitute artist at any cost. Billy is chosen, and his success is instantaneous. The guests are held spellbound by his music and a Baroness present is so enraptured with Billy that he has him kidnapped and taken to her home.

Now Billy has a wife and ten children. When the good woman is informed of her husband's whereabouts she assembles her tribe and with a thick stick in hand goes to the palatial residence in search of him. Forcing her way in, she seizes Billy by the coat and angrily belabors him over the head with her stick. He finally breaks from her grasp, however, and runs home, followed by his family in picturesque array.

ALONG THE COAST OF DALMATIA (Jan. 8).—A most fascinating subject spreading before us the territory on the Adriatic Sea, adjacent to where the Balkan war is being carried on with such great loss of life.

THE ANGEL OF THE DESERT (Jan. 6),—Married to a sporting man, Anne Stearns, with their little child, has a varied and unsettled life. Finally, Stearns locates in a western town where he opens a gambling house. He is a man of coarse instincts and mercenary nature. He insists that his wife make herself agreeable to patrons of his den and dance-hall, to popularize the resort. Their little girl is taken very sick. Stearns insists that she leave the little one and go into the barroom to meet one of her admirers. She refuses, asserting that her child demands her attention. He grabs her, drags her into the saloon and insists that she entertain his friend. She acquiesces under protest. When the drunken fellow attempts to caress her, she resists him and her husband tries to force her to submit. At this moment, a strange prospector, who has entered the room, springs to her protection, knocking down her annoyer and throwing aside her husband. He then escorts her to her home where she finds that the child, during her absence, has died. The defeated gambler follows the prospector.

Stearns entirely ignores his wife after this incident and left alone, the prospector helps her bury the child and consoles her in her grief. Later, he is attacked by the gambler, whom he had opposed in Stearn's place, and in a duel with pistols, he shoots his assailant.

By a drawn jury, he is sentenced to exile, and driven into the desert. Anne, learning of his condemnation, hastily fills a canteen and follows him into the desert where she finds him already delirious from thirst. He looks at her through his death-palled eyes and she appears to him as a ministering angel coming to cool his parched lips with a cup of cold water. Anne hastens to his side just as he breathes his last and passes into the land of eternal peace and rest. With thoughts of his kindness to her and her child and fearing to return to her brutal husband, she empties the water from her canteen into the sands of the desert; preferring to die beside the man who would protect her rather than endure the insults and dangers of the husband who would demoralize and degrade her.

THE WINGS OF A MOTH (Jan. 7).—Attractive and pretty, Alice Wentworth, who works in a large department store, very often receives the flattering attentions of the young men who are patrons of the establishment. Possessing that natural vanity of all good looking girls, she becomes discontented with her lot and longs for the ease and luxury of the handsomely gowned and wealthy people upon whom she is obliged to wait.

Hector Merrill, a middle aged and prosperous-looking gentleman, who calls with his sister, to make a purchase, is very much taken with Alice and when opportunity offers, he asks her to make an appointment to take a ride with him in his automobile. She shyly declines. Upon leaving the store that evening, she finds Hector waiting for her at the door and he takes her home in his limousine.

Pleased with the compliment, she joyously tells her mother, who warns her of the danger of casual acquaintances. To further impress her injunction, she tells her the story of the moth attracted by the glittering flame, falls into it and burned to death before it realizes its danger. Alice, thinking her mother somewhat straight-laced and passe, is piqued and resentful.

On two or three subsequent evenings; Hector takes Alice to dinner at a "swell" restaurant, with cabaret attractions. Finally, he takes her to supper and engages a private dining-room, where he very subtly tries to ingratiate himself into her favor and passes her a glass of wine. As she raises it to her lips a moth flutters into the room, hovers about the lamp on the table and falls into its flame. Immediately, she is reminded of her mother's warning. Dashing from the room and into the street, she hurries home. Her mother is anxiously awaiting her belated coming and with a mother's instinct, she recognizes the troubled look upon her daughter's face. Alice falls upon her mother's shoulder and in tears, thanks her for her timely warning, acknowledges that she has learned a lesson she will never forget and always heed.

THE DELAYED LETTER (Jan. 8).—Rejected by Mabel Hinton, Bob Legrande goes West on business with Raymond Condon, his partner and successful rival for Mabel's love. About midnight on the Special Western Limited, Condon steps out on the rear platform of the Pullman to take the air. He is followed by Legrande, who diabolically attacks him and tries to throw him off the fast-moving train. A violent struggle ensues and Condon, in self-defence, throws Legrande over the railing. This last act is witnessed by a young country couple, who are driving along in a buggy and hurry to the aid of Legrande. The train is stopped and backed up to the spot. Legrande, unconscious, is carried to a near-by farmhouse, followed by the passengers. A physician is summoned. Condon is taken to the county jail. Legrande, believing, he is going to die, writes Mabel Hinton a confession of his crime, writing on the envelope. "In case of my death to be delivered, if I recover, to be returned to me unopened." The doctor takes the letter, agreeing to carry out instructions.

The doctor leaving next day, for a six months' trip abroad, the letter is packed in his trunk, with his coat and forgotten. Months later, in Cairo, he comes upon it and believing Legrande to be dead, forwards it. Condon, in the meantime, is tried for attempted murder, the charge being pressed by Legrande who has recovered. Found guilty, the letter arrives just in time to change the verdict of the jury and save the innocent Condon from condemnation.

TWO OF A KIND (Jan. 9).—So much alike, you can't tell t'other from which, Edna and Alice two twins, are receiving the attentions of two young friends, Wallie and George. Edna receives her caller in the front parlor and Alice, in the back parlor.

Edna leaves her joung man for a few moments and hearing conversation, he peeks through the folding doors and sees Wallie entertaining her, as he supposes. He is furious because he thinks she is trying to deceive him by receiving him and his friend on the same night without the other's knowledge. Alice leaves the room for a few minutes and George, hearing conversation, in the front parlor, peeks through the folding doors and sees her, as he supposes entertaining his friend. He comes to the same conclusion as Wallie. This confusion continues until the two girls confront the two young men in the one room. They become more puzzled than ever for neither one can tell which of the girls is his sweetheart, until Wallie discovers a flower which he placed in his girl's hair. The girls very much enjoy the situation and the boys appreciate the joke which they admit is entirely on them.

BETTY'S BABY (Jan. 9).—At the circus, Betty takes a notion to a baby elephant and induces her father to buy it. He takes it on a week's trial. Betty discovers that it is too big a plaything and it is returned. George, her fiance, hoping to please her, goes to a costumer's and hires an imitation elephant outfit. He induces two of his friends to fill the front and hind legs. He leads them to Betty's home and she, pretending to be deceived, receives it with much glee and locks the elephant actors in the barn. George and Betty make love at their leisure. The two fellows in the barn become restless and when they attempt to get out, find themselves locked in. After a while, George goes to the barn, tells the boys to pretend the elephant is dead. He fetches Betty, she pretends to weep and George leads her away. The two boys crawl out of the elephant and have a good laugh at each other for having been made the victims of a huge joke.

THE AMBASSADOR'S DISAPPEARANCE (Jan. 10).—A gang of crooks are employed to get possession of valuable papers of international importance, held by the French Ambassador, Vicomte de Jarlais. They are also instructed to get the Ambassador out of the way and make it appear that he has committed suicide. His mysterious disappearance arouses the United States Secret Service Officers, but they are unable to solve it. They find his hat and coat on the edge of a pier and they come to the conclusion that it is a case of suicide.

Lambert Chase, the detective, is consulted and after going over the ground, decides to put in practice a plan which he has figured out from his careful deductions. He gets on the trail of the crooks and decides that they are holding the man prisoner. He sends them a message that there is a case of merchandise awaiting them at one of the piers. They send a truck to the pier and bring it to their headquarters. After receiving it, they lock the door and proceed to open the box. At this point, Lambert Chase springs from the box, armed with two revolvers, with which he holds them at bay, while he blows a whistle for the police, who are waiting outside the building.

The gang attack the detective and severely beat him, but before they have done their worst, the police break into the room and soon have them under control. Entering an adjoining room, they find the Ambassador a prisoner, and release him. Lambert Chase is taken to the hospital where he receives daily visits from the Ambassador, who gratefully compliments and thanks the detective for his valuable services to him and his Governmeit.

O'HARA HELPS CUPID (Jan. 11).—Larry Doolan, the policeman, is in love with the Widow McGee, who keeps a quick-lunch room, and the widow reciprocates. Sam Sharkey, a traveling salesman, and a friend of the widow's whom she has not seen for some time turns up. He has flashy clothes and fine manners. The widow is won over by them and poor Larry's nose is put out of joint. In his distress, he consults O'Hara, who advises him to play the widow's own game and he gets Aileen, a pretty young girl, interested in the plot. Larry dresses in his best and takes Aileen to lunch at the widow's lunch room, paying her marked attention, almost ignoring the widow. Mrs. McGee becomes furious and in her anger, turns down Sharkey, who has lost his job and is making a play for the widow's money. He grows desperate and goes to see her. He makes some advance, though she will not give him a definite answer. He borrows some money from the widow, pretending he has left his purse at home. In putting it away in his pocketbook, he drops a letter.

After he goes, the widow picks it up and it is to a pal and reveals the game he is playing. He returns to find the letter and she gets her money back, pulls his hair and dismisses him and writes a leap-year proposal to Larry. Larry is rejoiced, but at O'Hara's advice, pretends coolness, till he has the widow at his feet and then he forgives her and they get married.

EDISON.

THE NEW DAY'S DAWN (Jan. 6).—Mr. and Mrs. Wynne are drifting apart. After ten years of wedlock, during which time their common interests have gradually grown less and less, we find them at the opening of the picture, living in a great mansion together but almost entirely on separate lines. Dorothy, their little daughter, is the only remaining bond of affection between them. Through the carelessness of her governess, Dorothy is badly injured in a runaway accident and is carried home unconscious. As usual, Mrs. Wynne is at some afternoon reception and Mr. Wynne on his own affairs.

Upon their return each is informed by the servants of Dorothy's injury, and each hastens to her room. The family doctor, whom the servants have called and who has long known of the strained relationship of the Wynnes, refuses to allow either of them to enter the sick child's chamber as her condition is critical and requires perfect quietness.

For hours the child lingers between life and death, no word coming from the sick room which the doctor and nurse dare not leave for an instant. Unable to bear the strain longer, the parents seek the hall just outside their child's door and meet there. The thought of Dorothy overcomes the mother and she sinks down by the door. Wynne gently lifts her up and for the first time in years each is glad of the other's presence. Throughout the long weary night they sit on the stairs by the child's room, Mrs. Wynne finally dropping to sleep in her husband's arm. With the new day's dawn the crisis is passed and the doctor breaks the news to the pair whose love has been rekindled by the suffering of their child.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND (Jan. 6).—A synopsis of this special two-reel release was published in the advertisement of the General Film Company on pages 1316 and 1317 of last week's issue.

AN UNSULLIED SHIELD (Jan. 7).—His Grace, the Duke of Rutland, is dying and his family consisting of his wife and his only son are at his bedside. He admonishes his son to live up to the best traditions of his ancestors and the boy swears to be a worthy son of a worthy sire and takes his mother in his arms, indicating that he will be henceforth her refuge, whereupon the old duke passes away happily contented.

We later see the Duke in a Monte Carlo Casino; he loses to such an extent that he is wiped out and can only continue playing on I. O. U's. Upon returning to London he borrows money from a notorious money lender whom he promises to pay back in thirty days. He forgets about the obligation, but a month later he is forcibly reminded of it by the money lender who threatens to expose him. He promises to settle the following day.

Afraid of exposure he forges his mother's name to a check. Later sitting in front of several great paintings of his ancestors, conspicuous among which is a shield, he falls asleep and in his dream he recklessly crashes a glass of liquor against the escutcheon.

One by one we see the gentlemen of the pictures leave their frames, advance toward the sleeping Duke and in an intensely dramatic scene each describes how he fought for the name which he bears.

The Duke is still asleep and slowly along the gallery is seen to approach his mother. She moves to his side and tenderly awakes him. He starts suddenly, looks around the room, sees the paintings, the shield, his mother and is utterly bewildered. Suddenly he recoils and quickly crossing to the wall, takes the shield down and closely examines it. He finds it unsullied. Reverently raising it to his lips he kisses it. He looks toward his mother and taking the check book from his pocket shows her the forged name. She is greatly affected but coming to a decision destroys the check. He falls on his knees in deep contrition but she gently raises him up and going to the table signs a blank check and presents it to him. After reading it he turns to the paintings of his ancestors and indicates that he will be true to the trust and leave no blot upon his escutcheon.

INTERRUPTED WEDDING BELLS (Jan. 8).—John Smith, an inveterate smoker, gave Miss Brown his word of honor he would never smoke again. On this condition only would she accept him as her future husband. In spite of his longing for tobacco, Smith carried out his resolution much to the amusement of his former pals, who decide to play a little joke on him. On the day of his wedding they sent him a cigar containing an explosive, representing it to be a "No-to-bac" and that by smoking it he would lose the taste for tobacco forever. Smith still hankering for tobacco and more than anxious to lose the taste, lights the "No-to-bac" which promptly explodes, singeing his mustache and eyebrows—his face is now a comical sight to behold, on the eve of his wedding too. He loses considerable time, being obliged to go to the barber's to have his physiognomy put in shape again. Mr. Jones, who closely resembles Mr. Smith, is passing the house where the non-appearance of the groom has created much excitement among the family who have gathered to witness the marriage.

They seize Jones, believing him to be Smith, rush him into the house and proceed with the ceremony. Jones madly protests and finally manages to telephone his wife to come to his aid. Smith then appears with a clean shave and is not recognized and matters become more complicated. At this point Jones's wife puts in an appearance and a most laughable scene follows, as to who is who. After much hubbub matters are straightened out to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mrs. Jones departs with her husband while the belated Smith and his tear stained Miss Brown take their positions under the wedding bell as the marriage ceremony is about to begin.

THE ELDORADO LODE (Jan. 10).—Jim Harris had pinned all his hopes for years on the Eldorado Lode and somehow it had never seemed to quite pan out and when his little baby girl was hurt and he needed money for a serious and expensive operation upon her, he threw everything in the balance and offered to sell the mine to a New York mining corporation at almost any price. They sent a man out West to investigate and purchase it at the lowest possible price.

But the mining expert meets with an accident on the mountain trail near the Eldorado Lode and Jim Harris finds him unconscious with his horse dead beside him. Harris takes him to his humble home and his wife nurses him back to life and health. Thus it is that the expert comes to understand the suffering and great need of money that is forcing Harris to sell and upon investigating the mine he discovers it is worth a fortune.

During all this a rival company has been watching and one day the New York man finds another man in the mine making the same discovery that he made and the former realizes it is a case of wits, nerve and muscle in order to win a vast fortune. In a very short space of time all these are brought into play as he finds himself bound hand and foot by a Mexican greaser while his rival rides away to complete the purchase of the mine. By quick wit and forcible action the captor finds himself the captured and mounting the Mexican's horse, the man from New York starts on a race for the possession of the mine.

His rival's horse becomes lame and our New York expert finds there is nothing, beyond closing the deal with its owner, to prevent him taking possession of the mine. Harris has gone for the doctor for his little child and when the expert arrives at the doctor's house he hears the father pleading for help and medical aid. Realizing that he is about to win a fortune for a rich New York corporation at the price of his own ideas and is cheating a man out of something that means so much to him, it so ends that when the purchase is finally completed, Jim Harris is still half owner of the Eldorado Lode and the possessor of a check for $60,000.

The last scene closes with the joy of the child's life being saved and the mother's fond eyes expressing mute thanks to a man who did what he thought right.

THE MAID OF HONOR (Jan. 11).—Grace Pendleton, a charming girl but somewhat nervous and very unsophisticated, is to be married to George Lee. Her school friend, June Fairfax, comes to be Grace's maid of honor. But when June and Lee meet they recognize each other, though they hide their recognition from the Pendletons. They had met before under circumstances that precluded their even knowing each other's names and yet in that meeting they had known each other as mates and had kissed only to be separated. Neither knew where to find the other and each buried the secret and now they are

Send $1.00 to SCENARIO PUBLISHING CO., 1465 Broadway, New York thrown together—he, the bridegroom, she, the maid of honor.

After the meeting June and Lee struggle bravely to carry themselves through the ordeal, though various circumstances make this difficult indeed.

The evening before the wedding we see them go through the rehearsal of the ceremony. Grace retires to her room with a headache. June also retires after accidentally dropping a rose she has been wearing. After reaching her room June wonders whether Lee will think she has dropped the rose for a purpose. Then she wonders whether he picked it up and is tempted to go and see. Upon reaching the hall she finds Lee kissing the rose and turns to flee but he is past restraint. He seizes her wrist and they are lost. Emotion has sway and June agrees to elope with him. They are convinced that Grace will recover from the blow, that she does not feel very deeply anyway and their own happiness is paramount.

June gets her traveling bag and they are about to leave the house when Grace comes on the scene, walking in her sleep. While June and Lee stand to one side the sleeping girl goes through her part of the marriage ceremony as it had been rehearsed. The madness of June and Lee disappears. At the end June leads the still sleeping Grace up to her own room. Then she goes down to Lee again and with a wordless look of chastened understanding, they separate. In the last scene we are shown the wedding ceremony and June is truly a maid of honor.

BIOGRAPH.

THE TELEPHONE GIRL AND THE LADY (Jan. 6).—Over the wire two friends were made and a catastrophe averted. Then in gratitude for her deliverance the lady enabled two young hearts to realize their desire. Watchful eyes had reckoned without the telephone girl and her many branching wires, while her father had reckoned without the sergeant on the beat and the lady. The father coveted the groceryman and his store for the girl, but the lady found a way to satisfy all.

THE BEST MAN WINS (Jan. 9).—That goes without saying, but in this case the man was doubly best. He was the belated bridegroom's rival in love, waiting on the right hand of the lady at the wedding to be. No wonder she transferred her life's fortune then and there. The evidence against the delinquent groom was too terrible and incriminating to behold. One could not blame her. She preferred marriage unabridged. So the best man won.

THE BITE OF A SNAKE (Jan. 9).—Zeke was the genius of Dry Town. It looked for a time as if the Women's C. T. U. was going to be baffled. Antidotes are antidotes and medicine is medicine. Neiher can be denied he suffering man. But the vigilant ladies found the cause. That was the end of Zeke and his genius. But they all got stung.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 1, 1913 (Dec. 30).—New York, N. Y. The Suffragettes' New York-to-Albany-hike starts forth bravely with twenty-nine members in the army.

Stockholm, Sweden. Some agricultural scientists are experimenting with a new plow operated by a kerosene motor.

Glencoe, Pa. Two B. & O. engines and 42 cars on the Pittsburg division of the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. run away down the mountain side, jump the track and pile up at the foot of an embankment, killing five men.

Lule Burgas, Turkey. The Turkish army retreats toward the Tchatalja lines after a disastrous defeat.

Mt. Vernon, Va. The Alexandria Masonic Lodge, of which Washington was the first Grand Master, lays wreaths on the tomb of the First President on the 113th Anniversary of his death.

Jena, Germany. The stone bridge of Camsdorfer is destroyed by the river Saale, swollen by recent torrential rains.

PEGGY AND THE OLD SCOUT (Jan. 8).—Billy Gody, an express messenger, is entrusted with a bag of gold which he is to carry over the Broken Trail. He is mounted on his pet horse, Peggy, which he has taught to perform some clever tricks. The length of the journey necessitates a night's encampment. While he is sleeping, a band of Indians make him a prisoner. He refuses to tell where the gold is hidden and is tied to the stake, but Peggy with her teeth unties the knots that bind him to the tree. Gody is pursued by the Redmen and while he is fighting them off Peggy races back to town and summons some cowboys who soon rout the Indians, thus allowing Peggy and the old Scout to continue their journey.

THE HOLLOW TREE (Jan. 9).—The heir to a comfortable fortune is followed by a tramp and laid low with a blow from a hammer which the tramp has stolen from the blacksmith shop of Jeff Reed. The tramp buries the money near a hollow tree and then summons the police who find the hammer and accordingy arrest the blacksmith. Reed's outraged family help him to escape from the cell and he goes to the scene of the murder in search of some evidence that will clear his name. The tramp returns about this time and the blacksmith watches him intently from the hollow tree in which he has concealed himself. When the tramp has dug the money from its hiding place and started away. Reed springs upon him, turns him over to the authorities and has little difficulty in proving his innocence and the guilt of the new prisoner.

STARTING SOMETHING (Jan. 11).—Charlie Clarkson and his wife, Gwendoline, are very happy until his mother-in-law suggests to her daughter that she keep Charlie under control by means of mental suggestion. Gwendoline does. She tells Charlie that he has been poisoned by drinking just a little dark brown liquor from a punch bowl and that in order to keep from dying he must keep moving. This tip alarms the servants who immediately start and keep jumping until one by one they fall exhausted. Clarkson continues to impersonate a jumping-jack until Mrs. Clarkson breaks the spell and he admits the joke is on him.

C. G. P. C.

LOVE UNCONQUERABLE (Jan. 7).—Max Linder again to the fore as a lover who undertakes to convince Papa that Max is the son-in-law he is going to have. Of course, the girl has decided that no one will do but Max, and with these two agreeable, there is nothing for father to do but comply, although he makes many brave and amusing attempts to avoid losing his daughter to the fickle Max.

RADIOGRAPHY IN PRACTICE (Jan. 10).—Something absolutely new! X-ray photographs are still one of the foremost wonders of science, but X-ray motion pictures are an innovation. In this film the action of the knee joint, the fingers, hand and wrist are seen, as well as views of various small animals under the penetrating rays, showing the workings of their interior organs.

THE LIFE OF ANTS (Jan. 10).—This industrious insect gives a lesson in thrift and systematic working which will be a revelation to a great many people and an interesting and instructive film for everyone.

ESSANAY.

THE HEIRESS (Jan. 7).—Jimmy, the impecunious, arrives at the club, where his fellow members are engaged in a game of cards. He helps himself to a cigarette and borrows a five spot from one of the boys in the same breath. Baxter, a fellow club member, receives a message from the family doctor, stating that he had better return to his home immediately. Arriving at home he sends a message to the boys at the club telling them that the heiress has arrived, and that some of the nice marriageable fellows had better come up and meet her. Enthused with the spirit of being "near uncles," they buy everything from a rattle to a rocking horse, and with the cargo under their arms, swarm in upon the new father. In their excitement they leave the message on the table at the club. Jimmy picks it up and returning to his home, dresses for the unusual occasion of meeting the "heiress." Out of funds, he returns to the club, where he makes a small touch. Returning to his home again Jimmy takes all of his earthly belongings and proceeds to a pawn shop with them. He then calls at Baxter's home and, mistaking the maid for the heiress, invites her out to dine. With his roll of hard earned money he buys the best of everything for her from soup to wine. Mason, one of the club members, sees Jimmy and the girl, and tells Baxter about it. They all go to the restaurant where Jimmy introduces the girl to his friends as his fiancee. Baxter invites them all to his home. The second maid brings in the baby, and the proud father introduces the baby to Jimmy as the heiress, and explains that the young lady Jimmy has been dining with, is his maid. Realizing his terrible mistake, Jimmy dashes madly from the house, leaving behind a heart-broken imaginary heiress, and a hilarious congregation of club colleagues.

MILANO.

FATHER'S STRATEGEM (Jan. 4).—Rita and Marie are sisters, and with their husbands, Lucien and Henri, have gone to a ball. Here the attentions the young ladies receive from the men flirts on the dance floor arouse the ire of the two husbands, and when this is noticed by their wives they foolishly decide to try patience to the limit. The men naturally look for solace in the same plan of action and find willing accomplices among the women at the gathering. This brings matters to a crisis, with the result that the four young people are soon in a heated clash of recriminations. All leave hurriedly for home. The girls send for their parents.

The father decides upon a plan of action. He solemnly agrees with the young folks that they have been mortally wronged and that their only redress is in the decree of the divorce court. The next day he calls the maid and the butler to his room, and has them each write a letter at his dictation. The butler writes a love note to Rita and Marie asking them to meet two well known cavaliers at a private room in one of the gayest restaurants of the city. The maid writes to the two young husbands making an appointment for the same time and place with two notorious chorus girls. Each make the restriction that they are to attend in full disguise and mask, that prying husband or wife may be none the wiser. The notes completed, father has the butler take his note to the two young men, telling them he has inadvertently picked it up in the ladies' dressing room, while the maid takes her note to the ladies saying she has found it on the men's dressing table. The result is as the old gentleman had anticipated. The young folks, believing their worst fears verified, decide to go to the cafe at the appointed time and there confront their guilty mates.

That evening father and mother arrive first at the cafe to arrange with the proprietor for the little tableau. They hide on the approach of the young men. The husbands are quickly followed by the wives, all in domino and mask. They fly to unmask each other, and in the surprise and confusion that follows all their jealousy disappears. A greater surprise awaits them for the old folks come from their hiding place laughing at them.

THE GROUCH (Jan. 3).—John Morgan is a grouch. His stenographer, Kate, let him rave until one day when it was cold and he insisted upon having the window open right over her head, her patience gave out and she simply told him in a very emphatic manner that "she would not freeze to death for any man." She was dismissed from his employ.

A few days before this a girl named Nan Keyes applied for a position in the office. Kate told her there was no opening but John Morgan upon entering the room heard Kate's remark and immediately found a position for Nan in the stock room to take the position of shipping clerk which had been held by Dan whom Morgan put back in the shipping room with the other boys. Immediately upon Kate's dismissal from the office Nan was asked if she could do stenography and as she could she was taken into the office to work.

One day Nan caught a dreadful cold from the window she had left open to make Morgan angry. That day he left the office before she did and on going out dropped his wallet on the floor. Nan found it and having no place to keep it until morning she put it in her bag for safety. Now Nan had an enemy in an admirer of hers. Dan had been an ardent admirer of Nan's, overstepped courtesy one day, and Nan had given him a good slap in the face before the eyes of his fellow workmen and he was ready for revenge.

His time came for just as Nan picked up the purse he stepped into the room and then quickly out again having seen her put the wallet into her own bag. The next day Nan was too sick to come to work and when John Morgan inquired if anyone had heard from her Dan told what he had seen. Morgan did not believe and forbid him to say anything more on the subject but went straight to Nan's house. He was surprised to find her in such poor lodgings and found that she supported her good for nothing father, who inhabited the saloons. To this father she had given the wallet to be returned toMr. Morgan when she found she was too ill to go to business. He stopped in to treat his friends and when Nan and Mr. Morgan found him, some of the money had disappeared. It was then that John Morgan found Nan should not live with this dreadful father of hers, but when he told her so she would not give in to him, so they both decided to go halfway which they did for then for the rest of their lives together.

THE HORSE RACE AT HAWLEY'S RANCH (Jan. 1).—A widow has been struggling while her only daughter has been growing to womanhood to keep the little ranch home for their own. Reverses came and a mortgage is placed on the ranch. A dance is to be held at Hawley's Ranch and Meg and her mother are invited. While the young folks are enjoying the dance, the old folks hike to the house where old cider is served. They go back to the young dancers and find our heroine has succeeded in lassoing the new hand at Hawley's Ranch. Her long braid of hair has become tangled in one of the buttons of his vest, and before the untangle is completed, the two young folks are inclined to think that Fate must have had a hand in it, and Meg glides away in the arms of the cowboy.

We go back to the old folks and find that the cider has started its work and they go out on the lawn and do a "hoe-down." At its finish old man Hawley is ready to bet every cent he ever saw that his ranch outfit can beat any other ranch outfit in the world and that he has a horse that can beat any other horse in America, and he backs his argument with $500.00 in cash. The notice is written and the two old sports hike to where the young folks are. The young people gather around. The dance comes to an end and each cowboy feels that he is got to win that race which is to take place the following Thursday. The following morning Meg's mother receives notice that unless the $400.00 can be paid on the mortgage on the coming Thursday the mortgage will be foreclosed immediately. Meg rides up to the little home, sees her mother in distress and learns the cause. A thought comes to her: Why could not she in the disguise of a man enter the race?

The scene now changes to the day of the race. The horses are all lined up. As the shot is about to be fired, Meg drives her horse to the line-up and as the shot is fired the horses dash away almost simultaneously. As the race progresses we see Meg's horse gradually forging to the front. The race is over and there is great excitement when it is learned that it is Meg who has won the race. She hurries home and is just in time to pay over the money to the man who holds the mortgage.

At a club meeting, a member announces the declaration of war. All drink to the success of the South, with the exception of Frank, who refuses. He announces his intention of fighting for the North. Frank sees the dispatch up his sleeve, runs through the bushes and awaits the coming of Fred, when he pulls him from his horse, stuns him, takes the important dispatch and rides off. All this is seen by a negro, who runs and tells Eva. Eva hastens to her brother's assistance, telling the negro to follow with her horse. Fred regains consciousness and tells Eva of the theft. She takes his gun, and mounting rides after Frank. Her horse is the swifter and she overtakes him and holds him up. She gets the dispatches and marches him to the tent of the Colonel, to whom the missive is addressed. Frank is taken prisoner and makes a sensational escape.

She duly appears with the womenfolk, attired in a party dress, in which she is anything but comfortable. The guests laugh at her and Captain Cutler comes to her rescue. He advises her to go back to camp and talks kindly to her.

He sees her in civilian clothes and is seized with insane rage. Alchise renounces the girl and she becomes a regimental favorite, being particularly attached to Cutler.

The Chief vows vengeance and attacks the Fort while part of the Garrison is absent. Tapida climbs the stockade, secures a dead Indian's pony and rides to a commanding hill, where she builds a fire and gives the Apache war signal. This is seen by the outgoing troop, who return at full gallop. They arrive just in time, for the survivors are penned in the officers' quarters, which are set on fire.

The Indians are captured and as Tapida runs to Captain Cutler, the old Chief Alchise fires and kills her and she dies surrounded by her new friends. Alchise falls, riddled with bullets.

A WAGER (Dec. 31).—Bert and his chum Jack De Peyster were on their way to the club one evening when they see two policemen arresting a rather tough looking guy. Jack is rather sympathetic but Bert laughs at him, and says that the arrest is undoubtedly a good thing for society and takes exception to Jack's statement that a perfectly innocent man can be arrested and thrown into jail and promptly accepts Jack's offer to wager $500 that he can be arrested and not commit a crime of any kind.

Jack secures some old clothes and dressed in these enters a swell cafe much to the disgust of the other diners, one of whom notifies the proprietor who phones for the police. The police arrive, Jack is arrested as a suspicious character and taken to the police station; from the station he sends a note to Bert telling him of his predicament, and asking him to come over and bail him out. Bert realizes he has lost the wager, but thinks to have some fun with Jack and denies all knowledge of him.

Meanwhile Jack's valet has become alarmed at his master's absence and hurries to the home of Miss Livingstone, Jack's fiancee and tells her of his fears. Miss Livingstone and her mother hurry to the police station to notify the police and there see and identify Jack who is promptly released; and when Bert finally arrives at the police station once more he is arrested and thrown into a cell for playing pranks with the force. However it all ends well with the police captain a guest of the two boys at the club.

A TAMMANY BOARDER (Jan. 2).—In this picture the Eclair's new stock members, the Royal Bengal Tiger, "Princess" plays the leading role. The owner of Princess is forced to leave his boarding house owing to non-payment of rent and is forced to leave his trunk behind. Now, in this trunk he has been keeping his pet tiger and when the landlady and maid in search of something of value in place of the money due for board, he permits the tiger to escape and the fun commences. The tiger searches through the entire house for his master frightening the inmates nearly to death and causing no end of an uproar. The owner is finally sent for, and returning removes the tiger from the premises and is well rewarded for so doing.

CRAWFISH (Jan. 5).—This "small lobster of sweet water" is one of the inhabitants of the river most appreciated. This crustacean is of nocturnal habits, for during the day it remains hidden in holes under stones. Who has never seen crawfish walking slowly on the shallow bed of a river or swimming backwards by leaps?

The females carry their eggs in clusters under their bodies and breed in November. The crawfish are easily attracted by a piece of meat and can be caught by means of a special balanced net.

Their worst enemy, beside man, is the rat. In order to remedy the extraordinary destructions resulting from different causes, such as epidemics and wars and also the great human consumption of crawfish, so much appreciated by those who are fond of delicate foods, an experiment of artificially restocking the rivers, has proven successful.

WILLY, KING OF THE JANITORS (Jan. 5).—Willy's parents, janitors, leave the house in his care and he, of course, takes the job seriously. He starts by pushing aside a porter, who is carrying a trunk to an apartment above and a tenant who did not wipe his feet before entering the house. Annoyed, by an organ grinder, Willy makes him get out in a hurry and becomes furious when he sees one of the tenants shaking a rug out of a window. Coming down the stairs, he notifies an old lady with a small dog. "No dogs in this house" says Willy. He spills some water over the old lady and lets the dog loose. It runs away, followed by its mistress.

In spite of a notice that no orders will be given after ten o'clock in the morning, a few tradesmen, butcher, baker, grocer, etc., arrive and they are well received by Willy.

As it is the day the rents are due, the landlord calls to collect them but Willy thinks it is not yet time and gets out a hose with which he wets everybody who has been watching him. Soon his mother returns and Willy receives proper punishment which his excess of zeal has won for him.

AN ACCIDENTAL SERVANT (Jan. 7).—Billy Sheldon returns from a trip abroad and tries to settle down to work on a picture that he hopes will prove his masterpiece, but is so restless and nervous that when an invitation comes from his old friend Dick Lang to spend a week as a guest at a house-party, he jumps at it and starts to motor out to Dick's home.

The day Billy chooses to begin his visit, Grace Ellis, one of the guests of Dick and his wife went out for a ride in Dick's car. When the engine broke down at the entrance to a park Grace, rather than wait, started to walk through, telling the chauffeur to meet her on the other side of the park when he has finished his repairs.

Now it happens that Billy's car broke down at about the same time, and as Grace came out of the park and saw Billy standing alongside of his engine, which he had just succeeded in starting, she mistook him for Dick's driver and ordered him home.

Arriving at Dick's home Billy insists upon carrying out the joke, with the assistance of the others who disguise him in a masquerade beard and wig, and appoint him as temporary butler. Everything works out as planned until Grace discovers the joke that is being played and spoils it all. How does she spoil it? Why, by falling in love with him, of course.

THE RETURN OF LADY LINDA (Jan. 9).—An extended review of this two-reel subject was published in last week's issue on page 1309.

THE GOBBLER AND THE FINANCIER (Jan. 12).—This story deals with a poor cobbler who sings while he works from morning till night. But his songs disturb his wealthy neighbor who sends for him and asks, "Can't you hold your tongue when you are working?" The cobbler replies that he cannot, so the financier gives him a sovereign and requests him not sing any more.

Believing that he is now in possession of all the gold in the world the cobbler departs gleefully, profusely thanking the financier. After a short time, the brave cobbler finds that he is not very happy for he cannot work without singing and cannot live without working. He is in great distress and finally decides to return the money and says, "Take back your sovereign—I must sing so that I can work and be happy." And he returns to his shop leaving the financier very much perplexed.

The next morning the financier is awakened very early by the cobbler's song. But Jeanneton, one of his servants, is sure she has found a way to rid the master of his annoyance. She calls on the cobbler and makes him believe she has fallen in love with him, and he, of course, responds to the advances of the pretty young girl. She consents to marry him if he should procure a hundred pounds. "So much; How can I get that amount?" Then he remembers his deal with the financier.

He goes to him again and receives the money, promising that he will not sing any more. Of course, the financier asks for a receipt for the money and the happy cobbler, elated with happiness, signs the paper without even reading it,

He hastily returns to his shop. Jeanneton calls and he gives her the hundred pounds, asking her to make good her promise. But instead of getting the girl he is confronted by a horrible sheriff, who has come to turn him out of his shop! Instead of a receipt he has signed a paper reading as follows: "Received from the Count De Montreuil the sum of one hundred pounds in exchange for my cobbler's shop."

Mary receives a letter from her sister, Katy Did, an actress, who has written saying that she will come to spend a few days with her and has forwarded her trunk in advance. The maid and the expressman enter with the trunk. Mary unties the rope from the trunk, and finds it full of theatrical apparel. Dick climbs up the ladder and enters through the window. Dick tells her he has fallen in love with her at first sight. Mary says she is married. The window cleaner takes away the ladder and Mary's husband, Jack, arrives and finds he has forgotten the secret door key and rings the bell.

Mary and Dick are frightened. Dick tries to get out of the window and finds the ladder gone. He cannot go out of the door as he will meet Mary's husband on the stairs. Mary gives him a woman's costume and wig, points to room and tells him to put them on in that room to which Dick exits hurriedly. Her husband enters and demands to know why he has been kept waiting so long. Mary tries to smooth him over when Dick enters from other room dressed as a woman and drops his suit of clothes into the trunk. Mary's husband wants to know who Dick is and Mary introduces him as her sister Katy Did.

The maid enters and tells Mary she is wanted and they both exit leaving Dick and Jack in possession of the scene. Dick now has a funny scene of making love to Jack and both go out into the garden.

Now Katy Did, the real sister arrives, enters the room, opens the trunk, and finds a man's suit of clothes there. She demands an explanation from Mary, who tells her exactly the real state of affairs. Katy then plans a trick on Dick; taking his clothes, she goes into another room.

Dick and Mary's husband are now seen in the garden, Dick smoking a cigar to the amazement of Jack. When Dick sees an opportunity of escaping he goes back into the room to get his clothes out of the trunk, but finds they are gone. He then sees Katy Did coming into the room with his clothes on. He asks her who she is and she puts her hand in his pocket and presents him with his own visiting card. They recognize in each other old sweethearts and desire to change back into their original clothes.

The husband comes on and is amazed when he sees two strange people in the room. His wife explains and introduces her sister Katy Did. Katy Did introduces Dick as her future husband.

SHE SLEPT THROUGH IT ALL (Jan. 6).—Young Mr. Newlywed dearly loves his wife but he longs for a night at the club, so he has the boy send a telegram calling him to an important business conference. He hurries to the club where a swallowtail has been provided for him and he assists at a farewell bachelor dinner.

Next door to him live two spinster sisters of uncertain age who are attending a suffragette meeting. A strenuous debate is before the members and they pay no heed to the hour.

At last Mr. Newlywed finds that the lobster salad disagrees with him and there is too much brandy in the plum pudding sauce and he has to be helped into a cab and the driver starts home with him. The night is dark and Newlywed gets into the spinsters' house and travels laboriously up the stairs, leaving mementoes in the shape of shoes and other articles of apparel at every step. He tumbles wearily into the spinsters' bed and is soon asleep.

The spinsters see it is three o'clock and start home and are horrified to see the shoes and other articles littering their neat stair case, but thinking it is the work of the man who lives upstairs they enter their room, see the stranger asleep and rush out shrieking for the police. This alarms him and he gets safely into his own house in time to see them return with two sturdy policemen who, finding the flat empty suspect the old ladies of having imbibed too much and leave in disgust.

Mr. Newlywed sees this through the keyhole of his door and is relieved to see the officers leave. And the wonder of it is that the unsuspecting wife slept through it all.

Pierre and Gabrielle soon after their marriage seek a home in a remote spot and find happiness. By a strange turn of the wheel of destiny Brooks and Marie go to the distant village where they are directed for lodgings to the hut of Pierre, who pretends not to recognize Brooks. Later, Pierre returns and finds Brooks flirting with Gabrielle and proceeds to punish him, but Brooks runs away and is pursued until he falls from a cliff. Believing him dead Pierre climbs down a rope and rouses him from insensibility. Seeing he isn't seriously injured he tells the shrinking coward he can climb to the summit of the cliff himself and leaves him there deeming him too petty an object for vengeance.

GOLD AND DROSS (Jan. 8).—John and his partner, Jim, have implicit faith in their claim and work it diligently every day, while John's wife, Jennie, sits home and frets, becoming more discontented each hour.

One day while the men are blasting, Sid, a fugitive from justice, hides in the mine and is badly wounded. John takes him home. Jennie finds him a marked contrast to her husband, and Sid, forgetting his host's many kindnesses and little sacrifices, asks Jennie to accompany him. She readily consents.

In the meanwhile, the deputy has seen Sid at the shack and he and the sheriff arrive to take him again into custody. However, Sid sees them coming and he and Jennie ride off on the sheriff and deputy's horses. The officers soon get other horses and follow. While they were preparing to leave, John and Jim had struck gold and the husband hastened home to tell Jennie of their good fortune, only to find the home empty and her note of farewell awaiting him. Jennie and Sid reach the desert but while looking for water, one of their horses gets away and Sid mounts the other and goes in search of him. Here he is overtaken by the sheriff, whose bullet soon puts an end to the chase. Taking the horse, the officers return, leaving the faithless wife to wander along in the desert.

THE SUSPECT (Jan. 10).—Three horse theives take some horses from a ranch. A reward of $500 is offered for the capture of the thieves. Bill, a cowboy, sees the notice and later sees the stolen horses in Frank's yard, the thieves having seen him coming and having turned in while the place was empty. He rides off and informs the sheriff. Frank is employed on a nearby ranch and is given a note to take to a distant ranch. He rides home soon after the thieves have gone, having passed them and questioned them regarding the led horses. Frank's wife is out and he leaves a note saying he has gone to Oak Crest.

Mary returns and sees the note and tosses it on the table, annoyed at his absence. The sheriff arrives, tells her that Frank is suspected and that the horses were seen in his yard and that he must have gone off with them. They see the note at the same time and reach for it, but the sheriff is quicker. He goes and summons a posse and rides after Frank. Mary is puzzled, but determined to warn Frank at all hazards. She mounts her horse and goes after him.

The horse thieves see Frank coming, and believeing he is after them, ambush him and gag and bind him and hide him in the bushes where they camp for the night. Mary is distracted as night approaches, but is persistent. She sees a hat by the roadside, dismounts and leaving her horse tethered, she creeps up to the camp, takes one of the horse thieves' guns, which lies by his side and releases Frank. The two of them hold up the rustlers, and hearing the sheriff and posse approaching, Mary runs out and halts them. Frank and Mary decide to deliver the note together and promise to call for the reward upon their return.

THE ACTRESS (Jan. 9).—Mr. and Mrs. Horton go shopping and leave their little son in the automobile at the curb. The boy steals out of the car and explores the neighborhood. He finds his way to the stage entrance of a theater and enters. There is a rehearsal in force and the leading lady sees the boy and makes friends with him. The rehearsal is temporarily suspended, and the actresses crowd around the bright-looking boy and make much of him. In the meantime the Hortons return and miss the boy. They begin a search for him and find him in the theater. The mother is shocked to find him in the arms of an actress and denounces the stage woman. The actress, wounded and hurt, vows vengeance. She immediately inaugurates a siege against the husband, exerts all the wiles of which she is mistress and wins him. He lavishes jewels and costly gifts upon her, and neglects his wife and son. At last his infatuation utterly overpowers him, and he deserts his wife. In poverty and helplessness, she moves into a squalid little room with her boy. Accustomed to having everything she wanted, her destitution is doubly severe. In the meantime, the actress' purpose accomplished, she rejects the man's further advances, secretly and sincerely despising him. Things go from bad to worse with the other woman and her boy, and at last, in despair and buried pride, she applies for a position in the chorus. On the stage both women meet; the actress glories in the degradation of the other, when the child, recognizing her, runs to her arms. The child touches the warm spring of sympathy and true womanhood in the actress' heart, and she walks toward the woman whom a moment before she had been persecuting, and offers the hand of friendship. She forces her to accept the jewels her husband had given her, telling her they belong to her, and when she refuses, urging her to do so in the name of her boy. Both forgive and forget, and the woman become sisters.

They all pass before him as in a dream, and finally the book drops from his hands and he dies.

ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE (Jan. 6).—Orrin Austin and his wife were visiting at the Hope Country Club. Austin merely left his wife sitting alone; he made no effort to introduce her and showed his neglect plainly to the guests about the club grounds.

Austin, on the links, tiring of the game, met Jennie Wilton, a widow. They strolled throughout the grounds together and the wife of Austin grieved in her heart at the sight. Her mother, proud of the splendid match her ingenuity had made, watched proceedings carefully, drinking her wine on the great balcony and ever keeping an eye out for trouble.

It came when Jack Stanton, bachelor, made a spectacular drive. The ball rolled three hundred yards away and stopped at the feet of the lonesome wife. Acquaintance ripened into friendship in an hour. Returning, after a stroll with the Wilton woman, Austin saw his wife talking with Stanton. Instantly there was a clash. Austin turned upon his wife and the dislike of years focused in a bitter speech.

He went away after that with the Wilton girl and his lonesome wife, sitting alone, watched through a glass while Austin kissed her in a boat gliding through the trees toward the open lake. A few moments later Austin made up his mind. Pulling in toward shore, he wrote a note and sent a boy to deliver it to his wife. Stanton, seeing it all, took the note from the servant, and himself carried it to the mother of Mrs. Austin. She read it, smiled, gazed out to sea and turned happily toward Jack Stanton.

THE TRAIL OF CARDS (Jan. 9).—Don Pedro, a wealthy Mexican, and Bob Renwick, ranch foreman, both loved Bess and both sought her hand. Her heart she gave to Bob and when Don Pedro poured his passionate Spanish love into her ears, she sadly smiled and shook her head. Don Pedro taught her to tell fortunes by cards and Bess often sat alone in the hammock, idly swinging and finding much amusement in the trick.

Don Pedro, alone in his gardens, brooded. He determined to kidnap her and took two Mexicans with him to her home. He found her in the hammock, threw a rope around it quickly swung it between the saddles of his peons and they galloped off. Swinging, cradle-like between the horsemen, Bess bethought herself of her cards, and dropped them, one by one through the hammock.

Later her absence was discovered and frantic Bob with a posse took up the pursuit. He found cards scattered along the way and followed the trail to the mountains. There a battle royal occured and the Don, defeated by the very cards whose use he had taught Bess, retired into the hills to spend the remainder of his worthless life.

CALAMITY ANNE'S INHERITANCE (Jan. 11).—Calamity Anne, forty-five years of age, attired in wide slouch hat, short riding skirt, and sucking her everlasting pipe, leaned against a shanty and talked with the Misses Baxter and Barton. Enter young Williams, of the big mining company on the hill. Straight he went to Calamity and handed her a screed entitled: "Calamity: You was good to me once. I'm croakin' and here's my will. I give and bequeath the Black Hole mine to you. Goodbye and good luck, Walleyed Jake."

Calamity removed her pipe long enough to utter a wild hurrah. Young Williams wanted to buy the mine but Calamity simply sniffed at him.

Calamity with the Misses Baxter and Barton saddled the burro and made off toward fortune, the young Williams gentleman following at a discreet distance, convinced that Calamity sooner or later, would sell her holdings.

Arriving at the Black Hole and there with four henchmen was Cal Edwards, dangerous bad man with a nervous trigger finger. So Calamity simply took possession of the shack, placed herself in the door, rifle in hand and waited developments. Edwards wanted to parley after he saw the rifle but he finally decided not to wait.

Now the Miss Baxter was susceptible to a black mustache, and when Cal Edwards met her the following day outside the shack she promised to remove those dangerous bullets. She did, and Calamity was bodily hauled out of the shack by the pernicious Cal Edwards. Then Edwards promptly snubbed Miss Baxter and trouble started. Then Cal Edwards removed the will and placed it in his back pocket. Then he calmly lit a cigarette and the burro standing just behind him, quietly eyed the Calamity Anne's will, decided it was in the wrong place and gently lifted it from Cal's pocket, eating it the while. In the meantime the more timid Miss Barton had fled and fallen in with the handsome young Williams. With the enemies gone, Miss Baxter rescued the remains of Calamity Anne's will from the burro's throat. Incidentally, "Hell Hath No Furies like a Woman Scorned," etc., for Miss Baxter, smarting under the snub, acquired a pistol and put the entire male element to rout. Calamity Anne decided to accept a check from the handsome young Williams and everything ended happily.

IN THE RANKS (2 reels Jan. 8).—Sergt. Allen and Hazel Story, the Colonel's daughter, had little opportunity to meet, and exchange love notes by depositing them in the breeching of a cannon. An insistent admirer was Lieut. Darrow, who was favored by her father. Matters reached a crisis when her father insisted that she marry the Lieutenant, and she secretly married Allen. A couple of soldiers who had been disciplined by the sergeant saw him meet Hazel and followed them, and peeping into the office of the magistrate saw the knot tied. They lost no time in telling the lieutenant, who, inwardly raging, communicated the fact to the Colonel. Hazel confessed her marriage, and her indignant father was in a quandary when a scout rushed in and brought news of an Indian uprising, stating that the redskins were frenzied and were holding a big war dance.

The Colonel decides to send some one into the Indian country to watch their movements, and the lieutenant suggests that they send Sergt. Allen. Allen is commissioned, and Lieut. Darrow drives a nail in the foot of Allen's horse so he will go lame in a few hours. To further insure Allen's death, he bribes the two surly soldiers to follow him and attack him.

Hazel overhears the instructions and hastily leaving a note for her father, reading, "You have sent him to his death. I have gone with him," she leaps on a horse and follows Allen.

Allen's horse has just gone lame when Hazel comes galloping up. She informs him of the plot, and he goes to the top of a hill and watches. In the meantime the Indians have gone forth, and intercept the soldiers who are shot from their saddles.

The Colonel finds the note from Hazel and sends the troops out. The Indians are engaged in a desperate battle, and the bodies of the soldiers are found, and Allen and Hazel are believed to have been killed.

Allen however decides not to return, and builds himself a cabin in the woods, where he becomes a trapper. An Indian falls into his bear trap one day and Allen pulls him out and feeds him, for which the redskin is grateful.

The Indians await their opportunity to gain revenge for the beating they received, and one day make a sudden attack on pioneers and emigrants. The friendly Indian tries to persuade Hazel to flee, but she refuses to go without Allen, who is hunting in the woods. In a desperate effort to save her the Indian forcibly lifts her from the cabin and throws her, fainting, across his horse. As he gallops away Allen comes up and thinking Hazel is being stolen he brings the Indian down with his rifle. To save the fort he sends Hazel to warn the Colonel, and she gallops off at breakneck speed, while he goes toward the next fort for assistance.

As Hazel dashes into the fort her father is

Then she sees the trap. When John comes in she warns him; but he refuses to believe and so anxious is he to throw his money away that in desperation the girls locks him in the inner office. For the rest of the afternoon he is a prisoner while the girl waits at the ticker scanning the tape for United Copper. It goes up at first,—but then just as surely it drops, point by point. Three o'clock arrives—the market closes with United Copper wiped out. Then Anna releases John. He rushes to the ticker to read the truth. As he is thanking the girl, Jennings enters to be told that the money is safe, and his mean plan known to both the girl and her fiance.

JIM'S COLLEGE DAYS (Dec. 31).—Jim Holliday, a poor but ambitious young man, is working his way through college by tutoring his roommate, Samuel Brown, a good-natured athletic fellow, with a rich, indulgent father, and a pretty coquettish sister, Marion. Jim tries to get on the football team, but the captain, Ned Hayward, is in love with Marion himself, and he will not appoint Jim to a position.

Sam gambles and goes to dances, despite the objections of the trainer and the coach. Jim gets unpopular by trying to make him work hard, and at last does a good deal of Sam's work, to help him pass in his studies. The afternoon before the big game. Sam's sister Marion comes to the study, with some other girls and her mother. They have tea, and sitting in the window seat, Jim proposes. The girl likes him but shakes her head, and her mother suspecting the conversation, interferes with great pride. That night Sam goes to a fraternity dance, Jim staying at home to write a long essay for him. Jim's head aches and he leaves the dormitory, to take a long walk. He sees some students whom he knows are bad ones, meet three fellows with suit cases, who are strangers. They hob nob together gleefully, and Jim ses the three men from his college pay the others enormous sums of money. They go into a bar-room to finish the talk, and Jim steps into the rear vestibule to overhear them if possible. He learns that his sneaky college mates are betting against their own college, through the new-comers, and that they are going to drug Sam Brown, the star player of the team, and any others possible.

Jim hurries away to the fraternity house where Sam is dancing. He sends in his name for Sam, and Marion happens to walk out on the portico, between dances, with Ned Hayward, the captain. She greets Jim, and Ned sees that she likes the other. He is jealous, and tries to get her away. Sam comes out and Ned tells him that Jim is intruding, and the roommates quarrel. As they stand there, the three plotters walk quietly into the fraternity house, unnoticed. They are preparing for their work, being members.

Jim returns home, to their rooms, and waits all night in vain. Sam does not come back. Next morning, worn out with worry, Jim telephones to his home in the city, but no news. He hunts up the coach and the trainer of the team, and they go out to find Sam. No results. They jump into an auto and go to Sam's father's office. Marion and her mother have come there to go to the big game with him. They rush back to the college grounds, and as they are passing a saloon, big Sam, still in his dress suit, crumpled, dirty and almost unconscious is pushed out of the door by an angry barkeeper. They stop and learn that he has been drinking all night, and ride for a doctor.

They get to the training quarters, and find the team waiting for them. Sam is able to walk, and realizes his folly. He sobs, but his team mates, once so fond of him, threaten him bodily violence, including the captain. They are frenzied and, while they are holding their pow-wow, officials come into the quarters, telling them that the time is up and that the game must start. They look around, and the captain ruefully sizes up the substitutes who line up before him. Jim Holliday has donned his football suit and stands there quietly waiting. The coach looks at Sam, and then points to Jim. He orders the captain to put Jim in the position—but he refuses. The coach threatens to call the game, but the captain yields. After a big play, the players run in, with Jim on their shoulders, the students crowding around. In the enclosure back of the quarters, they are met by Sam, who throws his arms around the shoulders of his roommate who won the game, while Mr. Brown, his wife, Marion and the girls rush up. They congratulate Jim, and Captain Ned Brown, who observes Marion's meaning better than Jim, comes up to congratulate them both. Jim is made a partner of Mr. Brown—and the ending is obvious.

RELIANCE.

ROWDY COMES HOME (Dec. 21).—Mr. and Mrs. Norman have a dog, Rowdy, to whom they are devoted. But after the birth of her first baby, Mrs. Norman listens to the stories of the maid who fears all dogs. She tells the anxious mother that dogs are treacherous, particularly when there are children about. Beliving this may possibly be the case with Rowdy, Mrs. Norman persuades her husband to send the faithful little fellow away. Mr. Norman gives the dog over to the care of a farmer. That night Rowdy breaks loose and runs back home. Mr. Norman is overjoyed to see him, but his wife insists that he take the dog back next day. This is done, the farmer assuring Norman that Rowdy will not be able to get away again. That afternoon, the maid takes the baby out to the park in its carriage. She meets her sweetheart, and leaving the carriage in a secluded spot they start off for a little walk. About this time Rowdy breaks loose again and starts for home. Some dry autumn leaves on the ground near the baby's carriage catch fire. The dog passes through the park on his way home. He recognizes the carriage and jumps up to see that the flames have almost reached its coverings. He dashes home and when he finds Mr. Norman he barks and shows so evidently that something is wrong, that his master finally follows him to the park. They arrive just in time for the father to rescue his baby from the flames that are now burning away the carriage draperies. Baby is carried home and Rowdy follows. When she hears the story, Mrs. Norman once again puts her faith in the dog and willingly agrees that he may stay home. The maid comes in a few moments later, all excited over the disappearance of the child and the burned carriage, and she is at once dismissed.

TRYING TO KEEP BEDELIA (Dec. 28).—Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed have had a hard time with their servant; so when they managed to keep Bedelia, they decided not to let her go under any circumstances. Bedelia realizes how valuable she is and in many ways puts their patience to the test. When her master and mistress give a party up stairs, Bedelia feeling rather lonesome in the kitchen goes up and insists that she be made one of the guests. When they refuse to permit this, she immediately says that she is going to leave. Upon hearing this they drag her back into the drawing room, and she is soon enjoying the party with the rest of the guests. Upon another occasion she accompanies Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed to the opera. She brings her friend the policeman into the house and insists that he be recived as a gust by Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed.

Mr. Newlywed goes to a customer and hires the outfit of a Hindoo Fortune Teller. In this garb he calls upon Bedelia and he offers to cast her future. Reading her palm, he fortells great misery for her if she leaves her present employ, and so dwells upon this that superstitious Bedelia vows never to leave the Newlywads through any fault of her own. The next time Bedelia meek and mild waits upon her employers, and has nothing to say about leaving.

A NEAR TRAGEDY (Jan. 2).—The trouble starts when the parents of little Herbert Rice leave him and his tiny sister in full possession of the house while they go to a matinee. Sis wants to play lady'' but her mother's new evening gown is so long that it is necessary to cut a few feet of the skirt off to make it fit. Rice finds that his father's silk hat and grandmother's glasses make him look like a first class doctor, so it is necessary for Sis to be taken desperately ill so that little Doc Rice can perform an operation. It takes a large bottle or red ink to furnish the requisite amount of blood and when the children hear their parents returning, the bed room looks like a slaughter house. Fearing a whipping, Rice and Sis hides behind the portieres, and their unhappy parents think that they have been murdered. A famous detective backed by the police department finds some wonderful clues and is making a name for himself when the kids appear and solve the most horrible crime.

KAY-BEE.

THE PAYMASTER'S SON (2 reels—Jan. 10).—Silas Burton, the paymaster, has a son, John, who is a lieutenant, and a daughter, Ethel. Colonel Randall has a son, Richard. Richard is a wild youth, but has won Ethel's heart. For his escapades his father sends him back to college, but he drops from the stage coach and hides until nightfall, when he comes and persuades Ethel to elope with him. The coach goes on and is attacked by Indians, the occupants being killed. To secure funds Richard enters the paymaster's quarters. Lieut. Burton awakens and captures the intruder. Amazed, he drops his revolver and chides Richard, who takes advantage of the opportunity to cover Burton with his gun and disarm him. The paymaster hears the noise and comes toward the room. Richard warns Burton that if he discloses the truth to his father he will shoot him ,and steps behind the portiers into the other room. The paymaster asks John for an explanation of his presence, and to account for his stolen money, but John dare not answer knowing that Richard has a revolver pointed at him behind the curtain. The paymaster believes his son a thief and disowns him. Richard stealthly makes his exit and joins Ethel, and the two depart. In the morning they join a train of emigrants.

John Burton's story to his father is not believed. Scouts find the bodies of the dead passengers in the coach, and bring back Richard's discarded coat, which is considered as evidence that Richard has either been killed or captured by the Indians.

Lieut. Burton joins the emigrants and an exciting encounter takes place between him and Richard, interrupted by the sudden attack of the redskins. Burton takes charge of the defense, and Richard deserts and runs away. Knowing that the emigrants cannot hold out Burton leaps on a horse and breaks through the Indian lines in an effort to reach the fort and secure assistance. He catches up with Richard who believes Burton is pursuing him, and who shoots Burton's horse from under him. Burton fires from the ground, bringing down Richard. The two are then attacked by Indians, and Burton drags Richard to a position behind a big rock, and stands off the foe until help arrives.

In the thrilling battle the soldiers drive away the Indians, and carry Richard and Lieut. Burton back to the post. Thoroughly ashamed of himself, Richard makes a complete confession to his father, exonerating Burton.

SAVING MABEL'S DAD (Jan. 6).—Mabel is courted by three men, Henry, her father's choice; Fred, her favorite, and George. George is supplied with an abundance of self confidence and has some amusing experiences with Dad. Henry is a country swain and meets scant favor at Mabel's hands. Papa takes Mabel and Henry for an outing and slyly leaves the young people alone while he takes a nap in a rowboat. Fred takes advantage of the opportunity to send a note to Mabel asking her to meet him at the rustic bench, as he has gone for a minister. George sees Dad sleeping and shoves the boat out into the water, where it is carried out to sea by the tide. Mabel deserts Henry, but when the plight of her father is discovered she importunes Henry and George to save him. Henry starts out in a rowboat, but George commissions a motorboat and skims over the water at an alarming speed. Dad awakens to find himself in a sinking boat, and welcomes rescue at the hands of George. He is taken ashore where Mabel is awaiting him and tries to give her hand to George in a spirit of gratitude, but Mabel, who has discovered the trick played by George, asserts her intention of marrying Fred, who has arrived in an automobile with the minister.

There is an event of particular moment at his home and Leroy's "friends" are complimenting him upon his business genius. One calls his attention to a newspaper article telling of the stocks of the Leroy Company having had an extraordinary rise. As the festivities are at their height, a telephone message from the Leroy factory tells of it being on fire. The reception ends abruptly.

ance unpaid, and Leroy is financially ruined. The blow is too much for his health to withstand. With poverty comes illness. Leroy, Jr., seeking to retrieve the family fortunes, leaves with several companions for the gold regions in the Rocky Mountains, to prospect for that metal.

Seeking work, made imperative by the need of food, Leroy's daughter and wife call upon their "friends" of by-gone days. They ask for employment but the sympathy of the close-fisted fair weather friends soon informs the Leroys of the truth of the adage that "Adversity is a bottomless lake surrounded by nearsighted friends." Richard Bernhard, manufacturer, and one time intimate friend of Mr. Leroy, plunges the Leroys into despair by informing them that although he does need and advertises for help, that the Leroys are ineligible because they look too gloomy, that he likes to see happy, gay, laughing people around him.

Capricious Fortune once more smiles upon the unfortunate. They receive a telegram from Leroy, Jr., telling of his having discovered a gold mine of enormous value, which will make him and his parents again wealthy. This fact gets into the newspapers. The fair weather friends, hoping for a return of the happy days of wining and dining, rush to the lowly home of the Leroys and seek to patch up the friendship which naturally was not strengthened by their disinclination to give the Leroys means of livelihood. Leroy, thereupon, remarks that inasmuch as they had gotten along without these fair weather friends when they needed them, that they will surely get along without them when they don't need them.

WHEN HER LOVE GREW COLD (Jan. 2).—Jack Melrose writes to his wife Tessa, then visiting at her parents' home, saying that he must leave the city on an unexpected business trip. For reasons of economy he goes to a boarding house, although not pleased at the prospect of a diet of hash and prunes. On arriving he hastily scribbles a note to Tessa, telling of his undying devotion and that he knows nothing more adorable than the name of Tessa than Tessa herself.

Jack has a habit of becoming displeased with his letters, and writing each several times before he expresses himself to his taste. Therefore, it happens that the landlady finds one of the unsent missives lying on the floor. The plot thickens. The landlady is also named Tessa and, let it be whispered, she is a widow! Oh, these widows!

Jack bears out his reputation as a man of letters and continues his fervid writings to the absent Tessa. The present Tessa receives them all avidly, her love hungry heart warming under the effusions. She knows nothing of the other Tessa. She believes they are directed to her and that bashful Jack has adopted this surreptitious method.

Jack's letters are nothing if not fervent. "I repeat every moment, yes, even gargle with it, the luscious name of Tessa. I would love you, even were you an undertaker's daughter;" "again I would gaze into the liquid depths of your soulful eyes and hear the merry ripple of your voice over a cascade of pearly teeth" are samples of Jack's epistolary ability, which in earnestness would subordinate those of the Apostle Paul in his communications to the Corinthians.

Several days have passed and the landlady feels that her cup of happiness is about to spill. She confides to a "lady fren" that after such impassioned letters, she expects him to pop like a champagne bottle cork very, very soon. While the widow's joy is rising to effervescence, Jack is in blissful ignorance.

He finds that his business will not consume the time that he thought it would and tells the landlady that he is going away and that he would like to have his bill made out. "You shall not go until you ask me to become your wife. Would you so cruelly trifle with the affections of a trusting lorn widow who has only one father, one mother and has just been vaccinated?" she says, and straightway exhibits to Jack the love letters which have double-barreled import.

Jack is locked in his room by the angry widow and told that he can regain his freedom only by making her his wife. Jack is a resourceful chap and knows that there is one way in which to put love to the acid test. Out of the window he drops a little note. This is what he wrote. "I sought to slip away because I am ruined. If you know any generous souls who will lend me $250.00, lead me to them!"

The widow consults her "lady frens," who decide that it would be unwise to marry a man who did not have even enough money to pay for the marriage license. The widow, therefore determines that she will liberate the captive and tells him that she is sorry, and that she knows no one who will help him in his need. The story closes with Jack in the embrace of wife Tessa, telling her to kiss her favorite husband.

NORTHERN EGYPT (Jan. 2).—Interesting views of the land of antiquity, showing the marvelous engineering works which to our modern Captains of Industry are a lost art; the wonderful Nile, whose yearly inundations of Egypt, keep that country from becoming another Sahara. There are glimpses of the Assouan Dam, which controls the distribution of the Nile's waters in times of flood, the ruins of Thebes, the ancient city of one hundred gates, the Colossi of Memnon, two enormous statues representing Anenothes III, successor to Rameses II. These are the statues of which there is the legend that at the rise of the sun, one of these statues gives forth a musical sound, called the Songs of Memnon. There is shown the temple the Songof Menmon. There is shown the temple of Ramesseum, dedicated by Rameses II to Ammon, God of the Sun, also the temple of Karnac, consecrated to the God Khons, the construction of which temple is said to have continued during several centuries. Interesting is the Avenue of Sphinxes, one and a quarter miles long, each sphinx to the number of six hundred, holding beneath its paw, the statue of Amenophes II.

SOLAX.

A MILLION DOLLARS (Jan. 8).—Jim Fuller is employed in a broker's office at a small salary, and one Saturday night after he gets his pay envelope, he expresses his dissatisfaction with the way his employer is treating him. He expresses some anarchistic beliefs and asserts that "every man should have a million dollars, and that the wealth of the world should be distributed equally."

He goes home brooding over the way the world is treating him, and the more he thinks of the idea —distribution of wealth—the more he becomes in favor of it. At home this theory is uppermost in his mind, and before long, he sits back in his chair and dreams that the wealth of the world has been re-distributed and that every man is a millionaire. He sees himself and his wife in fine clothes, living at a fashionable hotel, but, he soons finds difficulty in getting service.

The elevator boy at the hotel refuses to take him up and down because he is satisfied with his fortune. The cook and the maids, the stewards and the clerks, all refuse to work because they are satisfied with their living. He tries to engage a taxicab, and the taxi-cab driver refuses to run his car because he is satisfied with his fortune. He tries to use a street car and the conductor and motorman are too busy counting their money to run the line. In disgust, he walkas many miles, looking for a restaurant, but every restaurant that he comes to, has a sign to the effect that the proprietor has retired from business owing to the fact that he has all the money he needs.

Hungry and fatigued, he comes home—his wife almost starving and sick from privation. He tries to call a doctor, and the doctor refuses to come out to see the patient because he is too busy counting his "million."

After many other disquieting experiences, Fuller wakes up with a start and realizes that he is in his own home, and the idea dawns on him that this world would be very uncomfortable to live in if all persons were millionaires. The object lesson is complete and he is quite satisfied that it is up to him to make his way and not wait until the "millennium" comes and the wealth of the world equally distributed.

THE MUTINY OF MR. HENPECK (Jan. 10).—Mr. Mann is a small insignificant person and very much afraid of his wife, a woman of considerable avoirdupois and prepossessing demeanor. While Mr. Mann puts up with his wife's peremptory manners, the servants will not stand for them and leave her employ. Poor hubby is then forced to take charge of the culinary department and assume the position of cook and dish-washer, while his wife reads the papers and plays "lady."

Matters come to a climax, however, after the arrival of Mrs. Mann's brother, a prize fighter, who is married to a small, retiring woman, very much afraid of her husband. Mrs. Mann and her brother go to the theaters and sport around town, while Mr. Mann and the prize fighter's little wife stay at home and do the char work.

Mr. Mann and Mrs. Prizefighter get together one evening and decide to give Mrs. Mann and Mr. Prizefighter a big surprise when they arrive from the theater.

The last scene shows Mr. Mann looking out of the window telling Mrs. Prizefifhter of the approach of the loved ones. They hasten to the kitchen and come back with brooms and frying pans. They hide behind the door and when Mrs. Mann and her brother enter in jolly mood, they are surprised by a fusillade of pans and crashing blows from the broom. Confusion follows and Mrs. Mann and her brother soon get upon their knees and plead forgiveness.

The erstwhile Mr. Henpeck and poor Mrs. Prizefighter, shake hands victoriously. A year later finds the disposition of both Mrs. Mann and Mr. Prizefighter entirely changed. Mr. Prizefighter is willing to feed the baby with one bottle, while Mr. Mann can at peace, lounge in his armchair and smoke a cigar.

AMBROSIO.

A SICILIAN HEROINE—This story first takes you to Missilmeri, a little Sicilian village, and into the home of Don Ruggero, a wealthy landowner. Don Ruggero is an iron-hearted man and strongly prejudiced against the lower classes.

His son, Corrado, a young fellow, loves Rosalia, a shepherdess, but Don Ruggero has always refused to allow their marriage and to recognize little Vincenzino, their child, as his grandchild. Finally to destroy all Corrado's hopes, he discharges poor Rosalia from his farm, where she had been employed for many years. Even the sight of her departure with Vincenzino in her arms does not soften him.

Rosalia is the very ideal of the Sicilian beauty, and Capt. Altieri, an officer in the service of the Dominators, the Bourbons, admires her immensely, but all his approaches are strongly repulsed by her.

Don Ruggero and his son have for a long time conspired to free their motherland from the hands of the Bourbons, and when they receive news of the arrival of Garibaldi, who had sailed with only 1,000 soldiers from Quarto, near Genoa, to fight for the freedom of Sicily, they leave their village to join him and the other conspirators. The rendezvous is at Piana dei Greci, where they find Garibaldi just starting out to conquer Palermo.

In the meantime Capt. Altieri steals from Rosalia her little son, hoping thus to succeed in his vile scheme, and starts out to join the Bourbons' headquarters in Marineo near Corleone. Colonel Bosco, the commander-in-chief of the Bourbons army, entrusts Capt. Altieri with an important message to be delivered to the almost doomed Palermo.

Altieri starts out, and on his way meets Rosalia, who implores him for the restoration of her child. Upon the sight of her, he forgets his important mission and drags her into an uninhabited house, where he has concealed Vincenzino in an upper room. The little boy, hearing the cries of his mother, rushes down to save her and drops some ashes into the eyes of her aggressor. Taking advantage of his instantaneous blindness, she steals the message Altieri had with him and runs away to Garibaldi's headquarters.

Her courageous act meets with high approval from Garibaldi, and wins for her the consent of Don Ruggero to her long-delayed marriage to Corrado.

TURN EM' AWAY ON YOUR OFF NIGHTS

and matinees as well by presenting to your audience A REAL GIFT. AS A SOUVENIR, OUR PHOTOPLAYERS PHOTOGRAPH POST CARDS are of such fine quality that the public are enthused into making complete and uniform collections of all the PLAYERS. We learn from many exhibitors that their patrons look forward to souvenir nights. The public are collecting these cards because they want a full set of the players for their albums or for framing and bear in mind it's the QUALITY that has created the large interest and at an actual valuation you are giving away a 5 CENT ARTICLE. If the cards were inferior and a base imitation they would not come back for another. The strength of the drawing power lies in the genuineness of the card.

Do not consider for a moment that "any old thing is good enough," IT'S THE GOODS that will draw the business.

50 Association Players

40 Mutual Players 30 Universal Players

COMPENSARC

This Machine cuts 2/3 from your Light Bills

Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for 2/3 more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc

saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

829

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

MOVING PICTURE ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT

Used and Highly Endorsed by the United States Army.

BIGGEST SENSATION IN THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Can be operated by a boy 10 years old. One customer writes: "Plant running like a top and delivering the 'juice' right along every day for our moving picture house. Costs us about one-tenth as much as public service. Also pumps water to all our buildings, 2,000 gallons per day."

Write to-day for Bulletin 101. It is a mighty interesting booklet.

For EASTER Church Booking

"The Star of Bethlehem," Thanhouser's biblical masterpiece in three reels, which a FEW selected Eastern churches (names on request) showed at CHRISTMAS TIME with such auspicious success, is the newest religious production obtainable. Bookers of Church, society, lyceum and like entertainments should bear this in mind. It is by far

The Most SUITABLE Motion Picture

of a biblical nature for Easter exhibition, since it deals totally with the Birth of the Redeemer, picturing it in greater detail than has ever been known before. It is the PERFECT EASTER FILM. There is not too much of it; the "happy length," 3000 feet, is reached; and there can be no complaint on the usual "too-long" score.

Is Thanhouser's "Star of Bethlehem"

to be easily had? Assuredly. There are forty film exchanges (addresses on request) who have one or more sets of the subject. Practically all the larger cities, therefore, hold a copy. The rental sum is small, and the benefits vast. For further particulars address (on your letter-head) BETHLEHEM DEPT., THANHOUSER FILM CORPORATION, NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

Thanhouser's

next feature is the splendid historical story from the pen of Mrs. Yonge, reproduced in two reels, TUESDAY, JAN. 28.

The Dove in the Eagle's Nest

A thrilling drama of the stirring days when might made right. There's "perfect publicity" for this!

Sunday, Jan. 12th The City Mouse

She goes to the country and becomes a village queen. It is a novel story, but it is a depiction of a condition you have seen in real life and it rings true.

Tuesday, Jan. 14th The Tiniest of Stars

A touching story of "Amateur Night." Fine comedy is supplied by the poor acting of the amateurs and fine pathos is furnished by the fine photoplaying of the superb "Thanhouser Stock."

Friday, Jan. 17th Napoleon's Luck Stone

The tale of a meek little clerk who is made a fearless hero simply through possession of a charm which he believes to be Napoleon's Luck Stone. And then it turns out to be a——!

WILL YOU SIGN THIS DECLARATION of INDEPENDENCE?

In the course of film events, exhibitors should realize that their patrons are not interested in motion picture politics—that they are interested in seeing good pictures. Your patrons don't care which side of the political fence you are on, but they do care what pictures they see. Should you show poor pictures, they won't, in revenge, steal your children, but they will reduce your receipts by going round the corner to other exhibitors. The Gaumont Company makes pictures that the people want. That's our business.

To-day show your independence of everything but merit by ordering all Gaumont releases.

SATAN

or, The Drama of Humanity

IN FOUR PARTS

An Educational Feature, Suitable for Schools, Churches or Theaters

The Greatest Morality Picture Ever Produced

A Picture That Will Make Men Think

PART ONE

WHEREIN Satan begins at the beginning, tempting Adam and Eve; and later inciting Cain against Abel. Satan's activities among prehistoric men are largely confined to sowing discontent that results in war. Through his evil promptings the offering up of human sacrifices begins. His evil genius is also here manifested in his direction of the manufacture of the first sword. Based on Milton's "Paradise Lost."

PART TWO

WHEREIN Satan directs his evil influences against Our Savior. This part is based upon the book of "Messiade," by the German author, Klopstok. The coming of Jesus is a sight to Satan that is physically unbearable. The evil one increases his activities and is seen at work among the soldiers of Herod. His particular instrument, however, is Judas Iscariot. Great is the joy of the evil spirit when Jesus is finally crucified. Greater still is his discomfiture as Jesus again walks forth into the light. In this part the visible power of evil working against the visible power of good is a fine lesson.

PART THREE

WHEREIN Satan takes science unto himself as one of his agencies of evil. In a monastic laboratory he teaches a weak-willed monk the art of distilling liquor, and thereby inflicts upon the human race the curse of drink. Mephisto's work during the medieval period is then taken up. His gradual development of the temptations of life have been handed down to us is skillfully portra The inevitable consequences of the immod of money and wine are shown in a way th a great lesson.

PART FOUR

WHEREIN Satan appears at work among us of modern times. While many of the sins of other times still continue with us, the Spirit of Evil has developed a number of new ones that we do not forcibly realize until we see this part of the picture. The great trusts are seen as agents of the Devil to wreck the lives of women and workers.

Facts and Comments

THERE are at this moment scattered through the country many large theaters waiting for the right sort of man to convert them into model moving picture theaters. The steady losses of patronage in gallery and balcony are responsible for this state of affairs. Expenses exceed revenues, dark nights increase in number and the start is made for the bottom of the chute. Dark nights are more fatal to the prosperity of a theater than ever before in the history of amusements. The electric theaters are open every night and their invitation is always present. From the dark theater to the theater with the bright front is but a step and it comes much more natural than the step back into the theater which was closed the day or week before. The managers of such theaters, often clever and experienced men in their own particular lines, are afraid of motion pictures. They realize that the motion picture is a new thing in amusements, that it requires expert handling to make a commercial success with it.

The stage is now set for the coming of the right man, who is no other than the alert, wide-awake, progressive exhibitor. He has to begin often by breaking down the prejudice of the owner or manager of the theater. To their way of thinking "pictures" are still "pictures," something of an inferior nature; something that requires explanations of an apologetic character. "What will our patrons say to this radical change of policy?" is the question often asked. Remembering, however, that the patrons have been decreasing anyway, the management under clever persuasion will let the exhibitor try the experiment. It now depends almost entirely on the character and the intelligence of the exhibitor whether the new venture will bring the right solution of the problem or whether "pictures" will be nothing more than another station on the road to ruin. Given a large theater with a seating capacity of a thousand and more, a good neighborhood, whether residential or commercial in character, there is no reason whatever why the exhibitor should fail to make good.

The best people in the community are ready to come into the right sort of motion picture theater. If the theater has always borne a good reputation, but has never been used for moving pictures before it is just the right kind of a theater to make an appeal to the most desirable classes of the public. Here is a chance for a revision of prices on the upward plan. No seat should cost less than 10 cents and none more than 25. Features, orchestral music, occasional lectures, plenty of scenic and educational pictures will be the great assets of this kind of playhouse. This is no finespun theory; we have seen such a plan succeed wonderfully well in practice. Lurid posters outside and an ill-assorted crowd and bad ventilation inside will drive away just the class that will come to see the pictures in a good house in clean and decent surroundings. There are thousand opportunities—no less—waiting for a thousand exhibitors.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD wishes to call attention to a legislative measure about to be introduced in the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania. This measure provides that vaudeville exhibitions may be given in any public place of amusement with a seating capacity of four hundred or over. Petitions are now being circulated among the exhibitors of the Keystone State favoring this bill. We earnestly hope that the exhibitors will individually withhold their support and collectively rise to condemn it. All kinds of rumors are afloat as to the influences behind the bill, but whatever the influences there can be no two opinions as to its effect on motion picture houses. Pennsylvania has happily overcome the blight of cheap vaudeville and we hope that no step backward will be tolerated by the organized exhibitors. Cheap vaudeville is the especial foe of the small exhibitor. Cheap vaudeville in the past has been the source of ruinous competition among the exhibitors in the smaller communities. The legislature at Harrisburg should not be left in doubt as to where the majority of exhibitors stand on this question.

THE New York World in its last Sunday edition prints a remarkable article recommending "accuracy and fair play" as the foundation stones of modern journalism. Old New Yorkers with any sort of a memory will be amused at this anything but charming inconsistency between theory and practice. If, however, the Pulitzer school of journalism is to inculcate accuracy and fair play as the mottoes of future journalism we would respectfully suggest that a beginning be made with the motion picture. Day after day the paper mentioned has sent out reporters apparently under instructions to criticise, exaggerate and distort the moving picture situation in New York City. Not one good word was permitted to find its way into the reports. Nothing was heard but the sound of the hammer. Accuracy and Fair Play were conspicuous by their absence. We are willing to believe in the accuracy and fair play of the new journalism just as soon as we see some concrete samples of it.

THE moving picture still lacks a universal name. In this country we do not seem to care particularly for the word kinematograph, although that word is fairly well acclimated in all the countries of Europe. We stick to "motion" or "moving pictures." The word "kinematograph" was, we believe, introduced and made current in Europe by the Lumieres more than seventeen years ago. Our English cousins took up the term, but did not seem certain whether to say "cinematographic" or "kinematographic." In the English and Australian papers the "c" and the "k" are used indiscriminately. This is confusing and should be stopped. At the imminent peril of "starting something" we want to point out that the only proper way of spelling and pronouncing is "kinetograph." The word is taken from the Greek, and in the original language, ancient and modern, is spelled and sounded with a k.

Dumb Eloquence

By Louis Reeves Harrison

WE often speak of the eloquence of tears or of silent grief, and somewhat of their character are mute manifestations on the screen, especially when portrayed by actors of high intelligence. One reason so many picture-plays stay flat where they are projected, and are thus of doubtful meaning to the audience, is that members of a studio company do not invariably realize that they are soon after to be face to face with just about such people as they would meet in daily intercourse throughout society.

I am not much of a believer in acting of the false-face kind. It is nothing great for a child to depict what it is not. Some of us are doing that from habit, playing a part whether we hold nine high and deuce low of varied suit or four aces pat, and all the world is our stage. We become so accustomed to assuming roles according to the people we meet that the difficulty is not to depart from the normal but to show that we are really trying to live up to our best ideals. The hardest thing for a man to do is to set forth the best there is in himself.

As a student, as an observer of rehearsals in many studios, any man of common sense would soon perceive that one of the greatest mistakes made by actors is in supposing expression of feeling to be a purely physical manifestation, that there are twists of the face and movements of the hands which will be accepted as depicting this or that phase of mind. Anger, indignation, or any of the affections may be shown in a hundred different ways, according to the character of the individual. There are no universal methods in exhibiting emotion. Each man is a law unto himself.

Of all the misconceptions that become settled convictions one of the most deplorable is that an actor must not feel the sentiments he is helping to make visible. This idea is responsible for nearly all the artificiality that mars stage performance. It makes little difference what form of work a man may undertake, he will lower it if his conceptions of what it should be are not high. The whole tendency of stage experience is to belittle the discrimination and intelligence of a mixed audience, with a result that performers play down to the poorest element for the applause of a few instead of up for general delight and for appreciation none the less high because silent.

There is a great deal for thoughtful minds to correct in moving pictures—the trend of criticism must be suggestive or creative to be of definite value—and right methods of acting seem as well worth discussion as other factors of screen presentation. The trouble in offering what is new in this art is the opposition the critic is sure to encounter from those who cling to conventions—they are not easily taught that what has been is not necessarily a fact today, that truth is new rather than old. We would never progress if some of us were not able to discard tradition.

Some of the finest actresses who have appeared in photodramas never had a day's training on the stage, and they were selected for more than beauty alone—they have personality. They have a certain amount of natural intensity that is revealed in their portrayals. They constitute an intervening medium between the author and the audience through force of personality, without which the original conception can rarely be made so manifest as to be deeply impressive.

Personality is what counts. The actor who lacks it will never impress an audience. And he may fail when he has it from attempting to thrust it into prominence or from a desire to repress its natural manifestation. He must be himself. He must reveal his whole soul in action. He cannot pound it into an audience, and any attempt to do so will result in strained and artificial effect. If he tries to give it delicate finish he will simply cover the depth and intensity of his own nature. He must be himself. That is why children, dogs and horses do so well in screen presentations. They are never anything else than themselves.

One of the best comediennes in moving pictures is a tomboy. She was rehearsing a Mrs. Youngwife part with her hands in the dough when the leading man in dress-suit teased her from the side. He was out of scope but not out of range. She hurled a wad of dough at him with such unerring aim that it hit him full in the face and spread over his immaculate shirt front. This purely spontaneous piece of business was incorporated in the photoplay and was the hit of the piece, to be forever after imitated, though it was purely spontaneous at the time. The pure spontaneity of the young actress has always constituted her greatest charm. She is, however, the terror of directors.

One of the greatest faults of directors is exhibited in not according actors of quality greater freedom in self-revelation. Men and women of artistic instinct best express themselves when untrammelled by too many instructions. The pressure brought upon them from the outside is liable to make them one-sided, too intense or too repressed, all of which leads them astray if it does not make them ridiculous. In directing a play I have never gone further than giving a general idea of what was to be done and timed entrances and exits. I leave the rest to the performer, and he seems to know by instinct what is to be put over.

Technique is, like health, a valuable thing to understand in order that we may know what to avoid, but health is spontaneous and so is good acting. Those who study the subject closely come to know in time that it is through the earnestness of a man and the depths of his sure convictions that we reach contact with his soul. That is why we often like men who oppose our views, or even favor them over those who pat us on the back—it is in us to admire and appreciate sincerity.

We love Raphael better than those who copy him. His dumb eloquence was that of a great soul. We love Duse better than those who try to imitate her for the same reason. The mute eloquence of the faithful dog lying beside his dead master more surely reaches our hearts than all the ranting and strutting in the world. The eloquence of the picture is that of a true heart. Even a critic who knows what he is talking about and says what he means may pass through twenty studios and emerge without a scar, though there is nothing particularly dumb about his eloquence—damn him.

The author's story is the revelation of one soul in its struggle among others, and the interpretation is not a mere matter of stage "business." The intervention of the actor is a matter of interpretative art. He must understand what he is to tell or he will give false testimony. Wherever there is a demonstration of truth involved it must be traced back to its birth and run free from its source to its destination if it is to be clean and unclouded.

Mayor Gaynor on Censorship

By W. Stephen Bush

WITH the instinct of a statesman and a true friend of the people Mayor Gaynor has on every occasion evinced great interest and regard for the motion picture. When at times a particularly fierce chorus of denunciation against the moving picture resounded through the press and the City Hall demanding of the mayor that he do something at once, the latter would calmly refuse to be impressed by mere noise, though that noise often proceeded from eminently respectable sources. His answer to the floods of indiscriminate abuse of the motion picture was the framing of a practical plan of regulation and improvement. This plan was embodied in an ordinance and introduced in the Board of Aldermen by Alderman Folks. When this ordinance came up for passage it was saddled with a "rider" in the shape of a censorship clause.

In arranging a public hearing on the ordinance and stating in the plainest fashion possible the legal impossibility of any official censorship whatever, Mayor Gaynor has rendered an inestimable service to the cause of cinematography. In our opinion his stand in the matter, as indicated by his remarks at the hearing, is the longest step toward the full and final enfranchisement of the motion picture. In seeking for just grounds for a veto of the censorship clause the Mayor need not have looked beyond the manifest absurdity of the Board of Aldermen trying to confer any kind of special authority on the Board of Education. Happily for every friend of the motion picture the Mayor chose the broader topic of censorship for the main theme of the public hearing. What he said in the course of the hearing will be repeated from one end of the country to the other, and we hope that every exhibitor and every organization of exhibitors will stow away his words as the best of arguments in their arsenals. It must be borne in mind that Mayor Gaynor is one of the foremost American jurists of his time. It was the sheer weight of his knowledge, ability and integrity which, without any political assistance whatever, caused his elevation to the appellate bench. He is justly regarded as one of the greatest constitutional experts now living.

Assembled at the hearing before the Mayor were the Rev. J. Lewis Hartsock, President of the Methodist Ministers' Association for New York City; George R. Brennan, representing the Brooklyn Young Republican Club; Gilbert H. Montague, representing the Women's Municipal League; Dr. Walter Laidlaw, Secretary of the Federation of Churches, and the Rev. Charles H. Gilbert, of the Social Service Committee of the Protestant Episcopal Church for the Diocese of New York; Edward P. Lyons, of the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A., and Joseph M. Price, of the Recreation Alliance and the Citizens Union. All the men and societies mentioned were, with the exception of the last two, in favor of the censorship clause. Ex-District Attorney Eugene A. Philbin read a letter from Cardinal Farley, in which the prelate said it was his belief that "the censorship is needed to check a serious menace to the morals of the young."

Like most well-meaning people, thoroughly absorbed in their own pet amendments to the universal scheme of things, these advocates of Aldermen-made censorship calmly and innocently ignored the organic law of the country. They had given so much time to working out the pretty details of their censorial systems that they had no leisure left for a perusal of the constitution of the State of New York. We are told by the reporters that speaker after speaker was asked by the Mayor what he thought about the constitutionality of the censorship plan, but there was no reply given except such as may be found in complete silence. Some of the speakers no doubt were bored by the Mayor's persistence and secretly wondered what in the name of Reform the constitution had to do with the question anyway. Finally the Mayor sent for a copy of the old instrument, and sure enough he found a passage there which seemed very germane to the question of censorship. "No law," His Honor read to the astounded shouters for official censorship, "shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press."

Before the relationship between the constitution and their censorship enterprises had had time to percolate, the Mayor had this to say to the amateur statesmen:

> An attempt to censor the press has never been made in this State before. Our founders did away with the censorship because it had been abused so much. They did not permit the censoring of religion. As the representatives of the various denominations have come before me to-day, I have thought that each one of you has been under a censor at some time or other. That's the spirit in which I approached this. If this ordinance is legal here it may be equally applicable to the press if the Aldermen choose to pass it.

Therein lies the crux of the whole question. If the press and speech are free, by what manner of logic is liberty to be denied to the motion picture? For years The Moving Picture World has urged and advocated the legal enfranchisement of the motion picture. In our issue of August 12, 1911, we had this to say about the legal rights of the motion picture as compared with the newspaper:

> The discrimination of the law between the moving picture exhibitor and the newspaper is an absolute injustice. Any man, as our laws stand today, with enough money to buy the needful type and hire the needful help can publish a newspaper and there is no censorship, no license, no attempt of control by the State. He may devote the columns of his paper both in print or picture to the delineation of crime and the description of moral cesspools and the invasion of privacy and no one may call him to account except through long and wearisome proceedings at law. It is urged that the freedom of the press is "the bulwark of our liberties." Then why not extend this same liberty to the moving picture, which pursues in a more effective manner precisely those objects, for which the press is assumed to work; enlightenment, education, amusement and information? Every man according to the constitution is free to write and publish what he chooses, being responsible for the abuse of such freedom only. Why assume that the newspaper publisher, who works with types, is far less likely to abuse his privilege than the moving picture exhibitor, who works with moving pictures?

It will be observed that the Mayor's opinion coincides almost literally with the views we expressed more than a year ago.

Do we mean to say there should be no censorship or regulation of any kind? Not at all. The manufacturers and exhibitors of moving pictures are even now responsible under the law of libel for any injury they may do to individuals. A verdict of punitive damages has but recently been given to a man who complained that his privacy has been invaded and his name and picture had been used without authority by a producer of moving pictures. The manufacturer and exhibitor responsible for the making and showing of immoral, criminal and obscene pictures can be dealt with by the police authorities under laws now on the statute book. We need no legislative and official censorship of any kind. What we do need is just what we have: a civic body, fairly representative in its composition of the best sentiment in the community, deriving its jurisdiction from the consent of the manufacturers, who voluntarily submit their productions for examination and approval. In other words, there can be no censorship except the kind exercised by public sentiment. When it is time for the police to act, the film is beneath censorship, and is suppressed just as any other nuisance is abated by the police. The police, as we have pointed out, are scavengers, not censors. They do not "censor" a burglar, but immediately convey him to jail.

The best and decisive influences for the right kind of censorship must come from within the ranks of the different groups of manufacturers themselves. High standards of ethics and criticism in the motion picture journals constitute another important factor working for real and effective censorship. We view with honest suspicion any censorial propositions fathered by such virtuous and eminent statesmen as Alderman Dowling and other able exponents of Tammany ethics.

Mayor Gaynor's Veto

Text of His Honor's Letter to the Board of Aldermen on the Picture Ordinance.

THE Folks ordinance, which had been amended just prior to its passage by the New York Board of Aldermen by the addition of a censorship provision, tacked on and accepted by the Tammany and Fusion Aldermen at the last moment, was vetoed by Mayor W. J. Gaynor in a letter made public on Tuesday. Mayor Gaynor sends the entire ordinance back to the Aldermen with the suggestion that the original ordinance prepared by a committee appointed by him and without the censorship provision be again considered by the Aldermen and passed in that shape.

Mayor Gaynor writes one of his characteristic letters and gives lots of information to the Aldermen about censorship, saying that it is an evidence of a tendency backwards and says that the enforcement of such a provision would lead to endless confusion and would entail the liberties of a free press and free speech.

It was said at the City Hall today that the Aldermen could not command enough votes to pass the ordinance over the mayor's veto and at the present writing it looks as if censorship by the city officials is a dead letter.

We give the entire correspondence in regard to the subject:

CITY OF NEW YORK.
Office of the Mayor.
December 27, 1912.

To the Honorable the Board of Aldermen:

Gentlemen—I return disapproved the proposed ordinance, No. 89, entitled:

"An ORDINANCE relative to motion picture theaters."

I am constrained to do this because of the provisions therein creating a censorship. It is provided that the Board of Education shall appoint one or more censors to examine all motion pictures in advance and determine whether they shall be exhibited or not.

It has hitherto been the understanding in this country that no censorship can be established by law to decide in advance what may or may not be lawfully printed or published. Ours is a government of free speech and a free press. That is the cornerstone of free government. The phrase "the press" includes all methods of expression by writing or pictures. In past ages there were censorships to decide what might be published, or even believed. Every Christian denomination has at one time or another been subjected to such censorship. The few were very anxious not to give freedom of speech or of the press. They thought the many were not fit for it. They therefore set themselves up as censors and guardians over the bulk of their fellow men. The center of thought was then among the few, and they were very anxious to keep it there. But in the course of time, in spite of all opposition, the center of thought began to pass from the few to the many, where it is today. It was then that censorships, and all interference with freedom of speech, of the press and of opinion, began to give way by degrees, until in the end all of them, at all events, eventually were abolished. And that is now substantially true under all free governments throughout the world.

In our fundamental instruments of government in this country, which we call constitution, we expressly guaranteed from the beginning free speech and a free press, and prohibited the passing of any law abridging the same. The provision in the constitution of this state on that subject, which is substantially the same as the like provision in the constitution of the United States, and also of the states generally, is as follows:

"Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press."

So universal has been the opinion that these constitutional provisions abolished all censorship of the press, and forbade them in the future, that I have been able to find only one attempt in this country to set up such a censorship before this one of yours. Our constitutional provision plainly is that publications whether oral, or printed, or by writing, or by pictures, shall not be restrained in advance, but that every one shall be free to speak or publish what he sees fit, subject to being prosecuted afterwards for libel, immorality, obscenity or indecency therefor. There seem to be a few among us who wish us to retrace our steps, and resort to censorships again in advance of publication, and make it a crime to publish anything not permitted in advance by the censor. Do they know what they are doing? Do they know anything of the history and literature of the subject? Do they know that the censorships of past ages did immeasurably more harm than good? Do they ever stop to think that such censorships now would do even more harm than they did in past ages, in comparison with what little good they might possibly do? I do not believe the people of this country are ready to permit any censor to decide in advance what may be published for them to read, or what pictures may be exhibited to them. Our laws forbid the publication of any libelous, obscene, indecent, immoral or impure literature or reading matter. Is not that enough? If anyone does this he commits a criminal offense and may be punished therefor.

If this ordinance be legal, then a similar ordinance in respect of the newspapers and the theaters generally would be legal. Are you of opinion that you have any such power as that? If so, you should probably begin with the newspapers and the so-called high class theaters. Once revive the censorship and there is no telling how far we may carry it. These moving picture shows are attended by the great bulk of the people, many of whom cannot afford to pay the prices charged by the theaters. They are a solace and an education to them. Why are we singling out these people as subjects necessary to be protected by a censorship? Are they any more in need of protection by censorship than the rest of the community? That was once the view which prevailed in government, and there are some among us, ignorant of or untaught by past ages, who are of that view now. Are they better than the rest of us, or worse?

When I became Mayor the denunciation of these moving picture shows by a few people was at its highest. They declared them schools of immorality. They said indecent and immoral pictures were being shown there. I personally knew that was not so. But I had an official examination made of all the moving picture shows in this city. The result was actual proof and an official report that there were no obscene or immoral pictures shown in these places. And that is the truth now. Wherefore then is all this zeal for censorship over these places?

The truth is that the good, moral people who go to these moving picture shows, and very often bring their children with them, would not tolerate the exhibition of obscene or immoral pictures there. A place in which such pictures were exhibited would soon be without sufficient patrons to support it. At all events, the criminal law is ample to prevent the exhibition of such pictures. I have asked these people who are crying out against the moving picture shows to give us an instance of an obscene or immoral picture being shown in them, so that the exhibitor may be prosecuted, but they have been unable to do so. What they insist on is to have the pictures examined in advance, and allowed or prohibited. That is what they are still doing in Russia with pictures and with reading matter generally. Do they really want us to recur to that system?

Perhaps I should say I understand that comparatively few of your honorable body are in favor of the censorship. Many of you voted for the whole ordinance in the belief that the Mayor has the right to veto the censorship provisions and let the rest of the ordinance stand. But I find that the Mayor may not do that. The censorship provisions are not independent of the rest of the ordinance, but interdependent and so connected therewith that the whole ordinance must stand or fall as a whole.

I trust you will pass the ordinance which the commission prepared. It safeguards these most important and wholesome places of amusement physically and morally.

Respectfully,
W. J. GAYNOR,
Mayor.

CITY OF NEW YORK.
Office of the Mayor.
December 27, 1912.

To the Honorable, the Board of Aldermen:

Gentlemen—I am returning proposed ordinances No. 67 and No. 68, the one with regard to the fees for moving picture shows, and the other classifying such shows, so that they can be taken up again and passed with the new ordinance for moving picture shows as a whole, which I trust will be done as soon as possible.

Very truly yours,
W. J. GAYNOR,
Mayor.

Adolf Zukor Talks of Famous Players.

By George Blaisdell.

IT used to be said that of the making of books there was no end. Now it may be said in all truth that of the making of motion pictures there is no end. There is one fact standing out in a survey of the film industry—a fact patent to those who follow pictures day in and day out—and this is that, so far as the public is concerned, there is today as much room for new producing companies, good ones, as there has been at any time. The entrance into the field of a well-equipped organization gives matter for congratulation on the part of picturegoers. The effect is cumulative. Not only will it add to existing programs; it will stimulate the manufacturers already in the field—serve as a tonic, if you will, so that there will be steady effort on the part of ambitious men to keep at the head of the procession.

The Moving Picture World learns through Adolf Zukor, the president of the Famous Players' Film Company, that this organization intends materially to extend its field of activities. Much has been printed as to the stage stars who will appear on the screen under its brand—James O'Neill and James K. Hackett, whose best works have already been reduced to film; William Faversham and Julie Opp, the next on the list, who will produce the success in which they are now starring, "Julius Caesar"; Minnie Maddern Fiske, Viola Allen, Mrs. Leslie Carter, Henry E. Dixie, Weber & Fields and Lillian Langtry. As the work of adequately putting on these productions involves so much detail and care, it is intended to devote sixty days to each. In arranging for the marketing of these plays there has been built up a machine which it is found can with advantage handle other productions. Confronted with requests from its agents for more pictures, the Famous Players Company has decided on the formation of two stock companies, the principals to be taken from the legitimate stage. The first of these is so well under way that already four women and five men well known to playgoers have been engaged. The companies will work independently. It is expected that the entire casts will be announced by the middle of January. Each company will produce one play a month. Probably a majority of these will be in two reels, although it is intended to make single reels as well.

Daniel Frohman has become enamored of moving picture work. His experience with Edwin S. Porter in making "The Prisoner of Zenda" was his first in the silent drama, but he liked it so well that hereafter he will give much of his time to it, collaborating with Mr. Porter in future productions. Mr. Hackett's drama, by the way, will be released on January 25. With the exception of one or two scenes which require a visit South in order to obtain suitable temperature of the water everything is finished and Mr. Hackett's company has resumed its tour. The booking of the film is practically completed.

"We have disposed of the 'Sarah Bernhardt' pictures to states rights buyers," said Mr. Zukor. "We have sounded all of these men as to the possibilities of our future productions, and they agree to take all they can get of them. We have placed no restrictions as to the price to be charged to see these pictures, even though they are elaborate and expensive. Our aim is to have them within reach of the people who cannot afford to pay more than ten cents. I don't agree with the men who say we should charge 50 cents and a dollar for big productions. We believe that we are doing a sort of missionary work for the higher art—that we are aiding in the cultivation of a taste for better things. While of course we feel that our productions would command higher prices we want to encourage people to go to them. It may not be to our financial advantage at the beginning, but in the end it will undoubtedly."

Referring to the fact that Mr. Faversham and Miss Opp will be pictured in a play in which they are now starring, Mr. Zukor was asked if there was any feeling on the part of stars that the exhibition on the screen contemporaneous with a stage presentation would in any measure militate against the financial success of the latter. "In the beginning," Mr. Zukor replied, "when we first broached the question to the different stars, they were more or less afraid of it. When they learned the elaborate manner in which we are going to stage their productions their attitude changed. They saw that it would be to their advantage, that it would arouse popular interest not only in their productions but in their personalities as well."

Mr. Zukor emphasized the point that the Famous Players Company is building on a permanent basis. "We realize," he said, "that we are undertaking something that many manufacturers have tried to do or thought of doing, but fortunately we are so situated that we can carry out our plans. We aim to impress educated people, and feel that we are going to succeed."

Mr. Zukor said that one of the objects sought by the director of the Famous Players is the elimination of sub-titles or at least the reduction of the number. "We are trying to let the story tell itself so far as possible," said he; "to do this we are introducing more scenes and connecting links."

Brander Matthews, of Columbia College, has made an offer to the Famous Players Company to preserve in his private collection a copy of every film made by the company and to make suitable provision for the conveyance of these at his death to some organization which will guarantee their care. The offer has been accepted absolutely. That this fact will be the strongest inducement to all the players of the American stage to impel them to consent to portraying their work for the screen needs no saying. James O'Neill was so pleased with "Monte Cristo" that he has decided to present a copy of the film to one of the clubs with which he is connected.

A bit of news of deep interest to all picturegoers, and significant as indicating the steady progression of moving pictures, was contained in the announcement of Mr. Zukor that his company is now negotiating with several well-known authors for original scenarios. He is not quite ready to reveal their identity, but will be shortly. These stories will be produced by the stock companies now forming.

“Duty and the Man.’.

A Two-Part Melodramatic Subject by Reliance.

THIS substantial, well-made melodrama, in two reels, is worthy of attention. The cleverness with which, at its climax, the heroine finds a way out of her difficulties by a means unexpected and novel gives it much freshness. It is one of those convincing improbabilities and shows that the scenario writer has mastered the art of effect planning, for as shown it is not only plausible but seems, while we are watching, the natural and inevitable solution of the heroine's problem as she finds it. Such incidents add doubly to the final impression of a picture, because they not only enchance the heroine's character, showing her as a competent woman which appeals to our admiration and deepens our interest in her, but the incident itself, not thought of by us before, gives us something of a new sensation.

The situation is new, although Philip Steel, a character we have seen before in Reliance pictures of the North Woods, appears in it. The place is near the border between the States and Canada, and the story deals with three men and a woman. One of these men, an old-time magnanimous lover of the girl, is placed in an official position as the head of police, and, as the story, in which the woman who has married the young quarryman (Jim) is hounded by her husband's rich employer (Hodges) develops he acts as the power for good and is the indirect means of bringing the happy ending.

Scenes from “Duty and the Man” (Reliance).

At Jess's wedding to Jim, MacGregor, the police official, writes this in her album: “Follow your conscience, both God and man will reward you in the end.” And the paper on which this sentiment is written plays an important part in the outcome. Not the whole story of Hodges' pursuit of Jess is pictured at the time it happens We see that he gives Jim a job in the big stone works owned by him, and we see that Jess repels advances he makes to her. Jim comes home one evening and finds her struggling in Hodges' arms. There's a fight and Hodges is shot through the arm. He accuses Jim of an attempt to kill him and, in spite of the wife's plea, Jim is taken into custody by the local authorities. Jess pleads with MacGregor to release Jim, but this being unlawful, the inspector sends Philip Steel to investigate the case.

The second reel is taken up mostly with the carrying out of the woman's brilliant idea for convincing the deputy of her husband's innocence. She and her friends, of whom there are many, tie this deputy up, gag him and close him in a big box with the intention of compelling him to overhear Hodges “give himself away.” The box is taken to Hodges' home. The woman follows. The conversation that she and Hodges have, pictures (in double exposure scenes) all that has transpired between her and the man. He thinks the box that has been brought in contains books and is entirely unsuspicious of any trap and entirely unconstrained in his brazen admission of many things that it would have been wiser for him to have locked in his own heart. He not unnaturally thinks that the woman has come to him, now that her husband is in jail, perhaps to buy him off by a reluctant submission to his will. She again accuses him of the brutal advances of which he has been guilty, and he retaliates by renewing them.

All this the man in the box sees and overhears. She is in danger again and he strains at his bonds hoping to free himself and come to her assistance, but the cords are too strong. Hodges is surprised at finding the woman in the strange mood. It exasperates him to hear her make new accusations against him after she has put herself in his power by coming alone to his house. That she again indignantly repels his embraces works him up to a fury. As he wrestles with her, she tries to get the gun from the holster at his side and does manage to draw it out, but at once he catches it from her. In the tussle it goes off and he is killed by a bullet through the heart. Jess is almost overcome with horror at what has happened and for a moment stands dumfounded, then remembering that the nearest help is the man in the box, rushes toward it. We see her face, wild eyed from terror coming toward the hole through we are looking, a hole left so that the deputy might see all that transpired.

The action that the now released deputy takes is dictated to him by his own conscience. He has found the leaf torn out of the album of Jess, the one on which MacGregor had written, “Follow your conscience, both God and man will reward you for it in the end.” The death of Hodges has complicated the case and he sees that the quickest, if not the best way out of the difficulty, is to help Jim and his wife out of the Dominion into the States where, after he has given his evidence, they will be safe from molestation. But it takes a subterfuge to free Jim who is being held by the local authorities. Without letting any one know what his intentions are, he comes to the jail and, as an unknown masked sympathizer, holds up the officer on guard there, who is then bound and made to take Jim's place in the cell. Jim is given a horse, directed to get Jess and hurry to the railroad station. Later the deputy appears, seems surprised to find that the prisoner has escaped, and himself takes up the chase which of course is fruitless.

That in the story there is much that is improbable can not be denied, but the producer, Oscar Apfel; has conducted his story so smoothly that we see it through a veil of plausibility that leads us, while it is being enacted, into a symathetic frame of mind that makes us uncritical and keeps us in suspense while the pretty heroine's fates are still in the balance. Gertrude Robinson takes the role of Jess and fills it with all her well-known distinction. Her beauty and the sympathetic way in which she sets forth the characters she takes, adds much to this and has added much to many another picture. Her qualities make her one of the very best actresses in romantic roles to be found in picturedom. James Ashley, as Hodges, has the second most important role, the villain, and provides plenty of good contrast by skillful acting. Charles Elliot as Jim, the husband, has a part that doesn't call for any very imaginative work, but acts naturally and smoothly, doing his part with the rest to make the offering effective. Irving Cummings, who plays the deputy skillfully, is well-known. He has taken many roles and is noticable for the marked improvement over his work of two years ago. He has lost his self-consciousness and is now a natural and competent actor. George Seitmann plays the inspector of police. His role dropped out of the picture after the first few scenes and gave him little chance, but he is acceptable and should not be overlooked as an important adjunct to the picture.

Two Fine Edison Themes

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT is rather remarkable that two photodramas based on ground for intellectual action and handled in such a masterly manner that they represent the very latest ideas of double exposure should lack in anything, but there is a common fault in "The Man He Might Have Been" and "The Dancer" which is, for that matter, characteristic of nine plays out of ten shown on the screen—the requisite tension is lacking. It is partially covered in these two releases by superb quality of production, the delightful presentation of the subject matter compensating heavily for the absence of suspense in the stories.

"The Man He Might Have Been" leaves the barren ground of convention and ventures diffidently into a beautiful field of thought—one which will bear treatment in the largest sort of way. The greatest of modern writers are reaching some unexpected conclusions on the relation of remarkable men to the educational resources of the locality in which they were brought up, arriving at their new views by exhaustive investigations and careful elimination of false theories based on limited knowledge of the subject, and these conclusions are not so surprising to the plain, ordinary man as to some of the most brilliant scientists of a few years ago.

Scene from "The Man He Might Have Been" (Edison).

Francis Galton, best known from his studies of heredity, and Paul Jacoby, French authority on the same subject, contended that education played no appreciable part in the making of great men; Lombroso entertained the same view, and a long list of eminent writers held irreconcilably to the pre-efficient idea, but the data they gathered is now being used to contradict their own arguments. The surprising part to the layman now is that authors of such rank, who were devoting their lives to the study of the genesis of genius, should be so unanimous in rejecting education as any considerable factor in the making of a great man.

The tremendous role that education plays in the career of every man has long been a matter of common appreciation among Americans, and the whole country is now in the throes of devising superior methods of teaching on the sensible ground that the human brain is merely soil, rich or poor, and knowledge the seed to be planted there to grow according to the nourishment it receives if permitted by the uncontrollable power of circumstances. To the support of this thesis come De Candolle, Alfred Odin, August Weisman and a long line of brilliant writers who are men of the hour.

Joseph Mazzini, in his address to workingmen, summed up in forcible words what many of us are convinced is true: "Education is the bread of the soul. Without it you can not acquire a knowledge of your rights and you can not even choose between good and evil—you can not arrive at a definite comprehension of your own mission. Without it all your faculties lie dormant and unfruitful, even as the vital power lies sterile in the seed cast upon untilled soil." Such is the theme treated in the first named Edison release.

Development on the part of the playwright is very inadequate. It is made interesting by some of the most exquisite work in double exposure—to the credit of Director Miller—I have seen in a long time. The story is that of a boy who exhibits a special capacity at school and longs to continue the study of what best suits him—the only way to success. He is taken out in the midst of progress by a practical father, who can see no further than he has gone. He imposes his own limit on his child.

This act proves to be a deflecting agent in the boy's career. He follows the road of drudgery and distasteful employment until it becomes a down-hill path of decadence, though he stops at times to dream of what might have been if he had been given the "bread of the soul" for which he hungered. His thoughts are most delicately portrayed in pictures gradually superimposed, his natural trend being thus contrasted with the power of faulty environment. The motive is to be highly commended, indicating, as it does, that education is one of the truest sources of happiness known to the human race.

Rather less modern in theme is "The Dancer," but again Director Miller has excelled himself, and this time he has given us a gem that will set many experts thinking. Its beauty is so startling, the surprise is so sweet to the eye, that he must be complimented on the originality as well as the development of the conception, unless I have wrongly credited the creative part. But to describe it I will have to tell the story from which it is very naturally evolved.

The play deals with a prejudice that is fast fading away, if, indeed, it exists out of narrow communities—the hypocritical antagonism to dancing. Everybody danced several years ago, when I was a mere kid, and everybody's doing it now, even the children in the parks and public schools. A mother objects to the tendency exhibited in her daughter's conduct—the latter is a natural dancer, delighting in the poetry of motion—and puts the girl to work in a braid mill. She has, however, drawn the attention of a dancing master, and he finds her at work at the whirling loom.

Scene from "The Dancer" (Edison).

The girl, like the boy in the other play, turns her mind to what she loves, and we are afforded an exquisite view of the trend of her thoughts. The whirling loom on which her attention has been concentrated gradually dissolves and is as gradually replaced in exact proportion, form and situation by a whirling bevy of little girls dancing around a May-pole decorated with flowers and ribbons. The girl stands entranced by the mental picture until it gradually fades away and is replaced by the instrument of her daily torture.

The dancing master succeeds in removing the girl from unattractive labor by patient and tolerant methods, including the enlightenment of her bigoted mother; trains her for professional life on the stage and demonstrates that there is such a thing as fitness to be considered in the preparation of children for their future careers. The girl is healthier, happier and more productive as a wage-earner when occupied with an employment for which she was especially equipped by Nature, and which was indicated from the time she was a child. Both themes are worthy of high approval and also of such treatment as would enslave interest from start to finish.

In the Field With Hotaling

Lubin Jacksonville Company Winters in a Boat Club House on the Banks of the St. John's.

"A REGULAR STUDIO," was the way Arthur D. Hotaling described the quarters he had engaged for the winter in Jacksonville, and "regular" studio it is.

This is the second year that the "Boy Director" of the Lubin comedy section has wintered in Jacksonville and he has been exceptionally fortunate in his location this year. Each winter the presence of static electricity above the frost line drives the companies south. Some of them work entirely in exterior scenes, changing the scripts to throw the action out of doors. Others fake scenery with wall paper and wood trim, but few of the gypsy troupers work with much equipment. Three years ago Mr. Hotaling worked south an entire winter with not a stick of scenery and he even made a western mining scene on the seashore because there were no streams in the vicinity. A "brook" was dug in the beach and dressed with stones and brush hauled from above the shore line and no one save those in the company were any the wiser until the travelers returned and the brook was told of as a good joke.

E. W. Sargent, Enjoying a Siesta.

Last season some scenery was carried, but not much, and a house was engaged next a vacant lot where the public hung over the fence and greatly enjoyed the free performance. This year when Mr. Hotaling walked in on Frank Montgomery, that model exhibitor hailed him with the good news that a real location could be had. A boat club in the fashionable Riverside district had given up the ghost. Their house had been turned into a chapel with no great success and Mr. Montgomery was considering pictures in the structure when Mr. Hotaling walked in and changed the plans. The result is the best outdoor studio this side of Los Angeles and a comfort such as few traveling companies enjoy.

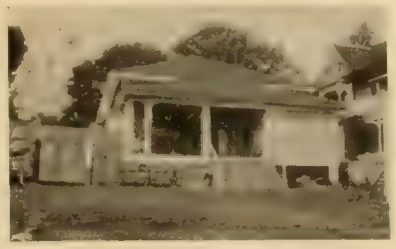
The house fronts on Riverside Avenue, running down to the St. John's river with a private dock right on the lot. The house is about forty feet wide by sixty deep with a porch in front and one at the rear. On either side of the entrance is a comfortable private office and then one passes into a huge room forty by fifty and thirty feet high.

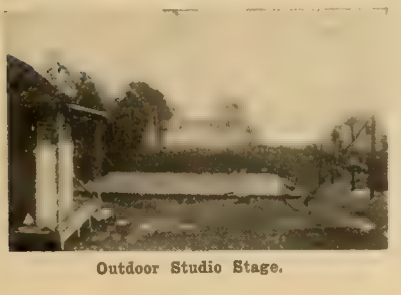
On either side, nearest the entrance are the property and costume rooms and beyond the dressing and dark rooms. In the wide central space large properties and trunks are stored and the entire place is lighted by electricity, though there is no electric studio.

One side of the back porch is used for a scene dock and two small outhouses are used for storage when needed, though their greater use is to tack snake skins against. By next spring the entire comedy section will be fitted out with snake skin slippers, for snakes are by no means unknown on the lot and are still more plentiful close to hand.



The Studio.

The stage is in the open, a bare board platform with a light sun screen. In December days the men of the company spend half their otherwise spare time in working this screen since the sun alternately shines and clouds over with the regularity of an intermittent alarm clock trying to rouse its owner on the morning of the day after. Now and then, by way of variety, a thundershower comes up with tropical suddenness and everybody grabs something and scoots for the shelter of the house. Statistics thus far go to show that they have had two daylight thunder showers that have not happened while a scene was up, but they are getting used to storms now and the soft sunlight filtered through the screen gives a photographic value that no electric studio can afford.



Outdoor Studio Stage.

There is plenty of space beyond the stage for grass scenes with the river and the dock beyond. Standing on the latter the photographer can "shoot" downstream and get the city, or upstream and get a charming vista of handsome residences. The handsomest homes in Jacksonville are within the radius of a mile from the studio and beyond may be had characteristic woods and stream while a small but beautifully kept park is but three blocks away.

Miss Julia Calhoun.

The yard is fenced in so that the company can work in quiet though there are several benches that generally are occupied by visitors, for the Lubin Company has made many friends, but a majority of the scenes are made outside the studio to the great delight of the small black boys who replace the delivery wagons of the north. Every grocer, butcher and baker maintains from two to twelve delivery boys each with a bicycle in the last stages of repair, and these pedal about the well paved streets with baskets on the handle bars. At best they are slow and lazy, but days when the "Lubiners" are out housekeepers get supplies only after the company has returned to the studio. Sometimes fifteen or twenty delivery boys form part of the audience, not counting the children on foot.

Breaking loose from tradition, the Hotaling company is not housed under one roof, but is divided among the apartment houses in the vicinity of the studio. Their home life is a thing entirely apart from the studio and the scheme works far better than where the players are together all their waking hours.

In the evening the Grand theater, the leading Montgomery house, is the centre of attraction for the men. Stand in front of the Grand between seven and nine and you are pretty certain to run into most of the company coming to see the pictures or stopping for a chat. Mr. Hotaling's personal car has its own standing place in front of the theater along with Mr. Montgomery's and together they have fine hunting in their little comedy sketch entitled "Want to earn two dollars?"

Mr. Hotaling and Miss Hotely Discussing a Scene.

It is worked with all sorts of variations, but the essence is the waylaying of some cullud gentleman and asking him if he wants to earn two dollars for an hour's work. Very naturally he does, but he grows suspicious when he is told to see a certain physician. Sometimes the discussion is terminated right there by the abrupt departure of the darkey with the emphatic statement that he does not desire to earn the money of any physician, but generally they last through the added fact that they must drive a horse and that if they will see the doctor at midnight he will provide a horse and a flash lamp with which to find "them." It is a brave darkey indeed who lasts to the point where it is explained that he is supposed to drive back from the cemetery with three corpses on the back seat and holding in a fourth on the seat beside him. The coup de grace is the casual question as to whether one of the defunct passengers died of yellow fever or small pox. Out of about five thousand negroes approached in the last two years but four of them have held out to the end, to be rewarded with a coin. The expression on the black faces as the idea gradually dawns upon them and their efforts to back gracefully out of the situation without betraying their fears are excruciatingly funny.

Cameraman at Work.

When the company arrived in Jacksonville this winter the city was under martial law on account of the car strike and street work was forbidden because of the likelihood of attracting crowds that might prove unmanageable. Before the militia was recalled Mr. Hotaling got a fine military comedy with everyone from the Adjutant down acting in the picture. It makes an able companion picture to last season's A Gay Time in Jacksonville when the entire municipal forces were placed at the director's disposal as well as the local company of militia. Jacksonville is nice to the picture people when the picture people are nice to them, and Mr. Hotaling can borrow anything from a policeman to the City Hall because they know he will return what he borrows.

Working in the field with the Lubin section is anything but a hardship. It's quite the reverse—except when those blamed thunder showers entail a marathon betheen stage and dryness.

MR. TAFT'S PARTY RETURNS FROM PANAMA.

On December 31st, L. J. Simons, cameraman of the Feature Film Manufacturing Company of Washington, returned from the Panama Canal, where he had been with the presidential party during Mr. Taft's inspection of the canal. "During a number of years' experience as a cameraman I have never had the privilege of taking such a remarkable set of pictures," said Mr. Simons. "In addition to the presidential inspection, many of the features were photographed for the first time, and under the most favorable conditions, as they were at their best for the official inspection by the President—the first inspection of this nature. All the great mechanical and engineering features were taken in actual operation, showing the wonderful ingenuity and engineering skill of the army of workers which have made this maritime highway possible. All the locks were opened and closed, controlling the enormous masses of water passing through them. The mammoth spillway of the Gatun Dam was operated, the seas rushing through into the Chagres River, the overflow filling the artificially created Lake Gatun."

GILBERT M. ANDERSON VISITS NEW YORK.

Gilbert M. Anderson, secretary of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company and leading man of his own Western company, has taken a leave of absence from his studio at Niles, Cal., and during the holidays has been paying a visit to his mother in New York City. Mr. Anderson, who is a life member of the Screen Club, and also first vice-president of that organization, dropped in at the clubrooms on West 45th Street and was extended the glad hand by all the members present. Mr. Anderson had not been in New York for a year. It was in this city, by the way, that the creator of the popular "Broncho Billy" pictures did his first work in the silent drama, and where he was among the first to realize the possibilities of motion pictures.

WORLD'S BEST TO MAKE ANIMAL PICTURES.

A company of 25 persons has during the past week left for Jacksonville to make animal pictures for the World's Best Film Company. The work will be under the direction of Harold Shaw. Joe Graybill, formerly of the Biograph, will be the leading man. An active participator in the making of the pictures will be Bonavita, who has with him a group of 25 lions and a number of hyenas.

E. P. SULLIVAN IN "THE BELLS."

The Reliance will present Mr. E. P. Sullivan as "Mathias" in "The Bells," on January 22nd, as a special two-reel feature. Mr. Sullivan is an actor of long experience and recognized ability, so "The Bells" will make an interesting picture for more reasons than one, especially as Mr. Sullivan has long been identified with Reliance films.

KINEMACOLOR SHOWS PANAMA PICTURES

Before a large audience at Carnegie Hall on the evening of Monday, December 30th, the Kinemacolor Company gave its premier presentation of the Panama Canal pictures, consisting of seven reels, and "Scenes from the Balkan War," in five reels. A fine orchestra discoursed music during the evening. The applause of the guests of the company attested their hearty enjoyment of the evening's entertainment.

WARNER'S FEATURE NOTES.

Mr. Warner has received word from Sidney Olcott, director of the Gene Gauntier Feature Players, that he is building at Jacksonville a developing and dark room. The company, whose pictures will be distributed through the agency of Warner's Features, plans to remain in the Florida city for three months.

Maurice Feingold of Pittsburg has assumed charge of the Indianapolis office of Warner's Features.

Jack Warner is now in command of the office at Kansas City, and in future will make his home in that town.

DUSTIN FARNUM VISITS UNIVERSAL'S RANCH.

Dustin Farnum, playing in Los Angeles recently in "The Littlest Rebel," made a visit to the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal company. Mr. Farnum had a busy day, among other things donning a cowboy's outfit and appearing in one of Mr. Montgomery's big scenes. Many of the Universal boys were Mr. Farnum's guests at his performance that evening.

Another of the Universal's recent visitors was Jack Kerrigan, of the American company, located at Santa Barbara. He received such a hearty reception that he has pledged himself to call again.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

THE collapse of the roof of the Home Theater (a new moving picture house in this city), several weeks ago, has led to a thorough investigation by the authorities and to wide, and almost daily, publicity of the facts. The building inspector explains that the blame for the existence of this death trap was not due to any oversight of his, and the council committee, which has to do with the granting of special permits, also refuses to shoulder the responsibility. However, that a structure was permitted to be run as a death trap for women and children, when the steel girders supporting the roof would withstand only a pressure of 34,000 pounds to the square inch, when the resistance of a weight of 42,000 pounds was called for, shows laxity of the most dangerous kind. How fortunate that the house was empty at the time of collapse, both for the good name of the city and for the interests of the moving picture!

Great good will result from the investigation, which is being made with merciless vigor. Already has Building Commissioner Ericsson suspended three of his inspectors—two of them in connection with the acceptance of bribes for permitting violations, and a third for inattention to duty. Klafter, the architect of the Home Theater, has been handled without gloves, and R. Goldstein, the owner of the theater, has been taught the lesson of his life. It has been shown that Goldstein received the following letter from F. E. Davidson, an architect, whose opinion he requested regarding the safety of his theater:

"I beg to advise you that your building is absolutely unsafe and that it should be closed by the police power of the city. You are assuming a fearful financial responsibility personally in permitting this building to be occupied." And yet this warning was unheeded, to the very near destruction of hundreds of precious lives! Every exhibitor should feel that he is responsible for the lives of his patrons, while in his theater, so far as it is in his power to safeguard them.

Henceforth roof tests will be made of all suspected theaters in Chicago to prevent such a collapse as took place in the Home Theater.

Another good influence exerted by the wreck of the Home Theater is a reconsideration of the dangerous loft theaters that were ordered closed several months ago, and which are at present operating under court injunctions. Corporation Counsel Sexton has formally declared his intention to push the cases against the loft houses.

"It has been the custom," he said, "when orders are issued against a theater and it takes the case into court, for the attorneys to agree that conditions remain as they are at the time until the matter has been passed on by a court.

"A case is taken into a court where there is not time to consider it at once, and the attorneys agree that, until the judge can give it attention, conditions shall remain as they exist. Later the judge may issue or deny an injunction.

"I have instructed my assistants to follow this policy no longer, but to insist upon a hearing at the earliest possible moment and make no agreements. This will put the matter directly up to the courts.

"The legal department does not wish to take the responsibility for keeping any place open after the building department has ordered it closed."

The local branch of the M. P. E. L. of America, in every city, should rigorously insist that every moving picture theater afford as perfect safety to its patrons as the larger theaters.

Otis Skinner Praises Moving Pictures.

Contrary to the usual attitude assumed by actors toward the moving picture shows, Otis Skinner, at the City Club, St. Louis, recently, commended moving pictures as being thoroughly worth while, often educational and always furnishing a cheap form of entertainment for the masses.

He lamented their influence, however, in depriving the legitimate theaters of their gallery audiences, where approval takes audible form instead of being suppressed by the conventionality which prevails in the parquet and balcony.

"Nowadays," said Mr. Skinner, "we see a yawning chasm where once the gallery 'gods' held sway. I would there were some way to call this audience back, but it seems impossible.

"In order that the younger generation be not deprived of the best the theater affords, it seems to me that such organizations as your City Club should devote themselves to providing a city theater, subsidized from public funds, where standard plays could be produced at cheap prices.

"The theater has become such a vital factor in the life of the country that we must not allow it to lapse. Though many theaters are suffering for want of patronage, I still believe that the future of the theaters is assured."

The Selection of Moving Picture Programs.

By personal observation, and from the opinions expressed by many exhibitors, I am more strongly inclined to the belief that picture theater programs should be selected by the exhibitor himself, in so far as present conditions will permit his doing so. The exhibitor is in close touch with his patrons and, if he be intelligent and up to date, he has learned to know what they prefer in pictures. His box office is the pulse that registers the success or non-success of his entertainments, allowing for variations caused by weather conditions.

Success in any business, which depends on the sale of what one has to offer, lies in one's possessing the things that patrons want. They must be suited, irrespective of the cost. The exhibitor, therefore, must delicately sense the desires of his patrons and offer them programs that will please and entertain.

The high class audiences of several moving picture theaters, which I know, will have none of your slapstick comedy and little or none of wild west melodrama. They prefer high class drama and comedy, historical subjects, travelogues and scenics, etc,, and well varied programs of such subjects. And so along the list, with patrons of varying tastes. The aim is to please them, and win their regular attendance.

It is growing more apparent every day that no man in the booking office of an exchange can select programs that will suit these audiences of varying tastes. His is merely a mechanical selection, taken at random from the films at his disposal. The intelligent selection of the exhibitor is what is needed, and we need more intelligent exhibitors. The real showman can read his patrons like a book, and he contrives to spring as many delightful surprises as possible. There is no hope for the non-intelligent showman.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Joseph Hopp, president of the Standard Film exchanges, of Chicago and Louisville, has received a magnificent gold-headed cane from the manager and employees of the Louisville branch, as a Christmas present. H. W. Fulton, manager of Mr. Hopp's Princess Theater, Dubuque, Ia., has also sent, as a Christmas present, a five-piece lacquered smoking set. Joe does not smoke, but his son does, and so the set comes in all right.

NO WONDER THE ACTORS LOOKED CAREFUL!

President Hite, of Thanhouser, believes in realism. He believes in real fires, real runaways and real rescues when called for in the scenario—and now in real bonds. There was a story called "The Evidence of the Film," in his director's hands for production, that called for the employment of some bonds; and Mr. Hite immediately sent to the National City Bank of New Rochelle, for $20,000 worth. Likely if someone in the studio had "faked up" a bundle of bonds you would never know the difference if you saw the picture, but still Mr. Hite has the satisfaction of knowing that his actors were handling the real article, and looked in the film as if they were! They were as careful as a man would naturally be in fingering $20,000 of real money. The picture is released, Friday, Jan. 10th.

Reel Club Takes New Name; Now The Photoplayers—Fund for William Paley—Notes from the Studios.

"THIS is the greatest production ever made since motion photography was invented," General Manager Kennedy, head of the Universal forces in California, telegraphed to the Universal headquarters in New York, December 22d, announcing that Director Otis Turner had just completed "Sheridan's Ride."

Although it was a superlative statement that Kennedy made, it was made in all sincerity. He and all the other members of the Universal staff who had anything to do with the production really believe that another genuine classic has been added to the list of notable films. Judging by the scenes the writer saw taken, and by the accounts of spectators of the others, the Universal company has produced three reels of war pictures which will once again call the attention of the public to the fact that motion pictures have become a serious, dignified and important department of art.

With only a couple of minor variations, the picture accurately follows the most authentic historical accounts of Sheridan's ride and the events leading up to it. There are about 500 feet of actual battle which cost to produce more than twice as much as all the rest of the 2,500 feet. A military expert was engaged by the company to plan and rehearse the battle so that it would be historically correct. The battle scene had to be staged on Sunday—an unusual day for work at the Universal plant—because practically every militiaman in Southern California was engaged in the sham battle. The cost of the picture has not been counted up, but it will reach a staggering sum, for in addition to hiring more than 500 extra people and as many horses, the company was obliged to rent and purchase a great quantity of costumes, artillery and other properties.

Reel Club Changes Its Name.

"The Photoplayers" is the permanent name which has been adopted for the club of motion picture people recently formed in this city, under the temporary name of the Reel Club. The new name was selected by a popular vote of the members at a regular meeting held the night of December 21st. Among the names which were balloted on but rejected were "Film Club," "Silent Drama League," "Photo Reel Club," "Cinema Club" and "The Photoplayers' Club." The members liked "The Photoplayers," but rejected the word "club" in connection with it.

The articles of incorporation have been completed and have been forwarded to the State capitol at Sacramento, to be filed with the Secretary of State. They designate the club as a social organization with the widest powers and activities. Under the wording of the articles the organization may engage in almost any activity that can be imagined, providing it is undertaken for the purpose of entertaining or benefiting its membership.

A committee is still at work trying to find permanent club quarters which will be a credit to the organization, and which members will be proud to show to visiting motion picture people from the East. At the rate the motion picture industry is growing in this city it seems certain that the Los Angeles club will eventually become the largest of its kind in the world. Already the membership exceeds 150, with a long list of applications pending.

A new project which has grown out of the new club is a movement among the women engaged in the producing end of the industry to form an organization of their own on similar lines. They are very secretive about their plans, but it is reported that a committee has already been formed to arrange the preliminaries.

Fund Established for Unfortunate Cameraman.

Voluntary subscriptions which have come to Fred Mace, president of The Photoplayers, on behalf of William Paley, now amount to $250. With this sum as a nucleus, Mace has opened an account at a local bank, in the name of The William Paley Fund, and has named three trustees, including himself, to administer it until better arrangements can be made.

Paley was employed by the Nestor Film Company as a cameraman, when, last March, while photographing mountain scenery in California, he was thrown out of a wagon and hurled over a cliff. His right leg was broken, and afterward an infection set in. Several operations were performed at a local hospital, in a vain effort to check the infection, but finally, a week ago, the surgeons decided that it was necessary to amputate the leg below the knee. Meanwhile the little savings he had accumulated were spent, and when Fred Mace learned of his plight he was practically destitute. Paley is nearly 70 years old, and his wife, who is wholly dependent upon him, is past 70. Temporary aid was rendered by the local Masonic lodges, and Mace, through The Moving Picture World, appealed to Paley's many friends in the industry for assistance. In response to this appeal about $250 has been received.

Paley is one of the oldest cameramen in the motion picture industry and has a wide circle of acquaintances, many of whom have prospered exceedingly and could give him material assistance if they were so disposed. Since the amputation Paley has been making rapid recovery, but his impediment, coupled with his age, will make it difficult for him to support himself and his wife. He will never be able to operate a camera again. One of the local studios has offered him temporary employment, as soon as he is able to leave the hospital, patching film, but the wages are small and the employment uncertain. It is Mace's plan to appeal directly to Paley's friends, asking them to contribute to the fund so that a nest egg can be accumulated for him which will make it possible for him to establish some kind of a little business which will support the aged couple for the rest of their lives.

What the Studios Are Doing.

The completion of the first three-reel production undertaken since the company arrived in Southern California indicates that the Monopol Feature Film Company is comfortably established. For the time being the members of the company are obliged to share the grounds in Hollywood with outsiders, for carpenters are at work erecting bungalows and other buildings. Director Taylor evidently believes in beauty as much as utility, for he is turning the property, which was a lemon grove when he bought it, into a luxurious Italian villa. When it is completed according to the plans it will be the most beautiful, though not the largest, motion picture studio in Southern California.

Paying for a dead horse is a positive delight compared with what Arthur Mackley, director of the Los Angeles Essanay company, is doing at his Hollywood studio. For the last week Mackley has been re-taking pictures which were supposed to be perfect, but turned out to be utterly worthless. He will be engaged with re-takes for several weeks longer, for there are nine full reels that have to be made over from start to finish. For several weeks there has been an undetected defect in the camera which Mackley has been using. It turned out pictures photographically perfect, but played such havoc with the perforations that the pictures made on it could not by any possibility be kept on the screen when they came to be projected later. All sorts of devices were tried to make it possible to use the 9,000 feet of perfectly good pictures, but it was no use. In the end Mackley was forced to make the best of hard circumstances.

Twenty-four members of the Thanhouser company have joined the big motion picture colony of Southern California and are now at work, under the direction of Carl L. Gregory, at the old Imp studio. It is the understanding that the company is to remain here permanently.

Director Griffith and the dramatic section of the Biograph company are scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles New Year's Day, to take up their winter quarters at the big Biograph studio, Girard and Georgia Streets, where the comedy section, under the direction of Dell Henderson, has been working for the last two months.

Three new companies have just been added to the Universal group by an order of General Manager Kennedy just issued. Previous to this order there were three Nestor companies, two Bisons, two Powers and two Rex. Charles Insley has been given a directorship and sent to Honolulu with a company of 16 people for an eight weeks' stay. The Universal studio had been accumulating photoplays which called for South Sea Island backgrounds, and Insley took the scripts with him. It has not been decided under what brand his Honolulu pictures will be released. David Wall has been named as director of a new Powers company which has been organized, and the third director is Sidney Ayres, who will direct a new Bison company. This makes a total of 12 Universal companies now in Los Angeles, with five more scheduled to arrive from the East before the close of January.

THE FIRST MOTION PICTURES.

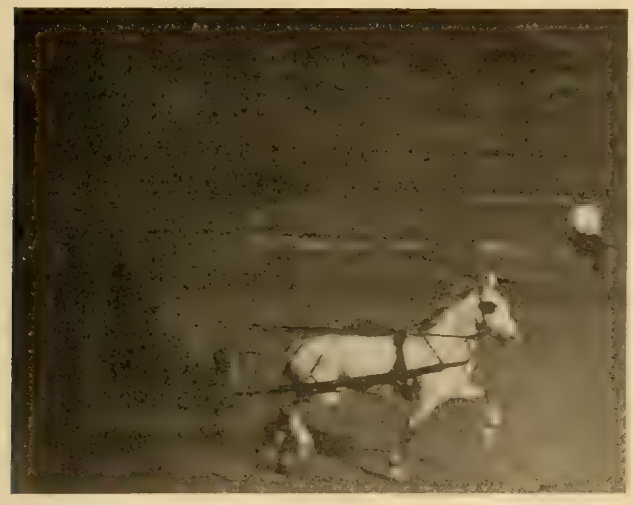
The three pictures on this page are of unusual interest in that they are not only the first pictures of consecutive motion but the actual forerunners of the motion picture of today. They are from the collection of Mr. F. Davey, of Palo Alto, who possesses a number of these pictures. They are loaned The Moving Picture World through the courtesy of Mr. Oliver Kehrlein, of the San Jose Theater, San Jose, California, where Mr. Davey is a regular attendant.



These pictures are nothing less than some of those made by Muybridge at "Lucky" Baldwin's stock farm at Palo Alto. There had been a discussion as to whether a trotting horse ever has all four hoofs off the ground at once, and to settle the dispute Muybridge was commissioned to make a series of photographs of trotters in motion. This he accomplished by ranging a battery of cameras across the track, the shutters of which were released by means of threads stretched across the track and which the horse broke as he breasted them. The result was a series of glass plates recording the consecutive movements of the horses. Photographs of motion had been made before this, but this was the first attempt made to obtain a series of exposures, and the success of these experiments of Muybridge first directed the attention of Mr. Edison to the problem of pictured motion, though not much was done until the development of the celluloid film.

VITAGRAPH'S CHRISTMAS STOCKING.

Twenty-Four Thousand Dollars Made a Merry Christmas For Its Employees—Everybody Delighted.

The distribution of $24,000.00 among the employees of the Vitagraph Company of America made a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year for them. The employees of the main studios located in Brooklyn, New York, received $14,000.00, the Paris factory, $7,000.00 and the London branch, $3,000.00. No one received less than $5.00.

In addition to this liberal recognition of services rendered, each and every one received a turkey weighing from 12 to 20 pounds. The nucleus of the $24,000.00 distributed was the accumulation of the Employees' Fund, which the Company deposits every year at the rate of $1,000.00 a month in the Nassau National Bank, of New York, which created a total at the end of the year of $12,115.00. To this was added further bonuses amounting in all to $24,000.00.

The evidences of appreciation of the employees upon receipt of their gifts was a sight which filled the spectator with the spirit in which they were presented by the heads of the concern, Messrs Blackton, Smith and Rock, who personally wished all of their co-workers a "Merry Christmas" and a "Happy New Year," as the line passed by. Several of the girls working in the mechanical departments, who had been with the Vitagraph Company only a short time, gave vent to their surprise and joy, before they had left the office, and opened their envelopes, by letting out a loud scream of astonishment when they saw the glittering gold pieces. A young fellow who had only been at the studio six months, said, "I have been working nine years for different firms, and this is the first time I ever received a Christmas present." Among the employees themselves, there were many exchanges of remembrances. Some of them on their way home at one o'clock were carrying full dress suit cases filled with gifts from their associates. The liberality and kindness displayed by the Company seemed to be contagious, and everybody, at two o'clock P. M., with smiling faces shouted a cheery Merry Christmas and Happy New Year as they left the studios with their turkeys.

There is no wonder that the business heads who make their employees sharers in their own prosperity disseminate among them an inspiration which brings an interest that adds largely to business achievements and profit. Like begets like.

A CHANCE FOR SOME ONE.

Securing the diversity of actors and actresses necessary to the production of hundreds of films at Universal City, California, is one of the most complicated questions confronting Aubrey M. Kennedy, general manager of the Universal Western Coast organization.

In addition to the hundreds of regular attaches of the Universal studios at Hollywood and Oak Crest, near Los Angeles, Mr. Kennedy has been obliged to recruit many men and women from the city to secure the required number of persons for many pictures.

Despite the fact that the casts of the several Universal companies now at the western coast studios contain the names of men and women noted for their particular ability in comedy, drama, and other classes of pictures, the demand thus far for experienced actors and actresses has exceeded the supply.

Many "floaters," or persons who have become stranded on the Pacific border, have found ready employment at the Universal headquarters. In several instances, actors and actresses dissatisfied with their employment, or seeking greater opportunities, have been engaged to fill permanent positions with the companies.

"It is a difficult task for me to get photoplay people," said Mr. Kennedy recently, in recounting his difficulties in meeting the demands of the directors. "We are obliged to recruit every week at the Universal Coast Studio at Hollywood. The scarcity of competent actors and actresses has enabled many men and women to get work for several days or several weeks, and thereby secure sufficient funds to return to their cities, or theatrical headquarters.

"We are constantly on the lookout for good material, and make it a point that, whenever a man or woman of merit requests work, he or she is given ample opportunity to show ability."

"Calamity Anne's Inheritance" (American)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

PRODUCER Allen Dwan, of the American Western company, has furnished patrons of the "Flying A" films a breezy, snappy farce comedy of Western life, in "Calamity Anne's Inheritance," which will be released Jan. 11, 1913. While the farcical element prevails, there are, here and there, little incidents that border on real life and that possess the charm of true comedy. This naturally speaks well for the scenario and for the producer's skill.

The acting of the principals is very praiseworthy, more especially that of Miss Louise Lester, in the titular role. Her make-up as the virago, Anne, is a scream in itself; but that, expressive as it is, becomes subordinated by an artful and eccentric characterization. Anne is a veritable child of Nature in the rough. Her joyous and angry fits find vent in expressive gesticulations that speak louder and better than words. She is either a torrent of good nature or a cataract of fury. Miss Lester mirthfully depicts her in both lights. And note that delicate side light on another phase of Anne's character, so affectingly revealed by Miss Lester. I refer to the scene in which Anne is seen weeping over the death of Wall-Eyed Jake, who has willed her the Black Hole Mine. Her outburst of joy, after hearing of her good fortune, has taxed all her faculties to give it expression; now that reflection centers her attention on the death of her friend, her heart speaks and she mourns all alone. Anne can fight with either pistol or rifle, and she carries around her waist a well filled cartridge belt, with a ponderous revolver in the holster. She can shoot straight too, as she shows by smashing a pint flask at 100 yards, and putting to flight a crowd of mine jumpers.

Jack Richardson, as the bad man, Cal. Edwards; Warren Kerrigan as Williams, the young mining agent; Miss Charlotte Burton, as Jane Baxter, and Miss Jessalyn Van Trump as Lola Barton are all happy in their parts.

The scenes are nearly all out of doors and several fine landscapes are shown, the photography being uniformly good.

Calamity Anne is discovered attired in a man's slouch hat, a short riding skirt, top boots, and smoking a "cutty" pipe, black with months of usage. She is smoking with evident delight, when young Williams, a mining agent, approaches and presents a document, written in sprawling letters, from Wall-Eyed Jake, deceased. "You was good to me once. I'm croakin' and here's my will. I give and bequeath the Black Hole Mine to you," the document read. Anne immediately seeks out Lola Barton and Jane Baxter, two girls whom she has taken under her protecting wing, and tells them of her good luck.

Soon afterwards the trio start for the mine, a burro being used to carry their belongings. On arriving at the Black Hole, Anne found herself confronted by Cal. Edwards, a claim jumper, and his band; but, nothing daunted, she takes possession of the shack used by her dead benefactor, and awaits developments. Edwards and his companions attempt to oust her and the girls from the premises, but are forced to flee when Anne prepares to use her rifle.

Edwards now resorts to strategy. He contrives to meet Miss Baxter while she is out on a stroll, and that impressionable young woman falls a victim to his handsome face and cute black mustache. She promises to take the cartridges out of Anne's repeating rifle, so that Edwards and his party can approach the shack with safety and hold parley with the irate woman. As a result, Anne is overpowered and bound, and Edwards gains possession of Wall-Eyed Jake's will.

After accomplishing his purpose, Edwards chances to meet Miss Baxter, who evidently expects that he will welcome her as his sweetheart, but he treats her with scorn and, pointing to the will, brutally tells her that it was for the purpose of securing it that he had simulated love for her. But a woman scorned never fails to wreak vengeance on the man who has been so foolish as to stir the fiend in her, and Jane Baxter's fiend moved that she go a-gunning for bad man Edwards. The manner in which Jane shot up Edwards and his gang is one of the big laughs of the presentation. The fleeing men scarcely hit the high places as they try to get out of range, and Edwards's limping flight shows that he has been hit in a spot that will make standing imperative for some time to come.

The stolen will is recovered, Calamity Anne is released from her bonds, and the Black Hole Mine is sold to mining-agent Williams at a handsome figure.

The Importance of Details.

By Robert C. McElravy.

IN the presentation of a painting, a novel, a short story or any work designed to create an illusion of reality in the mind of the observer or reader, it is fundamental that the thing must hang together. It must be coherent and consistent, or the illusion fails.

Attention to details is perhaps more important in moving pictures than in art or writing, for the reason that the mind must be swept along from one scene to another as the story progresses. If there is a slip, even of a minor character, it detracts at once from the effect of the impression sought to be gained. The picture then has to overcome this fault before the illusion can be restored, and it is frequently impossible to do this, so the film is classed as an ordinary production, when it may have very superior points.

The moving picture of the future will not gain its ascendancy over the present product by more exciting plots, or funnier ones or more pathetic ones. It will assert its superiority by weeding out the glaring absurdities that are sometimes allowed to pass, on the ground that nobody notices them.

As a matter of fact almost everybody notices them. One does not have to be a scholar to see the inconsistencies of certain pictures. The clerk, the workingman, the ordinary businessman—they are all critics. They challenge every picture placed before them. Does it ring true? Is this a section of real life? The ordinary observer may laugh off the crudities in a good natured way, but he has made note of them, and has yet to be shown that the moving picture is a thing to be reckoned with as an artistic product.

When the girl heroine grabs up a lead pencil and dashes off a hurried note, which appears on the screen carefully written in pen and ink, perhaps in a masculine hand, this is inconsistent. A small matter, but many people notice it. Nothing adds or detracts more from a photoplay than the character of the notes and documents displayed on the screen. When the queen signs the death warrant for Essex in "Queen Elizabeth" and the death warrant is thrown on the screen, seal and all, it is in keeping with the tone of the production and a favorable impression is made on the mind of the observer.

In a recent film of a somewhat sensational character, the heroine was supposed to be bitten by a rattlesnake. She fell at the side of a log, and the snake could be seen lying on top of it. It was a grewsome monent, of an unpleasant character at best, and the audience was very properly shuddering over the situation. Then the heroine's arm fell across the log, or rather she stuck it out in front of the snake. Instead of bitting her, the snake turned and crawled the other way. This of course threw the audience into shouts of laughter, and the picture wound up anything but successfully.

This could easily have been avoided by merely suggesting the incident of the snakebite. But there are details that slip in almost in spite of every possible care. In a recent three-reel Indian production a white man played the part of a leading redskin character. The man had a vaccination mark on his arm, which obtruded itself with startling distinctness through most of the first reel. A number of people pounced upon this vaccination mark and discussed it for ten minutes, debating whether or not an Indian could have been vaccinated at the period depicted. When the picture, which was a very good one indeed, had been shown, they returned to this argument again. This vaccination mark was a small thing, and yet it only goes to show that the little details do much to mar a film.

On the other hand, you will find by close analysis of pictures that make a big success, that much of the favorable impression was due to good handling of details. It is frequently the simple, natural things that do most to "put an offering over" as the saying goes.

In this connection, I remember watching one film in particular, wherein a very good company of actors appeared. The scenes were good and the characterization and action all that could be wished. Yet the film went slipping along without making any visible impression on the observers. Suddenly the hero stopped to do a kindness for a child in the streets, who was crying. It was a simple act, but one that instantly revealed character and you could simply feel the manner in which the picture took hold from that point. It was like putting chains on the skidding tires of an automobile.

Several Western pictures have achieved distinction merely by introducing new oddities of character among the minor parts. Where there is a tendency to group the cowboys, so that they are as alike as peas in a pod, sometimes a few simple variations will add new interest. But care must be used that the details are not so far over-emphasized as to interfere with the main incidents of the story.

NEW STAR AT "FLYING A" SANTA BARBARA HEADQUARTERS.

A distinguished lead came in over the stork route and is the first acquisition of his type since the advent of the company at Santa Barbara. He is a lusty little actor of ten and one-quarter avoirdupois and bids fair to excel all possible competition. "Chick" Morrison, his father, feels more like the boss of the ranch than ever, and he certainly has every reason to be for the time being, at least, until we hear from the other Benedicts at the "Flying A" studios.

The year 1912 was particularly productive for the matchmakers in the American Company. Wedding bells sounded some five or six times during the year, but Pauline Bush, Jessalyn Van Trump, Kerrigan, Richardson, and the other leads are still enjoying the single blessedness.

LITTLE HELEN.

The little maiden, still of rather diminutive size and proportions, bids fair to excel her more mature sisters in the moving picture arena of stars. At her tender age of three, she plays the parts assigned to her with an air of one who knows how and Director Dwan finds no difficulty in getting her to understand just what he wants. She is demonstrating a natural talent and is a prominent character in the "Flying A" studios. Her efforts are much appreciated by the public who look for her appearance on the screen. Her part in the recent release, "Pals" won her many laurels and her admirers are already aggregating quite a host. Future "Flying A" releases will give Helen ample opportunity to share the popularity accorded the able cast of moving picture stars participating in these productions.

Foreign Trade Notes

BRITISH NOTES.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

IN unexpected contravention to my remarks of last week on the subject of British produced films I have to record the appearance here of the first film produced in England by an American company. At least that is the unique distinction claimed by the Kalem Company for their country drama, "The Poacher's Pardon." I saw the film in company with an artist of no mean order and the commendable manner in which he spoke of the scene which features a typical old English landscape with a rustic bridge in the foreground was admirable testimony to the photographer.

I cannot truthfully assert that I have seen a technically better film taken here. The common and apparently unconquerable defects are manifested in some of the sections. Halation and atmospheric fog are the pet apathies of the English climate against the photographer. The acting in the film is as almost unnecessary to add, of the usual Kalem standard, but it is by reason of its unique position that the film in question will enjoy in England the vogue which it has already begun.

The New Century Animated Picture Company, one of the largest exhibiting, renting, and producing concerns in the northern countries, held its meeting last night and declared an annual dividend of 10 per cent. on ordinary stock. The managing director in his address crushed, with a remarkable illustration, the pseudo-puritanical critics. "Where is it better for poor children to be," he asked, "in a warm and comfortable show for a penny admission or playing in the back streets of a city?"

By the time these lines appear in print Christmas of 1912 will be but a memory. Never such a festive season has been seen here in the world of the cinematograph. The pantomime film in such brilliant members as Selig's "Cinderella," Pathe's "Babes in the Wood," or Edison's "Jack and the Beanstalk" has proved to the full its rightful claim to competition with the stage production. As a matter of fact public opinion here does not seem to hesitate much in favor of the picture pantomime over the second rate touring company of actors. This deduction is also substantiated by the continual grumble of the music hall managers.

Evidently that criterion of public bodies, the London County Council, are doing all in their power to encourage the use of non-inflammable films. After deliberation they refused to prosecute a Woolwich manager who had converted an ordinary shop into a cinema, but who was using safety films.

* * *

The much-discussed film, "Dante's Inferno," which has been exhibited in hundreds of towns in this country without official objection, has at last been censored by the Tynemouth Watch Committee. According to the latest accounts, some of the patrons of the hall where it was being shown complained to the mayor and corporation officials. A special meeting was called and the film was exhibited before the assembly and relegated as unsuitable for exhibition.

The filmed version of Reinhardt's wordless play, "The Miracle," which was staged at Olympia here last autumn, has been the subject of a law court injunction, in which Mr. Joseph Menchen claimed exclusive rights of reproduction and sought to restrain the Elite Sales Agency from producing a similar film. It will be remembered that the first prints of this film shipped to America went down with the "Titanic." Prof. Volmoeller, the author of "The Miracle," stated that he dramatized certain famous legends and wove them together into the wordless written play, "The Miracle." He gave consent to Mr. Max Reinhardt to have the play reproduced on Kinematograph films. Since this, however, they had found that the Elite Company had made a similar film, with the exception that in his opinion it was a base and degraded version of the ancient legend upon which his own work was founded. The defense was that Prof. Volmoeller's version of the play was not in any sense original. The legend spoken of (it was argued), was no more the plaintiff's property than anyone else's. The legend was that a nun ran away from the convent out into the world and met with sin and cruelty, and after tiring of the tumult of the existence, returned to the convent. The story varied a good deal throughout the different parts of Germany, but was generally well known. It was so well known that it formed the subject of a play by Maeterlinck and a poem by Davidson, called "The Ballad of the Nun." The judge admitted that he could not decide the question of copyright, but suggested to the defendants that they call their film by some other name, as there could be no objection to saying it was another version of "The Miracle." This course was agreed to by both parties.

The London General Omnibus Company are turning the cinema to good account as an educational factor. They have just taken a series of films depicting horrible motor-bus collisions and accidents to pedestrians through careless driving. These the company will exhibit to their probationary drivers at lectures to be arranged later on the subject of avoiding accidents. The "scenes" included in the films illustrate a passenger measuring his length on the road by alighting from a 'bus going at full speed; the narrow escape of a foot passener from being run down; a side collision between two 'buses through improper steering; a scene showing the dangers of congested traffic and also one showing the correct way to pass and overtake other vehicles.

Mr. F. J. Nottage, of Rhodesia, has brought to London a vast stock of undeveloped films of wild animals in natural surroundings which, when finished, he intends to place on the market. Mr. Nottage has had many hair-raising experiences during his excursion in the Rhodesian wilds. On one occasion the party suddenly encountered a pack of twenty lions and with some patient waiting managed to secure exposures of the animals at distances of from ten to sixty feet. Once when Mr. Nottage was "filming" a lion he was attacked by a wounded lioness, who fastened her claws into his legs. The natives rushed up and managed to spear the brute in the nick of time. One length of film 500 feet long is really remarkable showing, as it does, a clear and natural series of pictures of over 18 distinct varieties of wild animals each in their native haunts.

The Amalgamated Cinematograph Theater Company, Ltd., who control in London alone over 400 theaters, have declared a five per cent. dividend on the year just commenced. The year's profits are only £16,105 and it is estimated that the year's patrons numbered over 3,000,000.

A new occupation for women has been discovered here. It is the female "viewer" of films for provincial showmen. The special qualification of the woman as a selector of films is said to be that the feminine instinct, strong in feeling the public's pulse, is most suitable from both moral and artistic standpoints.

Messrs. Pathe exhibited their new 12,000 ft. film, "Les Miserables," from the story by Hugo, at the London Alhambra last week. The film lasts nearly four hours and will be released in due course. As I have not seen the production criticism must, of course, be reserved.

The moving picture exhibitors of Vienna have recently held a meeting to protest against the law excluding minors under sixteen years from electric theaters after 8 o'clock P. M. To this meeting the public were invited and there was a decided sentiment against the ordinance. It was pointed out that the electric theater was being discriminated against because no such regulations touch the vaudeville and cabaret shows of the city. Another monster meeting was held later in the month and while the meeting was in progress every electric theater in the city closed its doors as a protest against the ordinance.

The Swiss Federal Council has passed a body of very drastic and arbitrary laws against kinematographic exhibitions. Statistics were submitted in the course of the debate preceding the passage of these laws, showing "that motion pictures had done more harm than the ravages of alcohol."

PATRIOTIC PICTURES.

Wherever pictures can do the people a true service, there surely they can expect ample justification. Nearly all the most popular offerings in the past have been patriotic pictures and in New York City where audiences seldom applaud, the rule is likely to be broken whenever pictures like "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" or the "The Cry of the Children" are shown. We could stand more like these; but there is a field that is too often overlooked and where a sincere picture maker could do fine patriotic service. We refer to what is called "The Melting Pot" where we are all being mixed up together to make the Americans of the future.

The trouble is that the elements in the melting are so different. Many of us are not in sympathy with the others; we call them by some nick-name that isn't complimentary and don't consider them as Americans. To find any real patriotism in them would be to many something of a surprise. The truth is, that many who talk English with an accent are even more fervent Americans than we are ourselves. They have found conditions here much better than in their own homes. One Italian is reported to have written home that it was better to work in an American mine than on Italian meadows. Doubtless that man and his sons would be more willing to sacrifice themselves for this country than for Italy. In outward appearance, he doesn't show it and we don't hear him shouting it out; but if we knew that it was so, he could hardly be a foreigner to us any more. If it is true, and we believe that it is, it is worth while showing. But even if it were not, how has his experience here taught him to look upon us and our institutions? The writer of this doesn't know. No picture has ever given him any light on the matter. He would like to know. He has often passed Italian villages; there are some in Connecticut. He has often wondered what kind of life was lived in those little farm houses. He has read that money is being made on these farms. Perhaps some scenario writer knows all about it. Why not put it in a picture so that we all could know? There is an interesting Armenian community we are told in Yonkers. They are keeping their old customs and ceremonies, even national dances. Are those people good Americans? We don't doubt it, but we would like to know.

What makes this more important is that these little communities are not one or two, but many; they're going to have an important effect on this country's future. They are like little knots and are being still made tighter by lack of sympathy and a stand-off attitude of many people in their neighborhoods. The understanding that well-written and well-made pictures that told the truth about them would give, would help and not a little. They would have to be interesting and would have to be dramatic to be really effective; but if they were truthful they would be popular, there is little doubt of that. If they were made patriotic and were sincere, they ought to be the most popular pictures made. Take for instance a Russian. Suppose something of what his life had been in the old country were shown and that were contrasted with his experiences in one of the Russian communities to be found in New Jersey. Supposing it were also shown truthfully that he took interest in local politics and was the means of helping some reform, would it not be good for us all? We think such a picture would be very popular, if it were well done in every way.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

AFTER all Mayor Gaynor has vetoed the Folks' motion picture ordinance. This will be a great disappointment to those who worked so hard for its passage, for they fully believed His Honor would affix his signature in approval to the essential features of the measure and veto the clause relating to censorship. But it was not to be so, and the work that has taken months to perfect must now go on the shelf, for how long none can tell.

* * *

Whatever the effect may be, it will undoubtedly serve as a criterion for cities throughout the country, owing to the time devoted to and the exhaustive nature of the discussion. Press, pulpit, laymen, playmen, lawyers, politicians and hosts of others have had full swing in the discussion for and against the picture theaters, and the Mayor's decision should be accepted as final.

* * *

Since the submission of the ordinance to the Mayor there has been a marked diminution in the attacks upon the picture houses. This is primarily due to a realization by those who have headed the radicals that their demand for censorship lacks merit and would not stand a test before the courts. The Mayor stated this to a committee a few days ago, and the New York World has admitted that "the censorship clause in the moving picture ordinance is not only of doubtful legality, but of doubtful value. There is already plenty of law on the statute books to deal with men who give immoral shows." The paper intimates that the crusade in which its evening edition took such an active part was intended to regulate moving picture theaters rather than moving picture shows, which is true only to an extent. The real truth of the matter is that all concerned in the crusade tried to jam into the ordinance anything and everything that would tend to bind the moving picture man hand and foot, and the back-down on the censorship proposition did not come until its unconstitutionality made itself apparent.

But the change of front on the censorship question may possibly have been accelerated by other developments. Following the passage of the moving picture ordinance there was a movement to organize a committee to act as censors of plays, and the managers of the regular theaters were up in arms in a jiffy. One of them has stated through the press that "the public should be allowed to be its own censor, because no man or group of men is capable of determining what is good for the public to see." Added to this we have Mayor Gaynor's statement that if the aldermen, by ordinance, can censor pictures in a moving picture house, they might equally apply a censorship to the press—the right to say what pictures should appear in a paper. So you see the worm has turned at last. People who have persistently persecuted the poor "movie" man have been brought about with a sudden, strong, common-sense jerk. The moving picture man has his rights in law that must be respected. He is a part of a great, legitimate business involving an investment of millions of dollars, and that bona fide capital cannot be wiped out by arbitrary regulations and laws.

The people at large fail to realize the fact that a censorship regulation could be applied with such effect as to practically cripple the motion picture business, especially if such a board consisted of political appointees. By dilatory methods of censorship the manufacturers could be crippled because of inability to get an approved film; the renters could be handicapped by inability to get sufficient new films to meet the requirements of their customers; and the exhibitor would find his business gradually falling off for the same reason. Only those having a knowledge of the business can realize the great hardship that could be wrought upon these three factors. Some companies are making six and more new pictures a week and the combined output of the manufacturers who would be obliged to submit their films for approval is enormous. It is not fear, or unwillingness, that makes the picture people antagonistic to the censorship part of the ordinance awaiting approval. It is a resentment of any illegal action that may curtail the legitimate returns on their investments.

As the matter has assumed a form of national importance and is being watched with interest by the officials and every motion picture man throughout the country it is quite proper to quote here what Mayor Gaynor told a committee that waited upon him the other day. He said: "Our forefathers abolished the censorship and declared for freedom of speech and a free press. Now, apparently, you want all these things and yet you are arguing for a specific censorship. . . . For all I know, this ordinance might deprive us of a personal liberty."

It is too bad that the press is so seldom inspired with sentiments of this character. One of the newspapers states that the great interest manifested in the bearing before the Mayor was proof of the widespread concern with which thoughtful citizens properly view the influence of "these moving picture places which have so long been permitted to be a law unto themselves." Ye Gods! Why, there is no more law-burdened legitimate business on the face of the earth, more especially in Greater New York. The building, electrical, fire, health and license departments, and the Board of Fire Underwriters, are on the job at all times. Then there are the police and various society agents, and fifty-seven varieties of "butters in." It is ridiculous for any newspaper or individual, to assert that the motion picture houses have been a law unto themselves when the many channels of authority named have had ample supervision of the places whenever they desired to exercise it. The blame does not rest with the picture houses, but with those who fail to exercise the powers vested in them. There are plenty laws of such wide scope that the moving picture men have as much chance of escape as a Turk who has fallen into a Balkan well. If there are any picture houses in existence that are not abiding by the law it is because one or more of the departments are neglecting their duty. I was about to say also that neglect of duty on the part of the so-called reformers was also responsible for the conditions, but what's the use? When called to account they tell you there are paid officials to look after such matters. There are few real reformers. Most of the people who claim to be the real thing are only fooling themselves. No, they do not fool the public so much these days. Past records have established pretty clearly that, if they are not cranks, their chief aim in life is to stir up some kind of trouble so that they may get in the limelight with a speech. After they relieve themselves of it they fold up their tents and quietly steal away to await another opportunity to spread themselves. If nothing else turns up they fall upon the poor moving picture man. There is absolutely no occasion for the public attacks that have been made against the picture people. Not one charge has been made that is not covered by some law or local ordinance; and in addition to this every exhibitor guilty of a violation can be subjected to the additional penalty of having the license of his house revoked. The authority on this score is very broad. All these charges could have been disposed with justice to all in regular form and without subjecting thousands of responsible and law abiding people to humiliating conditions. There is only one answer: When the limelight fever strikes the reformer (?) he can see no course but a crusade. During the entire period of the present upheaval it has not occurred to any of these people that charges should have been made against the officials for permitting violations of the law. All their discussions have been directed against the motion picture business. To say the least it looks insincere.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse, the popular leading lady of Essanay's Eastern stock company, danced at a benefit performance given under the auspices of the Faulkenstein Settlement for the benefit of the poor children. Hidden behind a Christmas tree laden with beautiful ornaments and glowing candles, Miss Stonehouse, in the garb of a fairy queen, came forth from behind the lighted tree of joy and treated the young waifs to enjoyment never before bestowed upon them. The event will be marked down in the history of the poor children's lives as one of utter enjoyment.

Beverly Bayne, a charming member of Essanay's Eastern stock company, with her partner, Fred Conklin, treasurer of the Kappa Phi fraternity, led the grand march in the gold room of the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Friday night, December 27th, where the annual dance of the Kappa Phi fraternity was being held.

"The Marconi Operator" (Kinograph)

THE third release of the Kinograph Company will be "The Marconi Operator." It is in three parts. Like its predecessors it has more or less to do with the sea. Likewise in this picture there is depicted in the peculiar Kinograph way, the intimacy of the home circle. It seems that the makers of these pictures take special pains in portraying the domestic hearth. The photography throughout the three reels is of the best. This, by the way, seems to be a foregone conclusion in Kinograph pictures. Much attention is given to settings, indoor as well as outdoor. The scene of the garden party at the home of the manufacturer is a fine bit of work. There is more than the usual degree of suspense. There is besides a strong element of heart interest accentuated by the interposition of a third party—a woman who was not in love with the man she was baiting, but pursuing him simply to gratify her own vanity and incidentally to win a wager with a friend.

The story is of Ellen, a cashier in a department store, who, in bathing one day, ventures out too far and is rescued by Robert, a wireless operator, who with his chum had been spending the day on the water fishing. The following day Robert calls on Ellen and meets her family; her brother Charles, who shows him over an extensive laboratory, the mother and the father. Ellen returns the call by visiting Robert at the wireless station. The two go fishing. It is while they are on the water that Robert declares his love for Ellen. It is reciprocated.

Scene from "The Marconi Operator" (Kinograph).

Mr. Warming, a yacht owner, advertises for a wireless operator. Robert applies for the position and secures it. While he is at the home of the manufacturer he meets the daughter of Mr. Warming. Miss Warming makes every effort to attract the attention of the young operator. She is successful. A few days later, when Robert shows to Ellen a letter he has received from Mr. Warming inviting him to attend a lawn party, Ellen plainly shows her displeasure. She seems to feel that it bodes no good to her. Her fears prove to be well founded. At the party, Miss Warming makes special effort to entertain Robert. She makes a wager with one of her friends that she will win the love of the young operator in a week. She does even better. Before the evening is out Robert writes a note to Ellen, telling her that he has made a mistake and asking her to forget him. Ellen reads the note and faints. Her brother picks it up and threatens trouble. Charles immediately sets at work to destroy the man who has ruined his sister's happiness. He goes to his laboratory and manufactures a bomb with a clock attachment. Then he goes to Robert's room where he finds a note from the employer of the operator, informing him that the yacht sails at three o'clock that day. Charles times the device in the infernal machine to explode just after the boat has left the pier. He puts the bomb into the waiting suit case.

Robert, entering his room, takes his suit case and goes to the yacht. The boat sails immediately. Charles goes home and tells his sister what he has done. She rushes to Robert's home, sees on the table the note indicating the time the yacht is to sail and realizes she must move fast. She hurries to the wireless station and tries to get into communication with the boat.

On board the yacht, Miss Warming has thrown overboard a rose and dares Robert to recover it. Robert accepts the challenge. He has a long swim and a cooling one, in fact his ardor has undergone such a change that, when he reaches the deck, in contempt he throws the rose at the feet of the young woman who induced him to go overboard. All this time the operator at the station has been desperately trying to get into communication with the receding boat. As Robert goes to the wireless room and picks up the receiver, he receives a message from Ellen that a bomb is in his suitcase. He reaches down by his side, takes up the clock and goes on deck and hurls overboard the infernal machine. There is a heavy explosion as the clock strikes the water. Robert then sends to Ellen word that the danger is past. On the return from the cruise there is a happy reconciliation; even Charles is brought into the group, protesting, but is finally won over. It is all a pretty story, but the family note is the deepest.

GEORGE KLEINE'S RELEASES.

First-class comedies are very difficult to obtain and are much appreciated by exhibitors who like to provide the best upon the market for their patrons. George Kleine will release two excellent comedy subjects and a well-acted drama of heart interest for the week ending January 11th, 1913.

For the Tuesday release, "A Maid's Devotion" describes the unfailing attachment a young girl displays for her beloved mistress in a time of domestic difficulties. It is interesting to witness the clever way in which she follows every move of the suspicious husband who is making a strong effort to fasten the guilt upon his wife, as is also the final scenes, in which she displays such humility and self-sacrifice when she calmly accepts all the blame upon herself to shield her mistress from disgrace. It is a story which is extremely well acted and which will go straight to the hearts of all; not one in the audience will fail to sympathize with the poor, innocent little maid.

"Kidnapping the Fiddler," the Eclipse for Wednesday, is certainly a "scream" and furnishes a truly feature comedy. It describes the adventure of Billy, a fiddler, who is engaged to take the place of the famous violinist "Lubekik" in giving a drawing room recital at the home of the wealthy Madam Strafford. His success is instantaneous. The guests are held spellbound by his music, and the baroness present is so enraptured with Billy that she has him kidnapped and taken to her home. However, when Billy's wife learns of his whereabouts she assembles her family of ten and, with a thick stick in hand, goes to the palatial residence in search of him. Forcing her way in, she seizes Billy by the collar and angrily belabors him over the head with her stick. He finally breaks from her grasp, however, and runs home, followed by his family in picturesque array.

To complete the reel, "Along the Coast of Dalmatia" is a most fascinating travelogue spreading before us the territory on the Adriatic Sea adjacent to where the Balkan War is being carried on with such great loss of life.

For the Saturday Cines, "The Woes of a Peacemaker" is also an excellent comedy attraction. It deals with the domestic difficulties of Albert and Louise, a pair of newlyweds, who are both of a high-spirited disposition and inclined to quarrel at the slightest pretext. To keep the peace the wife's parents suggest that an uncle should pay them a visit. His alarm and utter consternation when the disturbances arise are extremely amusing. But he proves to be very useful in the end, however, for he learns by a varied experience how to cope with this domestic strife, and when finally a real serious difficulty arises he proves the real hero of the hour. Josephine Scotti and Guido Serena make a fine appearing couple and carry their parts well, while Thomas Lupi as the old uncle does some of the best work of his career, and people who follow his acting closely know what that represents.

ECLAIR NOTES FROM PAWNEE CITY.

While making a scene near Big Bear Creek recently, Director "Will" Haddock of the Western Eclair company had a narrow escape from serious injury. While descending a steep embankment Mr. Haddock's horse fell, and rider and horse were rolled over together. The director received a bad cut on his face, but remounted immediately.

Lamar Johnstone and George Larkin are fast rounding into shape and expect to do some real riding in Eclair pictures. Mr. Hall and Hal Wilson are studying Indian traits so that they may faithfully portray them.

SIMPLEX IN THE NEW YORK SCHOOLS.

The Board of Education, of New York City, has just placed an order with The Precision Machine Company for a Simplex Projector for use in one of their school buildings.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A Chat from China.

M. S. AYER, manager of the Arcade theater, Tientsin, China, answers our request for some information about his house with a chatty letter that will interest the readers of this department. He says:

We are pleased to note your favorable comments on our style of advertising. Your comment, "It presents much the same appearance as the work here, etc.," is perhaps a veiled hint that we take most of our advertising matter from your valuable paper. In one of your late numbers you gave the advertising matter for Sarah Bernhardt film and said that it may be noted and used when the film is exhibited. We followed your good advice and perhaps improved on it a little by getting it done on gold edged cards. We carefully read your paper always and any notes on advertising and the reviews of films never escape our notice. We make free use of these and hope you do not object to this. (It is what we are here for. Ed.)

We are very pleased to learn that our advertising receives your approbation and further on comparison with the samples you receive from Manila the balance is largely in our favor. By-the-bye, in answering one of our enquiries once you referred to us as "The wily Manchu," and again once commenting on our advertising you said, "More from Japan," and again you call our advertising as "Chinese work." If you haven't a map handy please turn to an atlas and you will find that Tientsin is in China, North, and it is a river treaty port. Mr. A. Bari, a British Indian is the sole proprietor and Mr. M. S. Ayer, the manager is also a British Colonial. This is a one man company.

The theater is situated in the French concession. Almost all nations have their concessions and extra-territoriality in Tientsin and hence the patronage we cater for is a mixed one. Mostly we send our handbills in German, French, English and Chinese and at times in Russian even. It is an enormous cost, but a necessary evil that cannot be avoided. We advertise largely by hand bills, posters, and newspapers. The foreign population is about 2,000, leaving out the military. There are some 1,000 American soldiers, 2,000 English, 1,000 German, 1,000 French and about 2,000 Russion soldiers. The soldiers of all nationalities patronize our hall. The Americans preponderate, English second, Germans third and the others altogether negligible. By post we send almost daily and sometimes twice a day 600 handbills and distribute among the soldiers in the barracks 2,000 or 3,000. This year, up to date, we have issued 290 handbills and 30 posters. Besides these, we have our booklets for feature films.

The printing presses in the place are almost all newspaper offices under foreign supervision and all our printing work is done by these presses. Herein lies our advantage for booming our shows. We get into the papers as many paragraphs as we like.

We have made arrangements with the M. P. Sales Company of London to ship us films monthly. They send us together with the films, a large quantity of advertising matter. The only drawback is the films are very old, although free from rain. We have an agent in London who buys for us the topicals (all second hand), and features. From the first of this month we are changing our programme on Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays. Mixed programmes on Saturdays and all American programmes on the other two change days. You will see this from some of our handbills sent you this day under separate cover. The Americans turn up in numbers to see these American films, and we do good business with these films. The place was overstocked with French films these three years and therefore the change to American products is well appreciated by the public. We may say, in China, we are the only concern showing exclusively American films. All other stick to the French products.

We use a Pathe machine, by the way, these are the only machines used all over China, and ours is a particularly antideluvian one. We have used it for these three years and when we bought it, it had been in use for over five years. The pictures are shaky and miserable, but no one complains, because ours is the only theater in the place. There is another third class show on the same road as ours catering mostly to the Chinese and some of the American soldiers drop in there at times, owing to its cheap prices. The projection there is worse than ours. So we are happy in our egotism. However, we have decided to improve things in every line and have on the way two new machines from Messrs. Charles Urban Trading Co., London, a Mercury Arc Rectifier, from Mr. Hallberg, America, and a Pictonia Transparent screen from Messrs. Gaumont, London. The writer thinks these absolute necessaries, but the proprietor thinks these as unnecessary waste of hard earned money. Well, you may judge who is right. A Chinese boy operates the machine and does the best he can with the bad material he has.

We think we have given you a very long account of our way of doing business here and if there be anything more you would like to hear, we shall be pleased to write to you.

Your paper has become an indispensable necessity to our theater and we heartily thank you for the notes.

Think of That.

The letter is dated November 16th, and the figures on the handbill and poster record to date. That is hustling some for a theater in China (we always knew it was China, honest.), especially when the copy is largely prepared by the house. Mr. Ayer got the wrong impression from the line he quotes. It was our intention to explain that the work suggested the better class of American printing, rather than the crude typesetting and display that is current in some parts of China. It is smart and metropolitan in appearance, except when the use of native paper gives a foreign apearance, and Mr. Ayer creates much more than he borrows.

It is surprising that a house so enterprising in other ways has not procured a good projector before this and we think that the owner will agree with Mr. Ayer, after the improvements are installed, that the investment was a wise one. Even in North China good projection is appreciated and should help the business.

Recent advertising is largely directed to calling the attention of the patrons to the new service. Some of the stuff is more than two years old, but it is new where it has not been seen before. Three Lubins and three Biographs with two issues of the Gaumont Graphic is something of a show even if it does rain.

With the new affiliation the Arcade can profit by the work of B. Nichols, who is alert to supply his patrons with a splendid supply of printed matter.

Now a Regular Paper.

In this connection it is interesting to note that The Pictures, the M. P. Sales agency weekly giving the stories of the leading films handled, has outgrown the house organ stage and has been passed on to a firm of publishers who will handle it as a publication and not as an advertisement. Meantime Mr. Nichols has established the new Topline Indicator as his personal organ. This is more of an advertising sheet, but it has grown from four to eight pages in a few weeks. It handles the M. P. agency releases with the breeziness of an American management. Perhaps in time Mr. Nichols will find that he has supplied Great Britain with a trade paper as well as a lay weekly.

Mr. Chaney's Newest.

We've missed N. E. Chaney, of the Orpheum, Hillsboro, Ohio, lately, but he makes up for it by coming in with a new eight page and cover program running from December 16th, to January 4th; three full weeks. In spite of the eighteen announcements there is room for some cuts and announcements with advertising top and bottom. The cover is lithographed and is without face printing so that it can be tacked up if desired. Mr. Chaney has been giving candy to the kiddies on Christmas, but this year he has hit upon something new. Here is the idea.

> Special Matinee today at 1:30 p. m.
> FREE MATINEE FOR CHILDREN TODAY.
> In accordance with our usual custom of remembering the children on Xmas we will this year vary from our former system of giving candy, and will give a Free Matinee for all children under 12 years of age, provided they call and get their Free Admission tickets before that day. They will be on distribution at the box office on Monday and Tuesday, Dec. 23 and 24, and at no other time. None will be given away on Christmas Day. These Free tickets must be secured in advance. They are not good for admission any other day or evening. Our first performance starts promptly at 1:30 and will be over in ample time to go to Opera House matinee.

We fancy that not many managers will have the nerve to give away their Christmas matinee, but a special treat on that day will mean a lot more to the children than one the day previous or a day later and it is something that will be remembered the year through. Mr. Chaney is one of those up to date managers who wants to stay in the same town year after year and for that reason he argues that a thing done just right is better worth while even if it does mean a loss at the moment. Mr. Chaney holds to the usual make up that he has followed for a long time, but we note that he gives more of the black type to the names of the players, including those of the Biograph.

Does Sensation Pay?

Does it pay to be sensational?

Does it really pay to make your house a home of vulgarity if not actual indecency?

Have you ever figured it out?

Can you prove Lincoln a liar and fool all of the people all of the time?

Here's a little advertising gem that was in front of the Savoy Theater, Philadelphia, the other day:

> WE HAVE IT!
> The picture you have been looking for. It is not possible for us to go into details except to say that
> IS NOT MUCH TO WEAR.

That's what the Savoy had on a sign three by six feet right on the sidewalk.

And then some exhibitors wonder why it is that some people are still complaining of the vicious motion pictures. It is not so much the pictures that are vicious as the men who seek to create the impression.

The correspondent to whom we are indebted for this example of advertising is a showman himself, though not in the motion picture line. He is a devotee of the photoplay with a strong leaning toward Edison and Thanhouser products, and adds this personal experience:

> I make the trip up Market Street every day, and pass the houses mentioned in the "Tokio" ad I sent before. The two houses I go into are the "Dreamland," showing the first run Mutual pictures, and the "Family," showing first run Licensed. The former is the first I come to—at Ninth and Market. The latter, the last—at Thirteenth and Market. And, by the way, the manager of the Dreamland is the real article. He has been accustomed to showing a two or three reel feature and two or three of the regular Mutual releases daily. His features were of the "Deadwood Dick" and "Parisian Model" type, and his house was always packed. He has the only orchestra on the street. About three weeks ago, the features began to be conspicuous by their absence, and one night I met him and congratulated him on having eliminated the objectionable (to me) parts of his program. He was amazed, and told me that he had tried it as an experiment, and was going to put the foreign features back on the next day, and continue as before. I gave him an argument, and said that the Mutual program contained enough features that were not objectionable, to enable him to run a feature every second day, without going outside of it. He said: "Maybe so, but take the Thanhouser 'Star of Bethlehem' for instance. It will cost me $80.00 extra and I can get 'Society Life in Paris,' under the title of 'Trapped,' for ten dollars, and the lithographs of the naked artist's model will bring in a hundred people to the one that Joseph and Mary's pictures in my lobby, will attract." I answered: "If that's the way you look at it, why don't you go get a half dozen women from Noble Street, and have them appear naked on your stage—don't get any pictures at all." His answer told the whole story—"I'd be arrested if I did."
> He knew he would not be arrested for showing indecent pictures, and a saving of seventy dollars for his owner was not an item to ignore, so for the next week, he had the old "ten dollar a day" features on again. Last week, I asked him why he had not shown "The Thunderbolt," a Thanhouser I wanted to see. He looked in his book and showed me that he had had it on the day it was released, but as the paper for "The Acrobat's Daughter," his feature for that day, took up all the room in the lobby, the Thanhouser paper was not out. The consequence was that I did not go in. I told him that "The Acrobat's Daughter" had kept me out, and in another conversation, mentioned another similar picture keeping me out. The owner coming along then, the manager remarked, laughing: "Here's a fellow that won't come in when we have a foreign feature." I don't know what the owner thought of such a "fellow," but the foreign features have been absent ever since, and today the manager told me that he did not intend to have any more.

Not Pretty Work.

Here are some more samples of the Philadelphia advertising:

> This is the Greatest Hold Up ever done in any country. Not only money. It means lives, too.

This was not some lurid western nor underworld tale but the Pathe, The Orleans Coach, that in dramatic form as The Courier of Lyons and The Lyons Mail has been standard for years, forming a part of the repertoire of men like Sir. Henry Irving. The Pathe production was made with the same care as the stage version for Mr. Irving. There was no effort made to play up the violence. It was a serious and well considered effort to reproduce in photoplay a dramatic classic, yet it is tortured by a sensation monger into a blood and thunder and hundreds who have passed the door probably never realized that this "greatest hold-up" was a genuinely artistic production. They judged only by what they saw in passing. They were not tempted to investigate and so the manager of the Princess Theater spread broadcast in the minds of possible patrons the belief that the pictures have not been improved upon since the early days of crudity. He put his attraction into the same class with the Royal, showing "Jesse James in Missouri—Blood and Thunder."

No wonder that the papers storm, the preachers denounce and decent people regard the pictures as something unclean when one management prefers naked ladies on the posters to the announcement of more attractive offerings and another hints that the characters in his attraction are dressed only in a fig leaf.

It may be regarded as good advertising to use imported filth or distort the facts of decent films, but the men who are in the business to stay, who have regard for the dignity of their profession, should get together and help the police suppress these offenses, for they are offences against decency that should come within the jurisdiction of the police.

It is not fair that the hundreds of decent, clean minded managers of picture theaters should suffer from the unintelligent blunders of the few. And the worst of this particular case is that some of these houses are supposed by the public to be owned by S. Lubin, head of the Lubin Manufacturing Co. though it is well known that his interests in the exhibition end in Philadelphia were disposed of almost three years ago.

On the Other Hand.

It is a pleasure to turn from the contemplation of this filthy advertising and note that Samuel Trigger, manager of the Tremont theater, and President of the Exhibitor's Association in New York, announces a recital of Christmas Carols as his Christmas Eve feature. He has one of the Hope-Jones unit orchestras and can give the old time music with good effect. This is written before the day announced. We hope by next issue to have a report on the experiment. Mr. Trigger himself does not seem over-certain of the success of the scheme. It may not pay him in money on the evening of December 24th, but it will yield him a large return in credit, position and future business unless we are very greatly mistaken. It's one of those things that lasts beyond the night of performance, that marks the house as one of those that does things well and impresses the casual patron favorably and makes him over into a regular. Mr. Trigger has no use for nude ladies nor yet for fig leaf costumes. He fights a dull night with novelty, not nastiness.

Another of his schemes is to print half tones of some old releases and offer prizes for those who first correctly name the productions. Ten prizes of five dollars each are given and as the scheme is a test of skill and not pure luck it does not involve an argument with the authorities under the lottery law. The names of the winners are announced from the stage on Monday evenings.

Some Clever Catchlines.

Bertram I. Williams, of Ponca City, Oklahoma, is doing the press work for the Wonderland as part of the output of his publicity shop, and sends in some good lines along with a word of praise for this department. One of his small sheets reads:

Montgomery Advertising.

Here is a Sunday advertisement that we picked up down in Jacksonville the other day. The features were The Model for St. John, Atala, and A Noble Profession. Sunday shows are all the thing in Jacksonville, but Mr. Montgomery does the best the General Film Company will let him to mark the Sundays by running subjects of an educational or classical value. He says—in large type:

LEND ME THINE EAR.

I wish all thoughtful and well-meaning persons after attending their church service today could visit my Grand Theater, for I know that in all of my life I have never shown a more noble or elevating performance than I am prepared to show today. It is the kind of performance I find pleasure in recommending to you.

READ THE FEATURES BELOW.

Then ask yourself the question, "Can I afford to miss seeing this performance?"

Advertising for the church goers might seem to be going a bit strong, but we saw the performance and it was better than many of the sermons preached in the Jacksonville churches that day. If you do go after the church goers, go after them in the Montgomery way, quietly and effectively. You cannot get them in with a ballyhoo and you are apt to offend them.

Manufacturing a Plot.

Several writers have given their plan of work for the enlightenment of others, but we have not yet seen the deductive method explained, though this, after all, is the surest way to get a plot when you want one, granting that you have a reasonably fertile imagination. We will suppose that a play is to be written and there is no inspirational theme at hand. The only thing to do is to evolve one and here is about the mental process that follows:

The chief ingredient of almost any play is a man and a woman. Now what do they do? We are tired of elopement stories and so are the editors, so they can't run away to get married in spite of parental objection. But there must be some obstacle to their happiness to be overcome or there will be no story. Suppose that she wants to go on the stage. We'll call her Daisy, because that suggests something frivolous. We'll call him Dick. She wants to go on the stage, then, and Dick wants her to give up the idea. She loves Dick but she is stage struck and it is going to take something big to get it out of her silly little head. It might be that she falls in with some actress, who tells her all about it. That might be all right for a book, but it won't show up in action. Perhaps she does get on the stage, the company goes to smash and she telegraphs Dick to come and bring her home. That's been done several times, but not as often as lots of other themes, but that would be more of a comedy than a serious play and this is to be a drama. We could fuss it up by bringing in a lecherous stage manager to pick on the girl after the company gets a few hundred miles from home, but that might make trouble when the picture got before the board of censors, and it wouldn't look very nice, anyway. Suppose she gets out on the road, gets a chance as understudy, goes on some night when a big New York manager is out front. He hires her for one of his companies, she gets the star part, makes good in New York and Dick has to admit that she made the best choice. But this is tame and the famous New York manager, according to the magazines, seems to spend most of his time in the one-night stands. A bit stale. There was that play Miss Mabel Trunelle did so well with—the one where her baby is dying. Something like that would be bully, but Daisy has no child, and anyhow we don't want to get too close to the Majestic release. But let's go back and pick up that understudy idea. Suppose we use that and sickness in this way: The company is struggling along. The leading woman quits because she has not had her salary. There's a pretty good sale in the town. There'll be money enough to run on for a time if they can give the show. Daisy knows the part and the business. She's the only one in the little troupe that can look the part. It's the off chance, but perhaps she can pull it through without the audience wanting its money back. The manager puts it up to Daisy and she is game enough to try. The leading woman gets a wire. The stage doorkeeper doesn't know Daisy is not Miss Montressor. He puts the telegram in her dressing room, and Daisy, who is all excitement, opens it without reading the address. It reads: "Come home at once. Your mother is dying." It is signed "Father." Of course Daisy goes up in the air, and the company crowd in. They urge her to go through with the play. It's their only chance, and there is no train east until two o'clock, anyway. She plays and scores such a hit that they all wonder. But she feels no triumph. There is only the thought of her mother, dying and perhaps calling for her daughter. The play is done, and she collapses and is carried to her dressing room. All crowd in to see what they can do to help her. The comedian kicks a piece of paper. It's the telegram that Daisy crumpled up and dropped in that first rush of anguish. He picks it up and reads. It is not for Daisy at all. He shows her the address, "Violet Montressor." Everyone cheers up. They have money enough to move the company, and they'll go on with Daisy for a star. But Daisy doesn't see it that way. Suppose that some time the telegram should be for her! She goes east on the two o'clock train, marries Dick and stays close to her mother. There's a pretty good plot, with plenty of heart interest, dramatic situations, suspense and the needful happy ending. Time, twelve minutes.

But suppose we had wanted a comedy, or perhaps a farce. Take the telegram idea. There are two Smiths in town. One lives at 926, and the other at 296. It's a new operator in the little branch office, and he gets the numbers wrong. Mrs. Smith gets a telegram from a nearby town that her husband is dangerously hurt. She must get there at once. No train for five hours. But hold on a moment. That telegram won't do. All the time the audience will have an undercurrent of sympathy for the real Smiths—he in the hospital and she all unconscious of the fact. That is a false lead. Start again. Smith, not Mrs. Smith, gets the wire. It's apparently from Mrs. Smith's mother, and it says that she will arrive on the five o'clock train. It's up to Smith to do something to head the old lady off. He persuades Mrs. Smith to go for an auto ride. Once around the corner, he sneaks back to the house on the pretense that he has forgotten something. He pulls down all the blinds and puts a sign on the door that reads, "Gone to Europe; back in five months." Now for the ride. The auto breaks down and Mrs. Smith wants to take the trolley back home. Not a bit of it. He has looked at his watch, and it is only two. He hires a man to come for the car, and gets a fresh machine from the garage. They make a new start. Out in the country they come upon a man wheeling a crate of eggs on a wheelbarrow. He has just time to jump out of the way. The car hits the barrow—and the eggs. Smith passes over $20 and starts out again. Mrs. Smith gets hungry and wants to turn back. Not a bit of it. It's only three o'clock and they can reach home in an hour. There is an inn ahead, so they stop for dinner. It's a big dinner, and Smith doesn't stop eating until after five. Then they start for home. They reach there, and under the door is a slip from the telegraph operator that the telegram is for the other Smith. Smith figures up the damage: Repairs to his car, about $10; hire for the other car, $16; eggs, $20; dinner, $18; total, $64, to get away from the other Smith's mother-in-law, not counting the fact that Mrs. Smith found that "Gone to Europe" slip and can guess the rest. That's a fair comedy. Time, fourteen minutes.

It is quite possible that you'll have more trouble with the suggestions and eliminations than this, but the idea is the same, whether it takes you fourteen minutes or as many hours. You simply take nothing and add to it until you have a story. Once you train yourself to the system you do not have to depend upon inspiration. You can write a story any time you have to, and with practice you can train yourself to think of a good enough story to get over. Just as a matter of fact we wrote a story like this yesterday, but that process brought such a good comedy that we withdrew the example and made it into a photoplay. If the script is accepted we'll publish that version when the play is released. Meantime if anyone wants to take any part of this as a starter for a story of their own they are welcome to it.

This was started with no idea of what we were going to write, and we have put down precisely the reasoning we did as we went along. It represents the actual building of a plot.

It has been done quickly because we are familiar with this style of work, but there is no reason why you cannot do better than this with a little practice. Solid, methodical work is better in the long run than alternate fits of inspiration and inaction.

No Alias.

When you start to write a play decide what you are going to call your characters, and adhere to your decision. If you have a character named Robert Wilson, do not indiscriminately call him Bob, Robert and Wilson. Decide on one of the three and use that one invariably. If your character travels under an alias, being known as Montgomery in society and Jimmie the Rat in the underworld, do not call him Montgomery in the society scenes and The Rat when he gets among his proper associates. Call him Montgomery straight through, and the first time he changes from Jekyl to Hyde tell the audience in the leader that he is known as The Rat, but in the plot of action hold to Montgomery, because you started with that and do not want to confuse the director. The editor is going to read in a hurry the first time through, and he cannot continually consult the cast to identify your constant changes in cognomens.

Cutting Down Comedy.

Probably the hardest thing in photoplay writing is the three hundred foot comedy with a story. It gets easier with each added hundred feet, but there is a tendency to overwrite that should be checked.

Perhaps the greatest fault is not forming a quick climax. The moment you let out the joke that is your climax, your story is done and you want to close the shop and put up the shutters right then and there. Do not add half a dozen explanatory scenes to pad out in the idea that you will get more money if you make it a full reel. The half-reel you can sell is greatly preferred to the full reel no one wants.

It is well to remember that comedy is played from a third to a full half faster than dramatic action, though some companies drag out the work like a carpenter hired by the day. Several companies utterly spoil their comedy product by making one idea do for the whole reel. One was released the other day that had three hundred feet of padding that merely showed a man in a room. It should have run about four hundred feet, but it was stretched to close to a thousand feet. It ceased to be a comedy long before the middle was reached and in the last few hundred feet it tired.

When you write a comedy keep it just as short as the story will stand. Get all the meat in in the form of extract of beef. Make your campaign against some likely company and you will not have to complain of prices for long. One of these days we are going to put out comedies three to the reel and clean up the market. If you can beat us to it, go ahead.

Synopsis and Action.

Here's a letter from a Los Angeles correspondent who has a lot of ideas, but no technique. He says:

> I have before me a letter (written some time ago), from the editor of a local film company, in which he says, "Our Director, Mr. ———, likes very much the synopsis recently submitted us and thinks if it were well worked out with plenty of love interests combined with your novel idea that it would make a very acceptable story." Another letter says, "Your synopsis entitled, 'The ———' is at hand. Have read same and believe that a good story can be written around it. I would like to have you work it out carefully in scenario form and submit it to me at an early date, etc. If you have any other synopses, etc." The scenarios have since been written and returned, comment being, "Our director was very well impressed with your synopses, etc., but when the scenarios came he was disappointed for he feels that the stories have not been worked out as well as they should be. In the ———, in working out the story you seem to have lost the best part of the meat. In ———, you have utilized several ideas that we have done before." As you will see, I write fairly good stories as far as idea and plot developement goes, but somewhere in the scenario are faults in technique. I think it would be a very good plan could writers who really possess ideas that have been proven good and those who have the technical training get in touch with each other and benefit themselves through the union of their individual capabilities with mutual profit. The quality of the output would certainly be materially improved. I think that it is too often the case that an editor, much impressed > by the brilliancy of a certain idea or plot, is forced to fruitlessly lament the fact that so very practical a plot had not fallen into the hands of a better trained man.

Some few directors insist that they want no more than a few lines of synopsis, but we think that most directors prefer the work of the author since the man who originates the idea might be supposed to be better able to develop the plot than some outsider. It has been our personal experience as well as deduction from observation that few collaborators work well together. It is almost impossible to get in complete mental touch with another.

But usually the shoe is on the other foot and the would-be photoplaywright is more apt to have technique and no ideas than ideas and no technique. Having the ideas, the technique should be reasonably easy to acquire.

We do not mean the technique that comes from the reading of books or the study of a school course, but the development of an idea into a complete product through common sense and study. No man ever was born with a complete technical foundation. He acquired it with more or less rapidity according to his mental equipment. It is not so much a matter of inspiration as hard work. The trouble is to get right down to the hard work. Ideas may come easily, but it takes a workman to get them out right.

Train yourself to get the best out of each situation. Take a commonplace scene and try and raise it to greatness. Work it in every possible way. Practice remaking situations. Take the hackneyed and make it new.

As a concrete example, take the familiar situation of the dead baby's shoes. The wife is about to leave her home, but the shoes come between. Perhaps the most familiar version of this scene is in Sir James Young's one act play, Drifted Apart, where the couple, ready to separate, make division of the baby's belongings. That has been done in photoplay several times as has the variant where the wife comes across the shoes as she is about to leave home.

Here we have three or four factors; the husband, the wife, her lover and the shoes. Now ring the changes. Here are some suggestions:

> The wife stops for the shoes. The lover, impatient, draws her away with some sneering remark about her foolishness. Mother love is stronger than illicit passion. She turns back at the last moment.
> The baby is not dead. The woman callously passes the crib where the sleeping child lies and proceeds to pack up. The waiting lover picks up a shoe and so is drawn to the crib where the child lies. He thinks of the little son he is leaving for the love of a woman not his wife. His conscience is awakened. It is he who breaks off the affair.
> The husband catches the pair. He does not offer to interfere but calls her back to offer her a share of the little toys and the tiny boots. She breaks down and seeks and obtains forgiveness. Here the husband, a quiet, masterful man, wins through pretending not to oppose, knowing that opposition but serves to delay the flight.
> The woman does not take the shoes because of her sense of guilt. In the flight she comes upon a worn little shoe upon the sidewalk. It reminds her of those left behind, of that moment when the man she is leaving was her tower of strength as they stood beside the little grave. She goes back and finds a welcome still.

These are just a few machine-made examples, but it is the training of this faculty of remaking that constitutes the real Technique, the ability to dress the bare idea with effective action and supply heart interest. See what you can add to this set. Perhaps you will find that you have a play of your own before you realize it.

But don't ask others to supply your technique for you. Learn to do it yourself and you'll not have to feel the sense of failure. Don't try to lie down on the job. Get to work.

Look Out.

Keep an eye on the advertising pages for new companies. We'll try to keep you posted, but sometimes an advertisement will come in after these pages are made up. The Mutual-Film Supply split will bring new companies into the field on both sides. Naturally they will need scripts and you can help supply that need if you get in in time.

Writing for a new company it is well not to call for setting of too elaborate a nature. The staff is not fully organized, the strength of the players is not fully known and there is a tendency to use the script easily and quickly made in preference to the one calling for elaborate settings and large casts. Keep them simple and salable.

Chicago Beats Us.

Chicago beat us to our own idea of a get together club. Marc E. Jones writes:

> The Chicago Photoplaywrights met, and all (3) voted that a most pleasurable time was had (a la Podunk). By all means issue a call for more to get on the band wagon, for I must admit that I have learned more in one meeting than my fondest hopes would have led me to anticipate. Frambers, Kramer, and myself answered "here" to the roll, and Miss Justice will be with us at the next meeting. Miss Justice wrote after receiving your letter, and I called on her last week, and found her very pleasant. Selig has her joined out, and I understand that her work is fine.

We had hoped long ago to have had our own Inquest Club in swing, but a somewhat serious illness and a trip south made extra work that prevented the giving up of an evening. We hope early in January to get the local section started. Those who have written in will be duly advised. Others desiring to sit in should send their addresses at once.

Don't Get Nasty.

The other day Hopp Hadley sent us a couple of letters that came in the same mail. One was a penciled warning that the writer could not write for nothing and that if the Reliance dared to produce his rejected play he would take action. The other was from a pestiferous cuss down in Washington who scribbled a rejection slip all up with what he thought was clever comment.

This sort of thing is foolish. It does not help the writer and it may hurt. Write the letter, then tear it up, but do not make an ass of yourself. The editor would rather take your play than send it back, but you've got to give him something for the money he pays you or he'll be in bad with his employer.

Playing It Up.

Look over your scripts after you've written them and try and see if you have played up the big scenes. Have you made them important or have you given them just the same emphasis as the others?

Start slowly, but gain in speed as the scenes pass and hurry your audience along to the climax. Do not let the action drag and then come to the big scene to be played in the same tempo as the rest. Put in a couple of beats on the bass drum, a fanfare in the brass and let the wood wind shriek. Lots of scripts are spoiled because the author writes the climax as casually as a connection scene and the director, reading in a hurry, decides that there is not enough to the play. Play up the big stuff, hold down the rest and your big scenes will be big because the others do not interfere.

Tens and Elevens.

Here is what Richard V. Spencer thinks of the envelope question:

> Regarding the folding of scripts, would say that it sometimes happens that authors will send us a story in a No. 10 envelope and enclose a stamped envelope of smaller size for return. In that way mistakes are sometimes made and scripts folded to fit the smaller envelope, owing to the amount of time saved in handling stories. If authors would be careful to send their stories in No. 11 envelopes and use No. 10 as an enclosure, stamped and addressed as usual, the envelope would be used and there would be no trouble in that respect. Personally, I dislike to consider anything but double fold script, which, as you say, fits naturally in a No. 10 envelope. There are several reasons for this, one is that it goes through the mails better, another, that it is easier filed, and a third reason is that when taking scripts to the director, as often happens, the unfolded script is bulky and unwieldy to carry and unless the story is very good will not be considered at all.

Unless you have had the editorial desk you would be surprised at the number of scripts that come in number ten envelopes and with a commercial size provided for return. This is in part due to the belief of the novice that the small envelope will be used to apprise the writer of rejection; that a larger envelope may be sent, but editors have no time for such foolishness. Do it right. It's just as easy.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

F. J. S.—Replies are not sent by mail. Miss Mona Darkfeather, or the Princess Darkfeather, has been leads with Bison, Selig, Bison again and apparently has tried out with Kalem. In being billed by the Kalem under another name it is possible that she was loaned by Selig. Did you note that you asked no question, but merely made a statement?

L. E. F.—You are not very clear in your inquiry, but if you mean the chief gangster in "The Musketeers of Pig Alley," it was Alfred Paget.

E. G.—Henry Walthall was Jack in "Friends." His friend was Lionel Barrymore. Walter C. Miller was opposite Miss Marsh in "Brutality." Miss Claire McDowell was the old maid in "The Sunbeam." Wilfred Lucas, and not Edwin August, was the king in "When Kings were the Law." He also was the sailor in "A Sailor's Heart." The Identifier did not "get" "An Absent Minded Burglar." Miss Florence Geneva was the actress in "Two Daughters of Eve." This has been stated repeatedly. Read this department every week and you'll find many questions answered before you ask them.

W. C. E., who sends a one-cent stamp and no envelope for a list of studio addresses, is requested to read about these being sent for a stamped and addresed envelope.

M. N.—"A Darktown Duel" is not cast. William Christie Miller and Miss Kate Bruce were the old couple in "An Indian Summer."

L. A. C.—See E. G. above for part of "Friends." Miss Pickford was the orphan, Charles Mailes the bartender, and Robert Herron the hostler.

V. S. U.—We fail to see that your development infringes upon the one published. The basis of the two stories is the same, but the development is sufficiently different to pass. If you sold your adaptation and have failed to sell original work, it should suggest to you that your original scripts lack the proper novelty of idea. You may not be as original as Dean Swift, but perhaps you can improve the ideas.

M. S.—In "The Struggle of Hearts," Burton King was Rodney Ford. We believe that he has left the Lubin Company.

RICHARD ROE—Romaine Fielding was the westerner in "His Western Way." We have not yet received the cast for "The Divorcee." Henry Walthall was Indian Charlie in "My Hero." We do not know where "The Muskeeteers of Pig Alley" was made. To acquire this information of all releases would entail too much of a task. Any of the first four books of the New Testament will give you the information you seek. The account reads that Joseph and Mary were denied admission to the inn because it was already overcrowded by those who had come to their place of nativity to be registered under the Roman law.

ORIENT—Miss Mary E. Ryan played opposite to Romaine Fielding in "His Western Way." We cannot find record of the Champion "Twelfth Juror," though it is our recollection that the story was used by another company than Thanhouser, which released under this title. Possibly the story was done under another name. Our identifier did not get the Biograph for December nineteenth yet.

M. B. C.—You are sufficiently close to New York to declare in on the New York section.

C. E. C.—Bison does not name its people. In future please omit the adjectives. Miss Loveridge is with Biograph.

A. W. V.—Query the companies regarding your acting goat, but we would suggest that a more respectful hearing will follow the use of better stationery than telegraph blanks.

A. M.—The fact that Miss Briscoe is to join the Vitagraph, very probably is news to that player. We do not know Mr. Johnson's middle name. Perhaps Bennie from Lubinville does. It's up to him.

Metal Shipping Pail.

WE illustrate herewith a shipping pail known as the "Wagner Film Holder," the same being made by a firm in Independence, Kansas. A sample of this pail has been forwarded for inspection, and it appears to me to be the ideal shipping package for reels of film. I do not see how anything better suited to the purpose could be had at a more reasonable cost. The pail is to all intents and purposes water tight and would be absolutely fireproof, except that it be placed where the metal itself would become heated to such an extent that the film inside would be charred—a thing exceedingly unlikely. The pail is very strong in construction, yet it quite light. Space is provided at the top of the pail for posters. The pails are made in sizes to contain from two reels up, and the additional weight in the larger sizes, as against the smaller, is very slight indeed. In a three reel pail an inch is allowed inside for sending posters. This space allowance presupposes each reel to be first enclosed in a separate tin box, as is required by interstate law. With this kind of package, a law of this kind would be unnecessary, and considerable weight would be saved by the elimination of the separate tin package. In the illustration it will be noticed that the end of the bail 1, is doubled over. This heavy part of the bail ends slips through slot 2 (the slot doesn't actually show in the photograph), in ear 2. In end 1 is a hole through which the wire of seal 3 is run, and the seal is then clamped round the bail at each of its ends. The lid of the pail cannot be removed without first removing the bail, so that the seal effectually prevents any tampering with the package. The entire pail is of metal, even the bail handle, 4, being made up by spirals of the bail metal itself. This container has my hearty approval and commendation.

Several Things.

Mr. Norman E. Bucklin contributes the following interesting letter:

> I am told that you published some time ago a complete description of the method of taking and projecting Kinemacolor pictures; also describing the projector mechanism. What date or issue of the paper did this appear in? I am not posted on this new developement of the business, but want to keep up with the times. I am now working in an exchange. For the love of Mike, isn't there some way you can beg, caution, advise, demand or plead with a certain class of operators in regard to the handling of films? It certainly gives me a double breasted Katzenjammer (have you ever been on one?), to get first run films every night with foot after foot of sprocket holes torn off and apparently needlessly; also there will not be a little bit of leader left, all because the operator will not put the rubber bands on the reel, but slams it in the can and jams the lid on with three feet of film sticking out to be torn and mangled. It has been a week since it happened, and my hand still reminds me where I ran a pin in it with which some brilliant operator had made a patch, while inspecting a film. He might have had sufficient consideration to use a safety pin, anyhow. And, now I want to say a few words about the mirror screen, being prompted thereto by an exhibitor who is using one. He opines that neither love nor money would drag it from him were it the last one to be had. Before instaling it he was using 60 ampere, a.c. He is now using 45 of the same current, and gets a much better picture. The dark and medium toned pictures show up fine, but with the extremely light ones, the flicker is noticeable, though not objectionable. The operator must exercise care to run at correct speed, since the current being 60 cycle and the shutter a three wing, too much speed would get the shutter blade into synchronism with the alternations of the current and the flashing of the light would give bad results on the screen as it is extremely sensitive. The pattern of wall paper, clothing worn by the actors, etc., show up with surprising clearness. He is doing more business than any other show, advertising the fact that he runs only two reels of good pictures shown right; whereas his competitors grind out three reels in thirty minutes. His people notice the difference and tell him that they would rather get quality, rather than quantity. The moving picture public is becoming discriminating, and you have got to show pictures right to get their nickels and dimes. I just opened the December 14th issue. I agree with Mr. Spraker of Rich Hill, Mo., as to the tailpiece between subjects on split reels. Even an insertion of 2½ feet of "This picture approved by the National Board of Censorship" (provided it was, of course), would not be bad.

I have not gone into an exhaustive description of the process of taking Kinemacolor pictures, though I did give a fairly complete description of the mechanism on page 1406, December 17, 1910 issue, but that description would be out of date now. Power's No. 6 mechanism also has been used to a considerable extent for Kinemacolor pictures, and I believe a special machine is now being made in this country for the Kinemacolor people, but I do not know just what it is as I have not paid much attention to that subject lately. I think the only way a certain class of operators will be made to treat films decently is for the exchanges themselves to compel that kind of treatment by charging up all damage done, seeing to it that that damage is paid for. There would be a terrific howl for a while, but the ultimate result would be immensely beneficial to the business. Some of the damage to films is due to excessive speed, demanded by the speed-maniac manager, some of it is due to the projector not being kept in proper repair, some of it may be charged to ignorance on the part of the operator, and some of it to pure carelessness. This damage will robably continue until exchanges themselves call a halt, and this can only be done by the exchanges acting together. I intended, as soon as I can possibly get the space, to publish a series of articles on this very thing—in fact the articles are now written, awaiting space. As to the mirror screen, I can heartily commend that article as being first class, provided the proper finish is used to fit the conditions in each house. Is is expensive, but it is in the nature of a permanent investment, since the screen will last practically forever.

Further Information.

On page 1076, December 14th issue, is a sketch illustrating the motor-drive used by Greenville, Miss., concerning which I asked a little further information, which Greenville now supplies as follows:

> Sliding base No. 1 is held down by a half inch rod over its top, one end of which is fastened to the machine and the other behind the base. This allows the block to slide back and forth, and still holds it in line, the rod setting in a slot in the top of the block. I am a member of Local 144, Memphis, Tenn., not 140 as you had it.
> I will be in again soon, as I have perfected another useful invention which I want to put out about January first.

Glad to hear from you Greenville, and trust your new invention will be of value to the business. Many thanks for complying with our request for further information.

From Constantinople.

Mr. Salvator Tanti, who has been an exhibitor in California, and who called on the editor not long since, while on his way to Turkey, his native land, where he intended engaging in the business of exhibiting moving pictures, sends back the following interesting letter:

> Constantinople, November 27, 1912.
> I arrived here safely after a fine trip. Am in good health and trust this will find you the same. I did not go to London to secure the Power's and other machine agencies, as I intended, fearing the closing of the Dardanelles, which was the talk of the papers when I left New York. Besides, I thought there would not be any business in machine selling on account of the war, and I was not mistaken in that. I have made an inspection of all the photoplay theaters in this city, and will now make a report which may be of interest: The Cinema Pathe Freres, the largest and most frequented, seats about 1500, mostly on hard-bottom benches. The Cinema Eclair is a nice place, seating about 800. The Cinema Orientaux seats 250, and the Cinema Central and the > Cinema Gaumont seat about 200 each, the latter showing a talking picture or two. The Cinema American is owned by Austrians. There is nothing American about it, except one large flag outside, a small one inside, and an American film or two in the program. Two other theaters are in course of construction. The fronts of them are very poor, with no ornamentation whatever, nor are they lighted sufficiently, all the display consisting in cheap posters, and too many of them. These are displayed without any taste whatever. The theater interiors are entirely bare, except the Pathe and Orientaux, in which there is a little attempt at decoration. Most of the houses are in complete darkness during projection. Ventilation is the worst possible, except the Pathe, Orientaux and Eclair. As to music, there is a four piece orchestra in the Pathe, and some attempt is made to play to suit the pictures. In the Orientaux pictures are played perfectly by a pianist. The others have only a piano player who massacres the scenes to the best of his, or her, ability. The seats are cheap and uncomfortable, particularly when one considers that the program lasts about two hours. The operating rooms are very poorly built, though the projectors (Pathe machines) seem to be in good condition, but are without the most necessary safety devices, such as film magazines, and fire shutters. Projection, the most important thing of all, is very bad, except in the Pathe and Orientaux, where it is passable, but could be very much improved upon. Prices are good, being forty, thirty and twenty for adults, and children twelve and eight cents. In the Pathe the highest priced seats are in front. In the other houses the highest priced seats are in the last row. Both ladies and gentlemen are allowed to keep their hats on. Smoking, is allowed, and as there is little or no ventilation, I leave it to you to imagine the result. Enclosed find programs printed in the prevailing spoken languages, viz: Greek, French, Turkish and Armenian. Pathe and American films are the most popular; particularly Indian and cowboy scenes. Business is good, taking into consideration the fact that the city is in a state of siege, with a war at its very doors. I am told it was excellent before. There is a fine field for theatrical enterprises here, for there is not a single theater worth while in this city of over half a million and a half. Locations are hard to get, but you know that money talks. Believe me I am lonesome without my best friend, the Moving Picture World, and the Projection Department. How many good lessons have I missed. I hope I will be able to again shake hands with you in I hope I will be able to again shake hands with you in my passage through New York, for I long for the good old U. S. A., and my glorious California.

Such letters are indeed interesting, showing, as they do, conditions in far-off lands. It will be noticed that the highest priced seats are 40 cents, (presumably Brother Tanti means U. S. value), for a two hour show. This would be equal to 20 cents for our one-hour performance. Therefore Turkish prices seem to be double, or more than double ours, for an inferior performance. It is indeed surprising that there is any amusement business at all in Constantinople under present conditions.

Isolated Plant.

Atchison, Kan., writes:

> In the house where I am now working we have a 12 h. p. International Harvester Engine, and a 5 k. w. dynamo. We also have a Mercury Arc Rectifier. All this is in the basement. The operating room is six feet square, made of steel and contains a Power's Six machine, with the operating switch on the ceiling. The switch is a double throw, one side connecting with the rectifier, and the other with the d. c., generator current. If I have any trouble with the engine. I just throw the switch to the other side and go ahead on alternating curent from city mains, through the rectifier. I pull 40 amperes on both. Our switch board has ten switches and a dimmer. Eight of these switches control the house and lobby circuits. I believe the best way to learn is to study one's own trouble, when there is one, and I have not asked information from anybody yet. In running, my ordinary speed is about 50 a minute. When I have something like a death scene, I drop to about 40, and exciting scenes I run at 65. There is no man who can run a machine with a motor and get the results he can with a hand grind.

I cannot at all agree with your plan of not asking information of anybody. I am a firm believer in talking things over with brother operators and learning all one possibly can; though of course, one learns also by studying his own troubles, and he should by all means do that; but if he depends altogether on that plan, the process of learning will be a very slow one indeed. Your plant seems to be an excellent one. It is quite possible to project as perfect a picture with a motor as by hand, if you have the proper speed control, but the trouble is that the average operator will not stick right there and watch his picture as closely, where he has a motor-drive, as he will when running by hand.

Motor-Drive.

Mr. Vene Royston, Grand Ledge, Mich., contributes a sketch of his motor-drive. It is, however, too simple to justify the expense of illustration. It consists of a stand on the left side of the machine high enough to bring the motor pulley on a line with the take-up sprocket shaft of the mechanism. To the take-up shaft is attached a wheel 5½ inches in diameter, covered with insulating tape. The motor pulley is built up by winding insulating tape on the end of the shaft. He then arranges an idler pulley by attaching one end of the arm to the motor casting, the idler pulley on the other end being held to the drive belt by a rubber band attached to the arm and the machine table board. Instead of the regular fan speed regulator he uses a regulator having more contact points. The plan is simple and effective. Mr. Royston has recently sold the Vaudette Theatre, of which he was manager, but expects to have another later on. In the new venture we wish him every success.

Manufacturer Made Good.

Dorson Bros., Waseca, Minn., writes:

> Some time ago we wrote asking your assistance regarding a travel ghost we were troubled with. The Precision Machine Co., became very much interested in our case, and finally sent us new parts for our machine, without any cost to us, to be placed as directed. These parts brought the shutter up close to the lens, allowing a narrower shutter blade to be used, which cuts the flicker down to a minimum. We write this to show our appreciation to the manufacturer who took sufficient interest in the exhibitor after the machine was sold, and to remedy the trouble.

This is something that every manufacturer should feel in duty bound to do. It is simply making good on promise made, and the fact that the machine is sold and paid for should cut no figure, and will cut no figure if the manufacturer is honest. We are glad to know that the Precision Machine Co., took this course.

No Objection.

Manitoba, Canada, writes as follows:

> In a letter some time ago I said we could not use an Edison rheostat with our 110 volt, d. c. generator. In your reply you said we were wrong. I tried this matter out myself, and sure enough got a dandy light—much better than the other rheostat gave. Two different operators tried this before, but could not strike an arc, but since then I have gotten a new generator, I know, however, with the other generator, same style and make, we could not force a current through the Edison rheostat. And now for a question: What is your opinion of building and running a picture show in connection with an opera house in a town of 2,000. By this I mean, cut out the pictures and play traveling companies whenever they appear. We have no opera house here and the people want me to take hold of this proposition. They will put up the building if I will take it and close down the pictures when companies can be booked.

If your other generator would not force current throught the Edison 110 volt rheostat, then it was not a 110 volt generator, or else the rheostat was in some way out of order. I see no possible objection to the plan proposed. If the people want an opera house they will probably have it whether you take the management or not; so you might as well accept the proposition, provided they do not want too much rental for the building. The only disadvantage would be that you would lose your film rental on the nights the companies appear, unless you could arrange with the exchange to cut off shipment on such dates, and make a corresponding reduction—a thing which is doubtful. Anyhow, I think you had better accept the poposition. If you don't somebody else probably will, and you will then have opposition.

I. B. E. W. Vs. I. A. T. S. E.

Mr. Will Merrell, President Local 208, I. B. E. W., Des Moines, Iowa, writes as follows:

> In December 14th issue, you say that we have made a mistake and should have affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E.; also that our cards will not be good in very many cities. After thoroughly investigating, we decided to affiliate with the I. B. E. W., where we, as operators, think we belong, and local 208, I. B. E. W., will remain there until our cards are recognized all over the U. S. We take the position that, as between the two—electrical workers and stage hands—we are where we belong. We have to be electricians to be good operators, but we do not have to be stage hands, and we can get as much, if not more, help from the I. B. E. W., as from the I. A. T. S. E. You yourself must admit that this is the fact. We are not making a mistake, friend Richardson. I will bet that you class yourself as an electrician rather than as a stage hand, and that is exactly what we do. Do examining boards consist of stage hands or of electricians? Could an operator pass an examination because he was an expert stage hand, or because he was an expert electrician? In Des Moines, all stage electricians are members of the I. B. E. W. I would like to hear from you and any of the delegates of the I. A. T. S. E. convention held in Peoria this year. I was in Peoria at that time and helped to try to organize the operators there, but could not do it, as Brother Woods of 'Frisco will tell you. The I. B. E. W. of your city will show you where the operators belong. Take it up with them, and you will soon be convinced. Think it over and you will have to admit that Local 208 is right. This is the statement of the case as we see it.

Well, brother Merrell, I cannot but admit the correctness of what you have said, yet I repeat that you are in error in affiliating with the I. B. E. W. If you believe that the operators ought to be affiliated with the I. B. E. W., the way to accomplish that is not, in my judgment, the way you have gone about it. The American Federation of Labor is the governing body, and, as such, it has given jurisdiction of the operators to the I. A. T. S. E. Now, without discussing the rights or wrongs of this action, as long as this is the case, I hold it is the duty of operators to affiliate with the I. A. T. S. E. If this affiliation is wrong, then let the I. B. E. W. take the matter into the American Federation of Labor Convention and there fight it out and change the affiliation. With that method of procedure, I have no fault to find. There are, of course, things to be said on both sides of the question. It is quite true that the operator is not, in any sense, a stage hand. He probably doesn't know any more about stage work than a crow knows about Sunday school. On the other hand, he is and must be, at least to some extent, an electrician. The whole thing hinges, however, on which body the operator can receive the most practical benefit from in the bettering of his conditions—the raising of his wages, if you please. Will the I. A. T. S. E. or the I. B. E. W. be able to give him the most practical assistance in time of trouble? I can understand exactly how you feel about the matter, but I must repeat that the place to fight this matter out is in the American Federation of Labor, and not by an isolated affiliation of a few locals with the I. B. E. W., thus dividing the forces of the operators and lessening their power in every way.

Worst Ever.

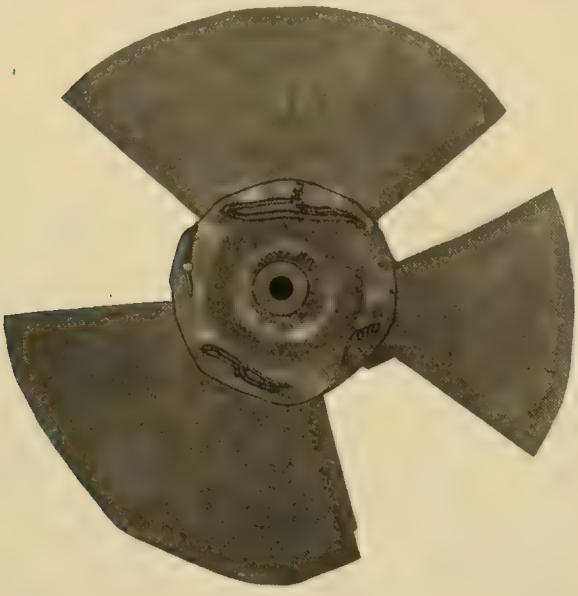
Ralph E. Bishop, secretary Local 194, M. P. M. O., Indianapolis, Ind., sends in a most interesting specimen. He writes:

> Under separate cover am sending you a shutter I removed from an Edison machine. I have been in charge of the repair department here for the last four years, and have seen some very funny things in the machine line. I think this is about the worst that has come in, and I thought it might be interesting to you as a curiosity. The party who brought the machine in said his picture was not very good, and wanted to know the reason why. I told him.



The photograph speaks for itself, so there is not much use in commenting or making remarks about the benighted mind that produced this "horrible example." I have not bothered to measure it out, but do not think it cuts more than 75 per cent. of the light. As a piece of mechanical construction it is a wonder—it certainly is. Thanks, brother; it is interesting, all right.

Two and Three Wing Shutter.

Mr. Rae Peacock, Stafford, Kan., sends in check for the handbook and asks:

> What advantage is there in having a two-wing outside shutter on an Edison machine? Would a three-wing be better?

The two-wing shutter gives a greater percentage of light, and more flicker. The three-wing shutter gives less percentage of light, and less flicker. See reply to Brother Turnpaugh's letter last week for a more detailed explanation.

Water-Cooled Condensers.

Brooklyn, N. Y., writes as follows:

> In December 7th issue, you asked if any one ever heard of water-cooled condensing lenses. Saw one once. It was very thick and looked as though an ordinary lens was hollowed out from the plano side, filled with water and fastened to a flat glass disc a little larger in diameter than the hollow lens. I didn't learn who the maker was. I read of your visit to a theater in the vicinity of Flatbush and Atlantic Avenues. I think I know the place. Have heard that the manager does not pay much salary, and hires anyone who comes along when in need of a crank turner. This would explain the poor results. Why don't you visit the smaller houses sometimes? When you write of your visits, it is always of the large houses. There are operators in this city who work without a supper hour. I cannot understand this. The daily laborer digging in the streets gets his supper hour. It would really seem that an operator ought to be treated with as much consideration as a ditch digger. For various reasons eating supper in an operating room ought to be a matter for the consideration of the Board of Health, and the man who consents to eating his meals while twisting a crank ought to be ashamed of himself.

Brooklyn closes his letter by informing us that he is the guy who put the cam in Cameragraph. I don't have much time to visit theaters, Brooklyn, and naturally when I do drop into a house it is usually one of the larger ones. I wish I did have more time to visit the boys, but I have about all I can attend to. I thoroughly agree with you in the matter of operators working during the supper hour. I also agree with the Board of Health might as well take a hand in that proposition.

Operators' Union.

Texas writes:

> Can you tell me how to form a moving picture operators' union, and how many it would take to get a charter? Enclosed find money order for the new Handbook.

Your letter, Texas, has been referred to Mr. Lee Hart, General Secretary and Treasurer of the I. A. T. S. E., Chicago, Ill., who will supply the desired information.

The Needle, Watson!

Mr. Charles A. Balsley, Connellsville, Pa. sent the following to the Enterprise Optical Co., Chicago:

> Why not have the intermittent sprocket calmly take up the star cashier for a motor-drive around the lower loop before she is flimflammed by some crank. Give her a free upkeep for one year in the lamphouse by the main switch and shield her from all harm by closing the outside front shutter. She could then place the arc lamp on the stand, sit down on the metal operator seat and read all about the 1913 Motiograph Model in the article.

Huh! Yes, I suppose all that could be done, and then the young lady might dance a Virginia Reel, take a drink from the tension spring and then visit Mammouth Cave. If she happened to fall in the Echo River, she could have the guide-roller over a barrel, all of which is a very nice frame-up. But we repeat, Watson, the needle! The gink has got the papsie-lal.

Discovered.

Some time ago Los Angeles asked about a flicker in his light, which appeared only when the machine was run at a certain speed. He has now concluded that the effect is due to the synchronizing of the shutter with one side of the current alternations. No doubt he is correct, though this does not produce a flicker, but a flashing of the light. This effect has been described in the Department several times. It was first discovered by the Editor of this Department when he made a trip to Wilkes-Barre to see what a flashing of the light described by Lyman Howe meant. The Howe people were thoroughly puzzled, and so was the Editor when he first saw it.

A Star Number.

Recently a New York operator detached the three wing outside shutter from his Power's Six machine, and sent it to the factory with the request that new screws be put in and that the shutter be carefully set—that is to say, timed. One sees and hears some funny things in this business, but to my way of thinking this particular genius is fully entitled to the booby prize, and I guess he will hold it for some time.

Cupola.

W. S. Turnpaugh contributes the following:

> In your issue of November 30th, Vol. 14, No. 9, Illinois writes of fireproofing his operating room. You gave him some good instructions about galvanized iron and sheet asbestos backing ¼ in. thick at least, but I will relate the way I had my last operating room constructed, as follows: 12 ft. x 10 ft. x 8 ft. 6 in. high, a 4 ft. vent flue or cupola out to the roof. This cupola extends 4 ft. above roof with the North side solid. The East and West side had lowered sides, the South side had a door about 24 x 36 for use in case it was necessary for any purpose to go out on the roof. The operating room and cupola were built of No. 20 gauge galvanized iron, which was not nailed to any wood whatever, but was built on an angle iron frame, with each joint overlapped and bolted together. The iron room was built full 4 inches away from any wood.
> Now don't you think that this 4 in. air space will radiate and carry off more heat than asbestos would, even if the latter were ⅜ in. thick? The ceiling of the operating room was 12 inches from the wood ceiling of the theater, and all this air space opened into the vent pipe. The state and city fire marshal came in and looked for asbestos, etc., and when they examined the air space stunt, they both said if all the operating rooms in the state were like it, they would be mighty glad. I wish you a Merry Xmas and a happy, prosperous New Year.

Yes, Brother Turnpaugh, an iron room built inside of a wooden one, with a four-inch air space between, opening into a cupola four feet across, would be all right. I would consider it as more than equal to a ⅜-inch asbestos backing. However, I do not like an iron lining in any event. If properly made, as yours seems to be, it is fireproof, but give me brick, concrete or hollow tile every time. There is now being made a gypsum block, which comes from four to six inches thick and about 24 inches square. It is impervious to the action of fire and is very light, making an ideal operating room wall, where light weight is a consideration. Congratulations on that cupola, brother Turnpaugh, but it should be made to open automatically in case of fire. (See page 78 of the new Handbook for the illustration of the idea.)

Home-Made Handbook.

Newark, N. J., writes interestingly as follows:

> Enclosed find $2.50 for the handbook. I have been a reader of the department for three years. Am not well informed so far as electrical matters are concerned, though I have been operating for three and a half years. This is how I have kept the department: Every week when the paper comes to the theater I amputate the Projection Department and fasten leaves together. These I bind in a cover of cardboard, using enough issues to make a good sized book. Any time I am in trouble I look through this handbook of my own invention, and usually find the remedy. Although I have operated for the above named period, I do not believe I could pass an examination on the electrical end. I have been away from Newark, my home town, for four and a half years. I would like very much to secure license. I must therefore prepare myself. I know the uses of the different electrical appliances, but could not, I fear, answer the questions properly. I have tried hard to learn, but we must all have help of some kind, and I am in hopes the new book will supply what I am deficient in. Can you tell me how to go about getting a license in Newark?

My understanding is that no license is required in Newark. If there is, then go to the City Hall, Licensing Department, and find out where to make application. Your method of preserving the department is excellent, but I would suggest that you index the various articles for convenience in reference.

Operator's License.

Ashtabula, Ohio, encloses $2.50 for the new handbook, and makes the following inquiries:

> Am operating two Power's "6-A" machines. This city does not require that operators be licensed; therefore there is no examination. Would you kindly give me instructions as to what procedure to take to pass examination so that I would be permitted to operate in large cities—Cleveland, Ohio, for instance?

There is no license that will permit you to operate in all large cities, though in Massachusetts, as I understand the matter, once you are licensed you can operate in any city in that state. Just what other states have this system I do not positively know, though I believe there are others. You would have to go to Cleveland, or whatever city you desired to operate in, and, after making application, pass an examination before receiving license. In Cleveland you would, I believe, also be obliged to become a member of Local Union No. 160, I. A. T. S. E.

Slap on the Wrist.

J. T. May, Bartlesville, Okla, says:

> I humbly accept your criticisms on running dramas twenty-five minutes and up. I know I should not do so, except in rare cases. I will be glad to run them faster if you will tell me some other way to make four reels last from 1:30 to 3:15, or from 6:30 to 8:30. That is what I am required to do, so as to put the vaudeville act on at the correct time. However, I must give you a slap on the wrist on that carbon holder proposition. I have used the Motiograph, Power's and Edison. The two former are practically the same. With even ordinary care the Edison will give perfect satisfaction on any amperage up to 60 a.c. I have used 60 amperes on my lamp for over six months steadily, from 1:30 to 11:30 P. M., and so far have used only one carbon clamp screw and three terminals. The total repair bill for six months was twenty-eight cents. I have a side throw of six in sixty. We use a 6½ and 7½ condenser, 4½ inch e.f. tube. Front condenser sets 18½ inches from the aperture. If I line up my lens correctly I have no ghost, but have an out-of-focus effect on one side. I can get an even focus by throwing the lens out of line, but that brings in a ghost. Can you help me any on this proposition? I understand that the Simplex machine is approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters with a motor-drive. Is that correct?

While it is quite possible that the carbon clamp of the type you name has given you satisfaction with 60 amperes of current, still I can only repeat that, with heavy current, that type of clamp is not giving general satisfaction and should be discarded. As to the focus trouble, I would suggest that you loosen your aperture plate and place a small piece of paper behind, in such way as to bring the short throw side slightly further away from the lens. By this, I mean angle your aperture slightly in relation to the lens. Please try this out and report results. I think you will find it will be effective. I have not been notified of the approval by the N. B. F. U. of the Simplex for motor drive. Is your vaudeville act of enough importance to justify the injuring of your projection?

Advertising.

Florida comes forward with an order for the handbook and the following complaint:

> I am one of the managers of the only show in this little town which boasts of 4,000 population—mind, I say boasts—in winter, but in summer has less than one-fourth that number. My operator projects a fine picture but business is mighty poor. Music is supplied by as good a pianist as I can afford; also as good as I could get here. Our circuit supplies films from two to six months "of old age," which is also the best I can afford. I greatly appreciate any hints you can give me as to waking people up to the fact that I am giving a first-class show at very small profit. With limited means I cannot afford to go to a great expense in advertising; in fact I have tried advertising and it doesn't seem to get results. People just appear to be tired of the pictures. We have good pictures all the time, and there is no fault to be found in the show. Perhaps I myself need a "jar." If so, please send it along.

It is exceedingly difficult, Florida, to suggest a remedy for conditions such as you name. It strikes me that your show would be almost anything but first class, using films six months old. A film six months old usually is in pretty bad condition; full of rain marks, dirty and chunks cut out of it. With such service it would be utterly impossible to put on a really first-class show, no matter how good the projection might be, and this might, in large measure, account for the lack of interest displayed by the people. It is not my province to tell you that you can afford a better service, but if I were in your place I think I would experiment, for one week at least, with a fifteen day service. You could not lose so very much, and possibly you might find it a paying proposition after all, though I will admit that in such a small town the result would be problematical. It is difficult for me to diagnose the case, because your idea of a good picture and my idea of a good picture might be at wide variance, and I dare say they are. I don't think expensive advertising would pay in so small a town. It is probable that you have started on a five cent basis, where you should have commenced at ten cents and used better service. It is possible that the interior of your theater is unattractive and not sufficiently ventilated. Your description of conditions is altogether too indefinite for me to form an intelligent opinion. If you are one of those fellows who will run a picture without a title or a title slide and leave the spectators guessing as to what they are looking at, the answer is easy. Any manager who will permit that sort of thing will surely get the "Absent Treatment" from the public, sooner or later.

Questions.

Mr. R. L. Clark, Elkhart, Ind., writes as follows:

> I will contribute a couple of stunts which are new to me, though perhaps old to others. Found the tracks of my Power's Six aperture plate worn. Turned it over and found it worked fine. There are film tracks on the other side, the same as on its face. This refers only to Power's Six and Six A. When my framing lever was in the center, there was a bad grinding sound. I had tried every way I could think of to eliminate this and finally tightened both setscrews up good and snug, just so the framing lever worked medium hard, then I put a thin washer on the left-hand stud and put the cross bar back on. Have had no grinding noise since, no matter what position the framing lever is in. My idea is that the small idler gear which meshes into the fly-wheel pinion was not traveling true. Those who have this trouble should try putting a washer on one or the other of the studs which hold the ends of the horizontal bar. The possible result of this can be first tried by inserting the point of a small screwdriver between first one end and then the other of the cross bar, prying gently outward while running the machine with the framing lever in different positions. Now, here is a question: I cannot tighten the screw in the fly-wheel without its tightening the movement so that I cannot run the machine, unless I tighten the screw when the intermittent sprocket has just passed the pin. Please explain. I installed wall shutters according to the plan you sent me and they work fine. Of course, I have not had a fire to actually try them out, but I cut the string over the machine aperture, and they all drop together like clock work—a mighty fine thing whether you have a fire or not. My operating room is 9 x 14 x 6 feet high. It is steel lined. The wiring is all in conduit. The auditorium is lighted with the inverted system. It seats 450, with a six foot aisle in the center. To lubricate my Power's Six intermittent movement, I unscrew the oil cup and screw the mouth of a tube of white vaseline into the hole from which I took the cup. I leave it there until empty, just squeezing the end a little, two or three times a week. I find forcing about one tube of vaseline into the intermittent every eight days serves. It works out the intermittent and fly-wheel shaft. I ran a Power's Six for nearly three years, and have never had a breakdown. What do you think of the new 11 inch reel with 5 inch hub?

As to the aperture plate, I presume it would work fairly well for a short time, if turned over, but it isn't, as you imagine, the same. The tracks on the front side of tempered steel, whereas the back is of comparatively soft metal. Moreover, there is a bevel in the aperture and the turning of the plate over would cause the mask to blurr on the screen. As to the reason for your being obliged to tighten the fly wheel screw at one particular point in the revolution of the cam, I cannot offer any explanation. It should not be so. The vaseline tube stunt is unique, and I am not prepared to say that it is not all right. Grinding noise in toggle gear might sometimes be helped by the plan you suggest. In other cases it would not. Am not yet ready to express an opinion on the reel in question.

Poor Contact (?).

Brooklyn asks help on the following: He is working on 220, 60 cycle a. c., through Power's Inductor; 12-foot picture on a 60-foot throw; ⅝ cored carbons above and below. The carbons burn fine for about half an hour after installation, then the buzz ceases and they become red and needle badly. Has tried three brands of carbons, with the same result. Machine is Power's Six A, motor-drive and all contacts are clean. I think, brother, that last remark is not correct. If you correctly describe the difficulty, the trouble lies in the fact that your carbons are not making good contact with the carbon arm. Take the carbon arms out and clean their inside surfaces thoroughly with a file. You will probably find the metal has roughened and burned. If so, file down to a smooth surface.

Carbon Sharpening Knife.

Mr. Leonard L. Carr, member Seattle Union 154, I. A. T. S. E., sent the editor a very neat little carbon sharpening knife, the same being made from an old file, one side of which is ground down to a knife edge, which is then, after the temper has been drawn, cut into a serrated form, by means of hack-saw gashes about one-sixteenth of an inch apart along the entire edge of the blade. A wooden handle is added and, on the sample sent, the editor's initials are neatly stamped. Brother Carr says:

> This article was made by myself, and, so far as I know, is not patented. It can be made and used by anyone, or they can be had from the Baker Sharpening Shop, 1717 Main St., Seattle, at $1.25. The knives work fine on all projection carbons, but the street lamp variety is too hard for them.

Many thanks for the knife, Brother Carr. I have tried it, and it works very nicely indeed. My view is, however, that a twelve inch cabinet maker's wood rasp is better for sharpening carbons.

Weak Light.

Harrisburg, Pa., encloses $2.50 for the new hand-book and inquires:

> Am running two Standard machines, 7½ and 6½ condensers, an 18 foot picture at 112 feet, with 30 foot drop in the throw. Get a good picture but not very bright. The screen is dull white paint. Pull 40 amperes from 110 volt mains. Would you please let me know what kind of glass to use in the ports, and how much current I ought to use?

You have not said, Harrisburg, whether your current is alternating or direct—a very vital bit of information indeed. If a.c. then you should have not less than 60, and preferably 75 amperes for an 18 foot picture, using a painted screen. If your current is direct then 40 amperes should give you fair illumination, although you ought to have 45. But how do you know you are pulling 40? Perhaps it is less. Increase your amperage and see what the effect is. I think two 7½ condensers would give you better results than one 6½ and one 7½. Use ordinary window glass in the ports.

"BILL MIXES WITH HIS RELATIONS" (Essanay), Dec. 26.—Augustus Carney gives us one more of those laughably comic characterizations by which he has won his enviable reputation. In this picture he plays an eccentric tramp who, dressed in evening clothes and plug hat, taken from a drying line, makes a visit on Sarah Springer, as Cousin Whooper, an expected but unknown relative. The spinster is cleverly played by Eleanor Blanchard. The real Whooper when he comes is played by E. C. Calvert, and the constable by John Stepling. We have seldom seen comic table manners that were really funny, but Bill's gormandizing of Cousin Sarah's vittles kept the whole house in laughter—the secret lies in Augustus Carney's facial expression which, at such times, is that of a very wise monkey. He is truly one of the best clowns in picturedom. As usual in Essanay comedies, the leading player is ably supported by the whole cast. This offering will make fun everywhere and can safely be recommended as good entertainment.

"A BUSY DAY IN THE JUNGLE" (Kalem), Dec. 25.—John E. Brennan and Marshall Neilan (with some help of two Kalem girls) play a farce in which two comic huntsmen get a real scare from a lion, pretty fierce, and one, almost real, from a band of very well-made cannibals.

"BRAVE OLD BILL" (Kalem), Dec. 25.—On the same reel is this farce that is undeniably funny, yet at the same time is just a trifle vulgar. It won't please some, but it will be acceptable to most. J. E. Brennan plays Old Bill, a character who loves to sit on the beach in a bathing suit and spin yarns about his life-saving exploits. Ruth and a friend of hers get two drygoods store legs and stick them up in the water for him to save.

"TWO WOMEN AND TWO MEN" (Vitagraph), Dec. 25.—Charles Gaskill's work usually shows care and thoughful handling of the scenario. In this picture, unusually interesting because of its contrasts, his knowledge of his craft and its possibilities is even more apparent than usual. It is indeed an admirable piece of artistry. We don't mean to imply that it lacks originality, but that wise criticism rather than inspiration is seen in it. The action strikes fire now and then; but the art of the players supplies it; that it gives them the chance is the writer's great merit. The story is harmed by the trite, happy ending in which a child plays the usual role and is the means of reuniting the parents. The character drawing is first class. Most interesting, perhaps, are the roles taken by Edith Story and Harry Northrup; the first, an unscrupulous actress (just woman) and the second, a young man about town (wise owl). Earl Williams plays the married man in the woman's snare and to Julia S. Gordon is left the role of wronged wife and mother. It was ably produced by Van Dyke Brook.

"THE BEACH COMBERS" (Pathe), Dec. 26.—A melodrama, of the according to rule kind, dealing with the adventures of a pretty fisherlass with beach combers, who have wrecked a boat (this doesn't get over) and are afraid that she will betray them. The girl is Betty Gray and the chief male part is taken by J. W. Johnson. There are some scenes that are very strong, one in particular, the beach combers gathering flotsam with a drowned corpse showing where it came from.

"THE LITTLE ORGAN PLAYER OF SAN JUAN" (Selig), Dec. 26.—This picture lacks the artistic photography that it needs; good photography seems scarcer than some months ago and this is a pity, for its effect on the impression given to even the most ignorant spectator is marked. This picture deals with the effect of music on people, even on a wild mob, to make them reverent. In one or two scenes it succeeds in making us feel the music by sight alone, which is something; but there is too much that reminds one of the producer's troubles in making the picture and it seems artificial. It was plain that the girl at the organ bent awkwardly down to let the light shine upon her face. There was another woman, in the mob, whose lack of acting spoiled one whole scene. Perhaps Colin Campbell, the producer, didn't give Lanier Bartlett's scenario the best chance of making good; it has possibilities. Thomas Santschi, as the priest, is just what was wanted; Bessie Eyton, as the motherless orphan who grows up to play so powerfully, makes a very strong appeal in the center of the picture. We didn't recognize Camille Astor in the old Mexican woman that she plays so well. Wheeler Oakman and Eddie James play two Spanish dons.

"A CLUE TO HER PARENTAGE" (Edison), Dec. 27.—This is the sixth installment of the Edison's interesting serial story. The leading characters are Marc MacDermott, Mary Fuller, Miriam Nesbitt, Charles Ogle and Ethel Browning. There are several scenes taken on shipboard, the placing of the camera so as to show the rising and falling horizon being especially effective. A moonlight scene taken at the side of the ship is all too short. The same is true also of the view of New York harbor as the vessel slowly ascends the North River. The picture does not depend on these, however, for its interest, as there are many strong situations, one of them being where Mary is shown the portrait of her mother.

"A BUSINESS BUCCANEER" (Kalem), Dec. 25.—This is a story of a business intrigue, in which a rival corporation president tries by the aid of burglarious methods and assistants to obtain a secret formula. The story turns on this point. Alice Joyce has the part of the secretary of a rubber company's president, and is besides in love with the son of her employer. One of the office scenes may suggest to some that her costume was rather pretentious for a business woman. However, this is immaterial, and does not affect the dramatic qualities of the picture, which will hold. Tom Moore as the son of the president does good work. George Middleton, as the president of the successful company, looks the part. The photography is excellent. A dog is a factor in a big situation, but his presence did not strengthen it, as the animal did not pursue the course that would be followed by a real dog whose mistress was being strapped into a chair.

"THE GOD WITHIN" (Biograph), Dec. 26.—A real Biograph. Among those contributing to make it such were Blanche Sweet, who portrayed the mother wronged; Henry Walthall, as the father of the baby who lived; Claire MacDowell, who took the part of the mother who passed away; and Charles Mailes, the doctor. The work of all of these, as well as that of the betrayer, was of the best. The final scenes were unusually impressive and splendidly handled. As the picture faded there was a significant coughing and clearing of throats on the part of a large audience.

"TWO BOYS" (Lubin), Dec. 26.—A comedy drama in which Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe have the leads. Two young boys have parts. The comedy situations created by the work of the two leading characters go far to make the picture a success. There are some excellent settings, the one of the hotel lobby being especially good.

"JACK'S BURGLAR" (Melies), Dec. 26.—Good comedy drama, in which there are some typical Western scenes.

"BILL BOGG'S WINDFALL" (Biograph), December 30.—We have had several farces like this one which the audience seemed to enjoy, for there was a good deal of laughter while it was on. Boggs is a poor day laborer. He gets a legacy and has a day or so of uncomfortable affulence, but in the midst of a party given to his friends is told that it was a lawyer's mistake. If such a picture were made convincing, it might be very funny.

"A DAY'S OUTING" (Biograph), December 30.—This farce, on the same reel, also made laughter, but isn't so well acted or so amusing. It is rather poor.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 1," December 30.—A few Balkan war scenes of great interest are included with several other good items among which, and perhaps the most valuable, is a view of a new kerosene motor plow that was tested near Stockholm in Sweden. It forks up the loam and will make any agriculturist with a sense of humor laugh.

"PLANTING THE SPRING GARDEN" (Vitagraph), December 30.—Flora Finch with the good help of Hughie Mack, makes many a laugh in this fresh and clever farce, picturing the luck of two city people with their first garden. Mrs. Citiman is a first rate organizer and planner. She lays out gardening for her stout spouse, buys him the tools, seeds and all that is needed and reads novels while he does the work. Comical trouble ensues, especially when Flora finds Hughie asleep at the hoe. The fun comes from the clever playing rather than from the humor of the action itself; yet the author of the scenario, Ida Hall, deserves credit for working up into an acceptable picture a good idea. William Humphries produced it.

"SUE SIMPKINS' AMBITION" (Vitagraph), December 28.—In this offering Leah Baird plays Sue the country girl, somewhat of a gawk, who has subscribed to directions to guide tyro photoplay actresses-to-be. There's a swain in the village who wants to marry her, but she has a career opening before her and he seems of small account. By a train of circumstances, in which her own impossibility plays a large part, she does succeed in getting a try-out. Her acting on the screen makes a roar and she is in the house to get the full benefit of the jolt. Miss Baird shows remarkable versatility in this picture which is quite out of the line in which she has made her mark. Kingsly Higgins, who plays the country lover, seems to be a new face on the screen. His work is such that we are looking forward to seeing more of it with much expectancy. W. V. Ranous, Richard Rosson and Harry Northrup are also in the cast. It is a very laughable offering that will be enjoyed. Its authoress, Hattie Gray Baker, and Ralph Ince, the producer, deserve credit.

"THE BLIND CATTLE KING" (Lubin), December 28.—A poetical romance that is quite new in pictures so far as we know. Its central character is a very rich Mexican who is blind and who goes forth alone to seek for a worthy mate. He finds her in an American girl who is charitable and who, after he has been turned out to wander all night in the woods, goes to find him, falls into a pool and is rescued from drowning by him, blind though he is. She, thinking him poor, consents to marry him and go to his home. The picture's idea is as delicate and light as the dust on the wings of a butterfly; it could hardly have been made convincing to the common light of day, and worthy of praise as it is, makes a not very strong offering. Its weakness comes chiefly from the fact that the man's character, his poetical Don Quixote sort of soul, wasn't made the big fact of the picture. We didn't know the peculiar charm of the man until the end and failed to believe that he was real.

"A MOUNTAIN TRAGEDY" (Kalem), December 28.—A picture that, though it has a trite Western situation, has a good deal of freshness in its development. Much more plausibility and naturalness has been found in making the ill-used hero seem guilty of robbing the stage and then in showing how he is not only cleared but wins a pretty girl for his wife, than we thought possible. Ruth Roland plays the heroine; Marshall Neilan, the young hero; P. C. Hartigan the girl's father, who is the villain, and Horace Peyton, the gentleman of the road who really held up the stage. It is a very well acted and smoothly conducted offering.

"HE SWORE OFF SMOKING" (Edison), December 28.—The work that William Wadsworth does, especially in the opening scenes of this farce comedy, has a quality that makes it a joy forever. He is the father of a family and has been persuaded by his wife (Miriam Nesbitt) to swear off smoking. In a delightful little scene, partly around the dining-room table, he is found not only admonishing his son (Yale Boss) to take note of the dangers of smoking, but is counting up the benefits that will come to the whole family from the money that will be saved. We can see that he is going to break his pledge. It is a tip-top offering straight through and one audience heartily enjoyed it.

"HOW A HORSESHOE UPSET A HAPPY FAMILY" (Edison), December 28.—Louise Sydmeth, the authoress of this character sketch, has given Edward O'Connor a fine chance to play an Irishman (Mike) with a black eye, one of the prettiest ones we have ever had the good fortune to see. Alice Washburn plays the Irishman's wife and is almost as funny. It is she who finds the horseshoe and brings home that which is to be the cause of a free fight in the kitchen, the breaking of china and of other unlucky things. Mrs. William Bechtel plays Mike's mother-in-law. Marty Fuller and Yale Boss have roles as two boys. Arthur Houseman plays the other Irishman who is hit when Mike flings the offending bit of iron out of the window and who comes in to find why such things should happen. The picture is very amusing and made much hearty laughter.

"FOR HER" (Edison), December 31.—A good commercial offering without any special originality or insight, but also without any weaknesses. Very plainly it was made by a producer who knew his business and from the script of a man who can prepare a scenario and get a situation over. As for the acting, Mary Fuller plays the daughter of a counterfeiter (Charles Ogle), who consents to make himself scarce in the neighborhood for her sake. As he was about to be arrested, it doesn't seem a very noble action, but the story didn't demand that it seem so. William West plays an old waiter who has taken a fatherly interest in the girl and in her love story. Harry Beaumont plays the son of Mary's rich employer who in the end marries her. Robert Brower plays Harry's father and Bigelow Cooper, the detective who has arrested the girl's father once and is on his trail again when the story ends. Bannister Merwin has done much better work than this, but the picture is a good offering notwithstanding.

"A WOMAN" (Vitagraph), December 31.—A story of passion in which Leah Baird has the most interesting role and is ably supported by Harry T. Morey and Courtnay Foote. The backgrounds are furnished by high social life and nearly all the scenes are ball-room pictures in which there is a good deal of graceful dancing and many pretty girls. The situation has been clearly conceived by the authoress, who is none other than the leading woman, Leah Baird. Out of pique, the heroine marries the man she doesn't love. The other is a cold-hearted egoist and his attentions to other women is the cause of her anger. The drama develops out of the struggle in her heart after marriage, when the egoist comes back into her life and it ends in her falling in love with her husband. The producer, Charles Kent, has put the scenario's intention over a hundred per cent. It is an effective picture.

"THE POWER OF SILENCE" (Lubin), December 30.—A two-reel picture dealing with a Western love story and one that has a sensational catastrophy that will surely give a thrill; but it is not a very strong offering. Two reels were too long for the story and it seems strung-out, the more because the acting, with the sole exception of the leading player, Romaine Fielding, who draws as usual an interesting character, is poor. At the end, this strange man uses hypnotic power to make the villain who has married and abused the girl whom he loves, throw himself over a cliff. The two fall together from ledge to ledge of a deserted city of the Cliff Dwellers.

"A MOTHER'S STRATEGY" (Lubin), December 30.—A picture that is too melodramatic in its scenario to be a very good vehicle for artistic acting. As a consequence, it furnishes more than one scene that may be thought by some to be comedy. Edwin August, who plays the lead, has one or two moments when his playing is at its best, but only one or two. Ormi Hawley has a most ungracious part and she does nothing to redeem it.

"THE CAPRICES OF A KING" (C. G. P. C.), December 31.—In this picture is told the love story of Louise de Valliére and Louis XIV. Perhaps it was photographed in the beautiful parks of Versailles; in any case, the scenes, lavishly hand-colored, are lovely. It stands on these scenes rather than on the story which is well known by most spectators; but on account of them it may safely be commended as a masterpiece. The acting is graceful and the players pleasing.

Independent

"THE HUNDRED DOLLAR" BILL (Majestic), Jan. 7.—Showing the predicaments into which a poor man who has been given a hundred dollar bill may get. With a sick baby at home, he tries to get the bill changed. The druggist, the grocer and everyone he meets become suspicious. He is about to be arrested when the original owner of the bill comes along and helps him out.

"A POOR RELATION" (Thanhouser), January 3.—Florence La Badie and James Cruz play leading roles in this drama. Domestic scenes of interest are shown, interspersed with glimpses of the Bronx zoo. The story shows how the young doctor's regard was won by the abused poor relation, in spite of the fact that the young widow was setting her cap for him. The injury of the child by fire was well handled, but the denouement of the picture was not quite strong enough.

"A GUILTY CONSCIENCE" (Thanhouser), January 5.—This photo-play has a good little plot, but it treats farcically what might have been handled more strongly as plain drama. Pictorially it is good and the manner in which the scheming guardian was induced to give up his stolen securities and money, was quite ingenious.

"ARABELLA'S ANKLE" (Nestor), Dec. 30.—In this comedy there are some remarkably fine views of rocky shore. The story portrays the difficulties experienced by an artist in securing a model to complete a sketch on which he is working.

"A TAMMANY BOARDER" (Eclair), Jan. 2.—A comedy with many laughs. A tiger is featured; he is turned loose in a boarding house and creates consternation.

"DOROTHY'S BIRTHDAY" (Gem), Dec. 31.—A story in which is featured a sick child, whose recovery is brought about by a party.

"THE BEARER OF BURDENS" (Imp), Jan. 2.—King Baggot and Jane Fearnley have the leads in this good dramatic picture. There is excellent work by the entire company.

"WITH THE MOUNTED POLICE" (Thanhouser), December 31.—The scenic features of this picture are very striking, though the plot seems not quite so strong. The young trooper is bound by anarchists and thrown into the bottom of the aqueduct. A flood is opened and he is in danger of drowning. His dog brings the girl to the scene and she rescues him. Later the anarchists are rounded up by the mounted police.

"COUSINS OF SHERLOCKO" (Solax), January 1.—A burlesque detective story which develops into passably good comedy. It concerns mainly the resemblance between a crook named Jim Spike and the hero. The latter and his friend are shadowed by detectives and dress up in swell feminine garb. In the end the heroine of the story hales the real miscreant into court and succeeds in getting her friends released.

"SAVING MABEL'S DAD" (Keystone), January 6.—A comedy half-reel in which Mabel falls in love with George and her father wants her to marry Henry. The scene of greatest interest is where the two lovers go to the father's rescue in a row boat and motor boat. George, of course, wins her.

"A DOUBLE WEDDING" (Keystone), January 6.—This, on he same reel with the above, is more successful than the other. It concerns two wedding parties, one white and the other black. By an amusing accident, the practical jokers follow the colored bride and groom, and the newlyweds who outwitted them get safely away on the train without being molested. A good offering.

"FOR LIZZIE'S SAKE" (Keystone), January 20.—This half-reel is a comedy of the screaming sort. Its situations are absolutely side-splitting. It is a sort of "Desperate Desmond" picture, and in spite of the fact that the heroine's predicament is perilous in the extreme, the laughter goes on without stopping. A particularly good offering.

"SIR THOMAS LIPTON OUT WEST" (Keystone), January 20.—This, on the same reel with the above, shows the genial yachting enthusiast and cup-challenger, Sir Thomas Lipton, visiting an Indian camp in the West. There are some mule-riding exhibitions given.

"IN THE RANKS" (Broncho), January 8.—This fine two-reel film depends not so much upon actual warfare and bloodshed for its strength as upon its freshly interesting plot. The opening scenes, in which the young sergeant rides on the back of the coach with the girl to town, his interference in the fight between drunken soldiers, and his marriage to the girl before the justice of peace, are worked out naturally. Then follows the father's displeasure and the rival's scheme to have the hero sent into a hostile Indian country, to almost certain death. The girl, hearing of this, saves him. The part of Ruth is admirably taken. The later scenes are in keeping with the first, making altogether an offering above the average of merit.

"BLACKENED HILLS" (American), December 28.—This allegorical picture gets up quite a strong interest as it proceeds. It contains a witch-like creature, hobbling along with a crutch, an evil hearted woman, a perfectly good hero and a perfectly bad villain. Besides these there is a good little girl, around whom most of the interest centers. The witch repays the kindness shown her by the hero and the good little girl, by saving their lives. She also sets fire to the evil woman's beautiful hillsides as just vengeance for her selfishness. The California setting helps along the fairy story type of film, which has by no means been exhausted.

"THE GROUCH" (Victor), Jan. 3.—A comedy of character in an office life setting with the boss as a most pronounced type of grouch. It is pretty well made, naturally acted and very interesting. Owen Moore plays the grouch who makes life burdensome for his stenographer till she rebels. Fritzi Brunette, whom (in the picture) it has already been shown has a temper of her own, is promoted to be office stenographer and the boss, meeting his match, doesn't know why he doesn't fire her. The ending, in which he compels her to marry him by a threat of imprisonment (she had sent her father with some money belonging to the boss and he had stolen it) fails to convince and is the weakest part of a good picture.

"TOYS OF FATE" (Powers), Dec. 27.—A picture not up to the standard that Powers has been setting of late; in fact, it is crude in its story and, for the most part though not wholly crude in its acting. Edwin August plays a peculiar character, a married man who lives a kind of huntsman's club life in the woods, quite impossible as shown, and the story is of his relationship with his wife from whom he is separated and whom in the end he forgives. It seems to be a poor picture made by a good man in a hurry.

"THE LITTLE ENCHANTRESS" (Majestic), Jan. 5.—A picture with many fine qualities. Its center of interest is a child; but although the little player who takes the part is fairly natural, the old bachelor who adopts her and also his old valet are so finely drawn that the satisfaction that the picture gives comes largely from them. The girl's father dies and, like a stray kitten, she insists on the kindly old man taking her home where the difficulties of taking care of her, and the amusing facial expression shown by the old bachelors who have human hearts but unaccustomed minds, make good, unforced comedy.

"JUST HARD LUCK" (Majestic), Jan. 12.—A dramatic picture of an innocent man who goes to prison and five years later is freed by the confession of the guilty one. The most interesting part of it comes after he is freed when he once more lands in a cell on another unjust charge, but this time he is proved guiltless by a detective and also by the capture of the real crook. The scenes showing the sleuth's laboratory with all its up-to-date apparatus, chemicals, etc., is very interesting.

"POOR BOOB" (Punch), Jan. 9.—A farce of married life in which a bald spot on the husband's head, the mix-up of a bottle of hair-restorer with a bottle of magic love potion, and other lively doings have an important part. It is just nonsense to make laughter; but is well acted and while not the best Punch picture, will be acceptable.

"MIX-UP" (Punch), Jan. 12.—On the same reel, is this laughable Chinese laundry farce with Finney and Rice (the long and the short) as Chinks from whose shop a fat woman's wash gets mixed with that of a thin woman. The trouble is straightened out on the city sidewalk, but not without the good help of a big cop. We think it will get 'em; it's good fun.

"FINNEY'S LUCK" (Punch), Jan. 16.—The new idea used in this farce does give a punch. Poor Finney finds on the street stolen theater tickets and takes his best girl to the show. Soon a detective intrudes rudely on their joy and invites them out to a real drama in the station house. That the thieves are found and Finney and the girl freed doesn't make things square; for the girl doesn't like the ending of the show at all. It will go all right.

"SAW WOOD" (Punch), Jan. 16.—This dramatic farce on the same reel will also make many a laugh. It deals with an author, who, in spite of his wife, would go out as a tramp in search of local color. He accepts a pie fom a quickly passing real tramp and meets the man with a gun who makes him do the sawing. It is acted briskly and breezily and makes a good offering.

"THE CITY BOARDER" (Champion), Dec. 30.—A clown character farce in which the city man's canned vegetables and old eggs at a country boarding house serve as the backbone. The woman who plays the farcical farmer's daughter is not well cast; but the amusing city man saves the picture, which has substance enough to make more than one good laugh.

"THE WHITE HERON" (Champion), Dec. 30.—This beautiful nature picture, taken in South America, is on the same reel. It shows us a pair of snowy white herons, caring for their two fledgelings. It is well photographed.

"HER KID SISTER" (Crystal), Jan. 5.—A picture in which a girl is given the role usually allotted to the bad small boy; she decides which of her sister's two lovers is most desirable (she has been bribed) and makes it hot for the other. It is an offering more vulgar than usual and seems made for the gallery. Pearl White plays the small girl and Chester Barnett, the happy lover.

"JONES RESURRECTED" (Crystal), Jan. 5.—This farce on the same film, uses an old idea which is still fresh enough to please. Jones gets very drunk (his experiences make a large part of the film), misses a train that is wrecked and they have a funeral. Jones comes home drunk, lies down on the bier and wakes up during the funeral.

"A FATHER'S STRATAGEM" (Milano), Jan. 4.—The novelty of this picture comes from the sub-titles which lead forward a domestic quarrel in the terms used in reporting the diplomatic conferences of two nations on the brink of war. The conceit is quite apropos today and is very amusing. Aside from this, the story is commonplace, but the picture makes an acceptable offering.

"TRYING TO KEEP BEDELIA" (Reliance), Dec. 28.—A new Bedelia (Miss Weston) makes this one of the best of the series that has appeared; she is more natural in the role and has a lighter touch in her acting and it tells in the picture's effect. The scenario, as dealing with the troubles a family has in keeping its cook, has perhaps more substance than usual and this makes the mere nonsense of it more amusing.

"LOVE AND THE TELEPHONE" (Majestic), Dec. 29.—By a very clever handling of sets, this picture conjures up with unusually convincing clearness a big city office building with its corriders, elevator, offices, etc. And the story is worthy of the care used in making it clear. In it, a telephone girl overhears a message and is the means of saving her sweetheart from losing all his money. This clerk's employer is a broker and wants the girl for himself so sneakily sets a trap into which the young man is ready to step. The girl has to keep him locked in a closet to save him from speculating. In a dramatic scene, she waits, the key in one hand, the stock tape in the other, until she knows she can safely let him out. It might have been made a bit more powerful by restraint in the acting, but it gets over.

"CANINE RIVALS" (Solax), Jan. 3.—A comedy in which a young husband cures his wife of her infatuation for a lap dog by purchasing eight or ten canine pets for himself. Some highly bred dogs are shown, such as Pomeranians, Scotch Deerhounds, Spitz, Poodles, etc. Dog fanciers will enjoy this picture, but for the average observer the plot is a little thin, though there are amusing moments. The story could perhaps have been shown more briskly in a half reel.

"THE WHITE GLOVE BAND" (Gaumont), (State Rights).—A three-reel production in a colorful French setting, with views of Monte Carlo and its surroundings, hotel life, gay restaurant scenes, etc. In contrast with these are pictures of low resorts, thieves' headquarters, and bands of the notorious Apaches. The manner in which Roland Ladeaux, police inspector, trails and finally captures the "white glove" band is graphically worked out, with many interesting and thrilling moments. His disguise as the rich Egyptian and subsequent love affair with Nina, who is aiding the thieves, holds the interest strongly. Just how convincing is the regeneration of the girl and the inspector's love for her, is something the observer will want to settle for himself. Madam Claire Simonet in the part of Nina handles the work artistically. As a whole, the picture makes one feel that he has been looking at a close representation of the gigantic outlaw bands which occasionally work havoc in Paris and its vicinity—a strong production throughout.

"RAGUSE, THE PEARL OF THE ADRIATIC" (Gaumont).—A series of excellent views in and about Raguse, showing the harbor front, San Blaise Church, the Old Mint, Franciscan Cloister, street scenes, etc. Picturesque and well photographed.

NEW BRANDS FOR FILM SUPPLY.

All uncertainty and rumor as to the future plans and policies of the Film Supply Company of America, are completely set at rest by announcements from that company's offices during the past week. The plan of distribution remains unchanged from that which, since the inception of the Film Supply Company, has been successful. Business will continue to be conducted along the same lines as heretofore and a strict adherence to the firm's slogan, "The Exhibitor Be Pleased," will be rigidly enforced. With this end in view, the company has planned for the immediate addition of several of the more prominent brands of "out of combine" films, which will materially strengthen their program. Chief among these is perhaps a brand to be called "All Star," which is being prepared for an early marketing. These films will be only of productions which have been past successes on the legitimate stage, and in many instances the original star and company will enact the play for the "All Star" films. These will become part of the regular program.

"Pilot," another new brand soon to make its bow, is being produced in a spacious and most modern plant in Yonkers, N. Y. This product will be under the watchful eye of George A. Magie, who for considerable time has been business manager of the Solax Company, where he has proven his capability as a film manufacturer. Then there is to come at an early date, "Prairie," a brand of westerns that will mark an epoch; "Monitor," a brand of comedy films for which a tremendous cast and general producing force has been engaged; "Monitor," a film which is entirely original and unique in its conception; and Anchor, a brand which in the majority deals with stories of coast and deep sea life.

It has also been announced that "Ammex" films are to take their place among the others comprising the Film Supply program, beginning Thursday, January 23rd, 1913, with a single reel western drama, "Love and Circumstances." "Ammex" films are the only brand which, without association, have weathered the storm among unattached regular release manufacturers. It speaks well for this company to say that their product has passed the discriminating eye of the Film Supply Co. "Ammex" films will be westerns exclusively and will be released every Thursday for the present. These pictures are made on the famous Santa Marguerita Ranch of 365,000 acres near San Diego, California. This is perhaps one of the largest ranches in existence and furnishes with its extreme area an abundance of wonderful locations to work with.

Among others, Gaumont, the de luxe edition of all films; Solax, the people's favorite; Itala, the split reel comedy creations; Great Northern, mastermakers of features; Lux, the established brand; Comet, the new film with an old name; Gaumont Weekly, the famous film of the whole world; and Great Events, the new idea film, continue as part of the Film Supply Company's program.

With such a program, exchanges and exhibitors allied with the Film Supply Company may feel well assured of the future.

FILM FEATURE OF MUNICIPAL ENTERTAINMENT.

When the Board of Water Supply of the City of New York holds its annual entertainment at the Palm Garden, Manhattan, on the evening of Jan. 19th, the feature will be furnished by C. J. Hite in the form of a Thanhouser release entitled "With the Mounted Police." The reason is that the mounted police in question are the Aqueduct division of the New York department, which division guards a great deal of territory of the Board of Water Supply. The whole division were loaned to Mr. Hite for use in the production of the aforementioned reel. They played their parts with enthusiasm, resulting in a very stirring and accurate portrayal of police life. Many heads of city departments will be at the Water Supply affair to sit in judgment on the coppers' debut as photoplayers.

Two directors, instead of one, are at work temporarily at the Vitagraph studio at Santa Monica. Rollin S. Sturgeon, who has charge of this company, went to Wisconsin to spend the holidays with his parents, and incidentally to introduce to them the bride he acquired a couple of months ago. In his absence Major McGuire and Scenario Editor Durham have been helping each other direct a photoplay written by Stanley, the leading man of the company.

Mr. MacDonald's first picture will be a Western, with Mr. August in the lead. There will be much interest in the appearance of this popular actor in a real Western role. There is no doubt among his friends that he will bring to his latest interpretation the same skill and care that he displays in all his work. The title of the picture will be "On Burning Sands."

A Two-Part Thanhouser Feature.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE choice of a subject like this creates a strong presumption in favor of the producer. The filming of a clean piece of fiction is always praiseworthy. The assurance of no leather pants and cowboy hats is worth something, too. The story of this feature is a pretty one, and it is prettily told.

The time is about the fifteenth century, and the scene, the castle and environs of a German robber baron, known as "The Eagle." This marauding nobleman, surrounded by his swashbuckling retainers, lives in his castle—an aerie among the mountain crags. There they abide, reveling and carousing, only sallying forth from time to time to rob the pack trains of wayfaring merchants.

But one thing in all the world does this ruthless baron hold dear—his little sister. And so, when the child falls ill and needs a woman's care, he sends one of his vassals to get some one to nurse her. The servant enters one of the peasant cottages in the valley and insolently commands the girl there to accompany him. She is fearful, but the stern baron's behest none dare refuse, and she goes to the castle.

Scene from "The Dove in the Eagle's Nest" (Thanhouser).

After lingering a while, faithfully and tenderly watched by the peasant girl, the child dies, and her nurse returns home, but her gentle ministrations to the ill one, her pitying intercession in behalf of tortured captives, have left their imprint upon the chieftain, and he is deeply in love with her.

While she is sitting pensively at her window, dreaming of the bold warrior, he is restlessly pacing his floor and thinking of the dove who has left the eagle's nest. At last the impulse grows irresistible; he determines to wed her. He calls at her humble abode and makes his offer of marriage. There would be no gainsaying him even were she so inclined, for he is the lord of the manor. But she is not, for she loves him. The parents, proud of the honor shown their daughter by their feudal lord, bow gratefully, and the day is set for the nuptials, which take place soon thereafter.

Years pass. The dove has borne him two fine sons—twin eaglets. The baron is called away to fight for the King. At the head of his soldiery, and accompanied by his trusty squire, he starts away. During a skirmish he and his squire are captured. After suffering many indignities and brutalities, the Eagle falls, overcome by his wounds and his hardships. The squire manages to escape from the dungeon. After much travail he arrives at the "eagle's nest," and informs his noble lady that her lord and master has perished. . . .

But the baron had not been killed. He had been revived, and been sent to the galleys. At a moment when his captor's vigilance has relaxed he escapes the galley, successfully reaches the shore and turns his face to his distant mountain home.

His arrival is timely. A neighboring lord has stormed his castle and, inflamed by the beauty of the baroness, is seeking to embrace her. In spite of her frantic struggles, he is about to succeed, when the husband, long mourned as dead, enters. The two grapple in deadly combat; the husband is victorious. He embraces wife and children, and the dove and the eagle are re-united in the "eagle's nest."

This, very briefly, is the story told by this striking film. The ensemble scenes, showing the motley soldiery in fray and at frolic, deserve particular mention. The gay abandon of these ruffians and the unconcerned, almost jovial, cruelty with which they treat their helpless victims depict, better than language could describe, that semi-savage state which knew neither pity nor compassion.

The quick transitions on the screen from roysterers, holding high wassail in the castle halls after a successful foray, to the little maid, gasping out her life alone in the turret chamber above, form a vivid contrast.

There are one or two false notes. The child's dress in the opening scenes may be historically accurate, but the fabric at once brings to mind a New England cotton mill. The illusion of medievalism, thus dispelled—though but for a moment—destroys the veri-similitude of the picture, and the proper atmosphere is but gradually restored. It is not enough to be correct historically; we must sedulously avoid the appearance of anything that might, rightfully or wrongfully, suggest another era than the one portrayed.

The same objection holds good as to the statue which forms the most prominent adornment of the baronial hall. Its selection was unfortunate. Statues of cavaliers became popular only after the real cavalier had ceased to be a familiar sight. And this particular cavalier is so obviously machine made, and is of a kind that forms the staple ornament in so many "parlors" of the present time, that on seeing it we are again, unconsciously, wafted from the fifteenth to the twentieth century.

In those scenes where the exterior of the castle is seen in the background the same defect may be noted. The architecture is not at all characteristic of the period, and the latticed balcony looks decidedly American. Besides, there is a vague suggestion of modern chimneys in the adjacent structures.

Throughout the reels there is evidence of considerable directorial skill, which needs, however, moving picture experience and a closer adaptation to moving picture requirements. With proper direction and development the ability which speaks out of these pictures will render good service in the future. "The Dove in the Eagle's Nest" is a splendid feature, and is more than that. It carries a distinct promise of many fine things to come.

SHERIDAN'S RIDE" (101 Bison).

THOSE who love battle scenes will find in these three reels plenty to hold their attention. They portray some of the more stirring events of the ride made famous in American annals chiefly through the poem of T. B. Read, written in 1865, and known to every schoolboy. It is a safe and conservative statement to say, that in the third part of this production occur some of the best and most realistic battle scenes yet thrown on the screen. We see men fighting from behind intrenchments; we see Confederate cavalry in action. Large masses of men are employed; there is apparently no attempt to save any expense necessary to create the illusion of battle. In line with this is the scene of the field after the action is over. A horse lends realism to this view. He tries to rise; he gets on his fore feet, but cannot get up. He falls back and lies stretched out, as though mortally wounded.

Sheridan, described by General Horace Porter in his well-known "Campaigning with Grant" as the ideal cavalry leader, is at Winchester attending an important conference of Federal commanders. Word is brought to him that his troops are in retreat, having been attacked in the early hours of the morning and surprised. With a troop of men he sets out for Cedar Creek, twenty miles away. As he comes near the zone of the retreating men he stops on a hilltop and surveys the surrounding country. Through his glass the audience sees the straggling troops, mounted and afoot, hurrying away from the merciless pursuit of the Confederates. History repeats itself as the Federal commander rallies his men and turns them back to retrieve their defeat. There are many stirring scenes.

A love story runs through the three reels. It touches the family history of the famous Federal cavalryman and forms the thread of human interest. William Clifford carries the role of Sheridan. Victoria Forde and her talented mother, Eugenia Forde, have prominent places in the cast and materially contribute to the dramatic quality of the picture. The women, of course, will be interested in the story as a story. The male element without any doubt, however, will follow the military features of the picture to the exclusion of the other factors.

In the first part there are fine views of an ante-bellum interior —in fact, much care is given to the settings throughout. The scenario is written by Messrs. Dayton and Willis, the Western Universal editors. Otis Turner is the producer. He has done well. He has drawn freely on the large forces at his disposal, and has shown much skill in effectively placing masses of men so as to bring them within the field of the camera.

FOUR-FOOTED PHOTOPLAYERS.

The Solax Menagerie Used in the Production of "Beasts of the Jungle."

The Solax studio has been transformed into a veritable menagerie, with carnivorous animals the center of interest. A lion, tiger, elephant, monkey, and parrot, were used in the big state-rights special "Beasts of the Jungle." It is estimated that four weeks will be consumed in the preparation and taking of the picture. A force of fifty men was added to the studio staff besides a large number of extra members used in the cast. If all the "props," scenery, and other paraphernalia used were piled on trucks, it would take eight trucks to carry all.

Nero, the lion, used in this production, is a big majestic animal only two years in captivity. He is fine in appearance, but ugly in disposition. He is about seven feet long, and four feet in height and weighs approximately six hundred pounds. He has a roar that sounds like the rumbling of thunder. He is not very pleasant company in a parlor or at an afternoon tea.

Princess, the tiger, is a large sinuous animal, by turns snarling or spitting, or submissive as a cat. Princess's spirit, has been partially broken by the trainer's javelin. She has been in captivity for more than ten years. She is about eight feet long and three and a half feet high. Her long period in captivity has not interfered with her voracious appetite. Ten pounds of meat for Miss Princess is like a bonbon. Since her sojourn in the Solax studio she has made away with two hundred pounds of meat, two cans of milk and seven inches of wood from the side of her cage.

Big ponderous Jumbo and his young son Trump are elephants that, in the aggregate, weight about a ton. Young and frail little Trump tips the scales at 700 pounds. Jumbo is about as old as Methuselah, and still carries seven or eight persons without losing his temper. He is as playful as a child, and shakes hands like a politician or a society matron, according to the way he sizes up his company.

Laura, the parrot, is a marvel. Laura is on familiar terms with everybody, and glibly repeats at appropriate occasions whatever she hears about the studio, including "tales out of school." She is a linguist, and can say "Vilst tu ein Vienna snitzel und Pilsner haben?" and repeats "Oui, oui," with deliberation.

Laura shares honors with her neighbor at the right. Mr. Dick is a personage according to the Darwinian theory, and an animal according to common sense. Dick, the monkey, is a diversion between rehearsals. A bribe of a lump of sugar will be sufficient to induce him to give a repertoire performance. Dick can hold up a mirror and imitate people combing their hair, shaving, or will powder his nose and get the proper expression too!

While these animals will do many entertaining stunts voluntarily, it is an entirely different matter when a particuar stunt is ordered by the director, Edward Warren, who has staged pictures with almost every animal in creation, rats, dogs and cats not excepted. It is estimated that he will waste seven thousand feet of negative before he will get the desired results.

Little Vinnie Burns more than once showed her pluck in pictures. She is a little dare-devil, in her riding, and can do more stunts on a horse than some cowboys. In the "Beasts of the Jungle" she is the little daughter of the American engineer. She rides off on an elephant and loses her way. Eventually she finds herself in a trap alongside of a jungle tiger.

There are other thrills, other sensations. Paul Bourgeois' spectacular fight with a lion in one of the scenes will undoubtedly be the talk of the country. During the fight every man and woman in the studio was armed with a rifle or a revolver.

News and Views of Houses Here and There

DREAMLAND THEATER, LOUISVILLE, KY.

An Interesting Resumé of the First Picture Theater Established in Louisville and the Third to be Opened in the United States.

DREAMLAND, the first moving picture theater established in Louisville, and said to be the third started in the United States, was thrown open to the public of the Kentucky metropolis on April 6, 1904. Dreamland, though according to the standard of that time in phototheater circles a high-class house, appears crude and unattractive when compared with houses which have since been erected in Louisville and elsewhere. While the third to be established in the entire country, it is further given the honor by many veterans of being the first animated picture house to possess an ornamental front. Harry Davis was the owner of a moving picture house in Pittsburgh at the time Dreamland opened, while Eugene Cline also operated one in Chicago. Neither of these, however, was as ornate as Dreamland, and the front of these two varied little from that of the ordinary retail store.

Irvin Simons was the proprietor and manager of Dreamland. William Barron, shown in the photo as the individual with the fireman's cap, was the operator at Dreamland, and is still working at that trade in Louisville, being in the employ of the Princess Amusement Company, which operates a string of houses. Mr. Simon is wearing a derby in the picture.

There was nothing cheap about Dreamland or its owners, and the house opened with an admission price of 10 cents. The Louisville public, eager to see the new entertainment, patronizd the theater liberally, and Dreamland literally coined money. The reels were extremely short, and in many instances, one performance lasted only fifteen or twenty minutes. An intermission of about the same period followed each show, in order that the house might again be filled before the performance was continued. Even with the intermissions, Dreamland usually ran about twenty shows a day, and as the house contained 124 seats, it may be seen that it was a money-getting proposition.

The first picture presented at Louisville's first moving picture house was "The Chicken Thief," a French importation. "The Chicken Thief" was 300 feet in length, and scored a tremendous hit with the patrons of Dreamland. A film shown shortly after the opening of the house was, "The Great Train Robbery," which was an Edison product. All films in those days were secured from Eugene Cline, of Chicago. Shipping facilities between Louisville and Chicago were unreliable, indeed, and the managers of Dreamland were often put to it for an attraction. Innumerable times the films for the show arrived in Louisville late. The Dreamland owners, however, were equal to the occasion, and every time the new films failed to put in an appearance, "The Great Train Robbery" was brought forth from the shelves, dusted off and run to the plaudits of the multitude. The film was held in reserve for emergencies and valiantly performed its numerous roles.

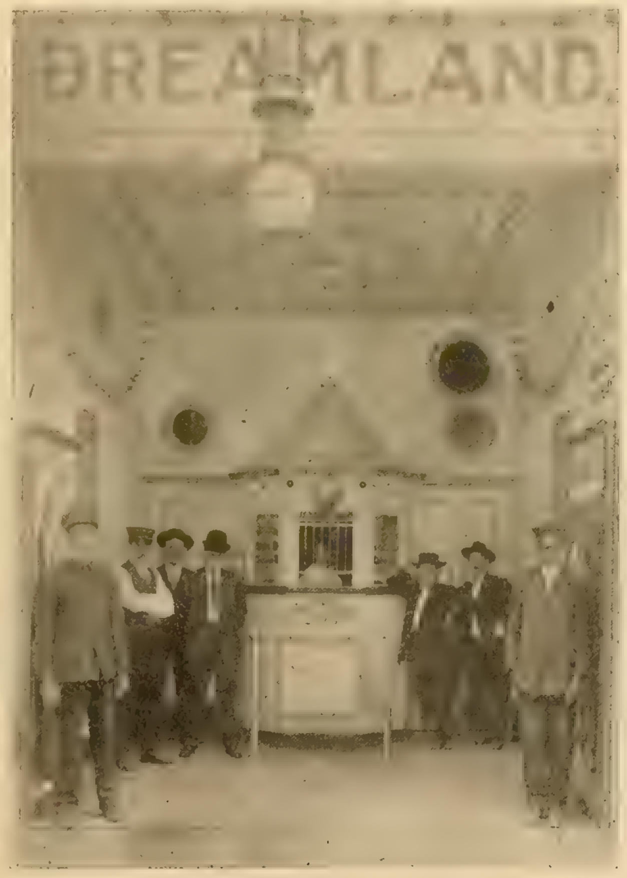
Exhibitors these days have things pretty nice, according to Irvin Simon, who recalls the old days with pleasure, nevertheless. Mr. Simon, when operating Dreamland, used stock posters in front of the theater, being one of the first to realize the value and necessity of publicity and exploitation. One of Mr. Simon's first moves on opening the theater was to hire a sign painter. This artisan was kept pretty busy, as he was given the job of making signs bearing the name of the current attractions at Dreamland. A negro porter also was kept out of mischief, as his duties consisted of winding and running a phonograph. A circular hole was cut in the operating room, and the horn of the instrument turned toward the street. Thus passers-by were startled by the strains of music coming from some mysterious spot, and it was a long while before pedestrians learned that Dreamland was the source of the melodious strains.

A. F. Mayer, now manager of the Central Film Service Company, of Louisville, also was an important adjunct of Dreamland. He was doorkeeper and "spieler," and the oldest inhabitants say that Mr. Mayer was some spieler. His penetrating voice could be heard for blocks, and only a deaf and dumb man could have been unaware of the attractions offered by Dreamland and made known through the medium of the enthusiastic spieler.

As now, Saturday and Sunday were always big days in the amusement field, and Dreamland therefore offered hardly as much to the public for its dime. A split-reel was provided on those days, while at night the performance was cut even shorter, a half-reel being cut out. Thus the shows were short indeed on Saturday night, but the amusement offered was so novel that no complaints were ever heard on that score. Residents of Louisville paid their dimes enthusiastically and came back for more as soon as the films were changed, which, by the way, was not too often.

The music provided by Dreamland consisted of strains from one piano. However, an illustrated song singer also helped out and this feature was one which did much toward popularizing the theater. Shop-girls were especially fond of the illustrated songs and would patronize the house liberally during the noon hour.

Complaints from church folk were singularly few when Dreamland first began to captivate the Louisville public. Preachers and others who had heard tales of the programs offered by Mr. Simon and his associates regarded the entire affair as merely a fad, which would die out in a short time. Therefore, Dreamland was not considered worth serious attention by the opponents of photoplaydom, and the house continued its triumphant career without interruption. Not until other houses sprang up and the industry really began to take on impressive proportions did the opposition rise against it.



Dreamland Theater.

William Barron, the veteran operator, had his troubles when Dreamland was the lone animated picture house in the Kentucky metropolis. He and a mechanic were kept busy repairing the machines, which were of the old one-pin variety. Lack of parts was a serious drawback, but despite that severe handicap, Mr. Barron did great work and few were the performances that were omitted or interrupted by delays in the operating booth. Mr. Barron is now considered one of the topnotchers of the Louisville field.

Even judged from present-day standard, Dreamland was a really remarkable house. It compares favorably with many theaters now operating in country towns. Electricity was used plentifully, a big electric globe in the center of the lobby and numerous small ones fringing the front, providing plenty of light. A half-dozen electric lights on the interior also provided illumination for patrons. The interior of Dreamland, though hardly as ornate or handsome as theaters of the present day, was nevertheless clean.

Dreamland ran steadily for about a year and a half. At the end of that time, it was decided to open other houses more pretentious and even nearer to the heart of the business district. In those eighteen months wonderful changes had taken place in the moving picture field. Theaters were springing up in all parts of the country. Film manufacturing companies were being organized, and, in short, the moving picture industry was beginning to take on a new aspect. Louisville men were wide awake to the possibilities of the business, and with the closing of Dreamland, there opened in rapid succession the Columbia, Princess, The Avenue, for the summer only, Casino, Orpheum, Hoppkins, and a chain of others.

The new houses embraced all of the latest improvements. Even Dreamland had not stood still. The phonograph had been replaced by an electric piano in the lobby, and the negro who had provided the music was given a job mopping up. Better machines had come into the market, and Mr. Barron was having an easier time. However, Mr. Mayer was one individual who was forced to work even harder than before. With fresh competition arising daily, his vocal organs were given little or no rest, and the present exchange-man was then in the midst of one of his busiest periods.

Little old Dreamland doesn't look very well when compared with big 1,500-seat moving picture theaters now standing in Louisville. The fact that it was the leader of the field, however, lends enchantment to its rather dingy exterior and moving picture exhibitors have been known to stare long and intently at its reproduction. Dreamland, perhaps given that name because of the probability that it would last no longer than a trip to the land of dreams, was the pioneer which blazed the trail for other moving picture exhibitors, and because of the thoroughness with which it did its work, it has a warm spot in the hearts of Louisville animated picture men.

ORPHEUM THEATER, LOUISVILLE, KY.

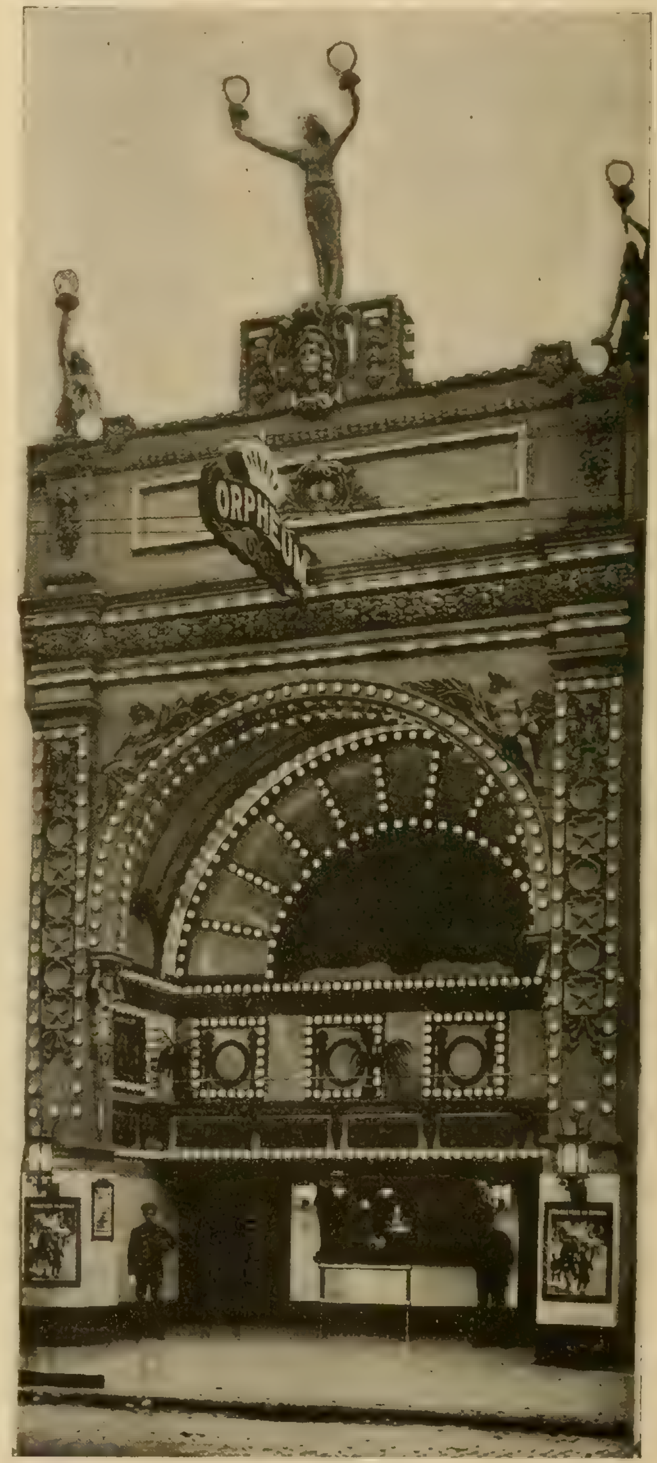
One of the most popular moving picture houses in Louisville, Ky., and one which is bringing in a steady flow of prosperity for its owners, is the Orpheum, located on Jefferson street, near Fourth. The Orpheum is operated by the Princess Amusement Company, which also conducts several other motion picture theaters. While Irvin Simon, president of the Princess, is justly proud of all the theaters operated by his corporation, he is especially proud of the Orpheum. When plans for the handsome Jefferson-street theater were being drawn up, Mr. Simon gave the benefit of his experience and wisdom, the result being the Orpheum and its consequent popularity.

The Orpheum has a seating capacity of 500, and the interior of the house compares favorably with any in the Gateway city, as far as comfort and sanitation are concerned. Where the Orpheum excels, however, is in exterior appearance. Realizing that the crowds will follow the bright lights, Mr. Simon and his associates have outdone themselves in this particular, and the Orpheum is one of the bright spots of Louisville. No less than 1,200 powerful Tungsten lights illuminate the lobby and exterior of the theater.

The Orpheum cost $22,000 when originally constructed, but this sum has been augmented by improvements installed from time to time. However, despite the big expenditure, the theater has maintained its reputation as one of the best dividend payers of the Princess Amusement Company. Combined with the handsome appearance of the theater is high-class service, the two forming an attraction which has coaxed the public into the house regularly. The Orpheum shows three reels of film daily, each performance lasting about an hour. About a dozen shows are given daily, the performances beginning at 10 o'clock in the morning and running steadily until 10.30 p. m. All pictures are first-run, and this feature has of course been somewhat responsible for the success of the Jefferson street theater, patrons being assured that they will witness nothing which they have seen elsewhere.

The Orpheum insures comfort to its clientele through a modern steam heating system which distributes plenty of warmth through the building during the winter months. A ventilating apparatus installed at a cost of $1,200 changes the air every four minutes, and renders the atmosphere of the theater fresh and sanitary in that respect. The house is 30 feet wide. The floor is cement, the same material being used in the operating room, which is twelve feet square, being practically fireproof. The stage of the theater is 16½ by 13½, and should the company desire, vaudeville might be used without changes of any kind in the stage. However, moving pictures only have gained such a hold on the public that a change of this kind is quite improbable.



Orpheum Theater.

Standard machines are used by the Orpheum. The distance from the operating booth to the stage is 95 feet, no trouble having been encountered in securing clear, steady pictures, though the distance is a bit longer than the average.

Stucco work is a feature of the Orpheum's lobby. This material has been used liberally on the inside, combined with terra cotta, conveying a luxurious effect which has done much toward making the house popular. About twelve persons are employed at the Orpheum, including two cashiers, three operators, a barker, ticket-taker, manager and musician. Only one musician is now used, the Orpheum, like many other Louisville houses, using an automatic piano for providing its patrons with suitable musical accompaniment to the films.

Representing art, poetry and music, three handsome statues ornament the top of the theater, each bearing one or more electric globes. The three statues have attracted much attention. and have done their share toward individualizing the theater. Like other features of the structure, the idea of bringing the allegorical figures into play was that of President Irvin Simon, of the Princess Amusement Company. Judge W. Allen Kinney, secretary-treasurer of the corporation, also assisted in designing the Orpheum,

PALM GARDEN THEATER, PITTSBURGH, PA.

The Palm Garden Theater, 1729 Carson Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., a cut of which is published herewith, was purchased by W. H. Ketcham on the 15th of April, 1912. Mr. Ketcham has made a number of improvements since he bought the house, and is well satisfied with the receipts his books are showing from the exhibition of moving pictures. This is the only moving picture house in the city of Pittsburg bearing the name of Palm Garden. It has a seating capacity of 300, two Edison machines are used in the projection room and the musical accompaniment emanates from two pianos, one electric, and from an orchestra with drums every Wednesday. The place is well ventilated, and it is well provided with exits.

PARK THEATER REOPENS.

The Park Theater of Moundsville, W. Va., which had been closed for several days to undergo extensive improvements, reopened recently, under the management of Mr. Sybert, formrly of Marietta, Ohio. Mr. Sybert has had considerable experience in the picture exhibition business and promises his patrons a good program at all times.

The Alhambra Theatrical Company will shortly begin the erection of a moving picture theater in Ogden, Utah.

FROM NEWSBOY TO OWNER OF PICTURE HOUSE.

Abe Potiker, aged nineteen, was brought to America from Kassia, Austria Hungary, his native land, four years ago by Mrs. Fannie Nebel, his aunt, on account of the poverty of his parents. When he arrived in New York he started to make a living by selling newspapers, and gradually worked his way to Cleveland where he opened a newspaper stand. Luck was with the young man and soon he had between 4000 and 5000 regular customers, which brought him a net profit of $25.00 to $30.00 a week. When he had saved up $700 dollars he went back to his native land and brought the rest of the family over to America.

The Wade Park Theater: The First Picture House Which Mr. Potiker Bought.

Back in America he again established a newsdealer's business making a good profit. Inside of two years he had saved up $2,000. With $300 of this sum he bought the Wade Park theater at 8008 Wade Park Avenue, Cleveland. Out of this moving picture house, a cut of which is herewith published, he made over a thousand dollars clear profit in less than a year. He sold the place to purchase the Comet theater, a moving picture house, situated at 113th and Superior streets, Cleveland, an engraving of which is also printed herewith. This house has a seating capacity of 500. Its appointments are all that patrons could expect; its operating room is fitted with two Power's No. 6 machines and it has a big stage. The young manager-owner says that he is making a clear profit of $50 to $75 a week. A. Potiker is also a member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Cleveland, Local No. 1.

The Comet Theater: The House Which Mr. Potiker Now Owns and Manages.

E. J. Brunlett and E. M. Moyle of Scranton are remodeling the old Cox restaurant building of Gowrie, Pa., into a moving picture theater. The house will be known as the "Star."

"ALKALI IKE IN JAYVILLE" (Essanay).

For an excruciatingly funny story portrayed in an exceptionally clever and up-to-date manner, "Alkali Ike in Jayville" is indeed a feature.

Mr. Dicks, a prominent widower of Jayville, is in love with the widow Towle. Mr. Dicks' son, Rube, is in love with the widow's daughter, Phoebe. Alkali Ike, a brother of Mr. Dicks, is smitten with the widow. Under pretext of being sick, Alkali sends his brother to the village for the doctor. In the meantime Alkali's love for the widow ripens and he tells her. She, a fickle member of the feminine sex, accepts him. The doctor arrives with Mr. Dicks. They find the widow fanning Alkali, who, when hearing them approach, throws himself on the couch and pretends to be suffering from a severe attack of indigestion. Mr. Dicks realizes that Alkali loves the widow. The doctor suggests that the two brothers play checkers for the hand of the widow. While they are thus engaged the doctor makes rapid progress for the hand of the widow herself. She accepts him. In the meantime the widow's daughter falls in love with Rube Dicks and marries him. The doctor then marries the widow. The two newly married couples return to the house, where the two men are engaged in playing checkers for the hand of the widow. The doctor announces the marriage. Alkali Ike and his brother are overwhelmed and, being expert checker players, decide it is their cue to "move."

Scene from "Alkali Ike in Jayville" (Essanay).

Alkali Ike, the gibraltar of fun, is extremely funny in this one. This is a meritorious feature. This picture is booked for release January 9th.

"MIXED COLORS" (Pathe).

"One touch of color makes the whole world laugh," might have been said, for it certainly is true. There have been more jokes perpetrated on the colored race than on any other. Yet our darker brethren never complain, and, indeed, they have no reason to be offended by this film, for the fact that their coloring is darker is the only feature of which use is made. "Mixed Colors," a product of Pathe, which will be released on January 16th, is that peculiar combination of circumstances that might happen to anyone, and while it would be a serious affair for them until the mixture had been dissolved, to recall the predicament would be to enjoy it. And so, watching the performance on the screen, one appreciates the situations as exceedingly humorous.

Mrs. White, who is white, sends Betty, the nursegirl, out to give the baby an airing. Mrs. Black, who is black, and who cannot afford the luxury of a maid, takes her infant out for an airing, and at the same time she takes Jasper, her pet fox terrier, with her. Mrs. Black sits down to rest in the park on a bench adjoining Betty and her charge. Clarence, the cop, on his rounds, sees Betty. They have met before and he suggests a walk. The perambulator and its occupants are a stumbling block, but Clarence persuades Mrs. Black to mind the white child in payment for his services in chasing a crowd of boys that has been abusing Jasper, the dog. Accordingly the White carriage is placed beside the Black carriage. After Clarence and his lady fair have departed arm in arm, the boys return and lure Jasper away. Mrs. Black leaves her post to pursue the dog and the boys. The boys outwit her and return to the carriages while she is still away. The two infants of different color attract their attention. One of them secures two pots of paint. They paint the black baby white and the white baby black, finishing just as Mrs. Black returns. They leave the dog behind in their hurry, which leaves Mrs. Black happy. Betty returns on Clarence's arm, takes the White carriage and hurries home. Grandfather has called at the White home, but none of the family expected he would take from the carriage a black baby. Betty, in some haste, gets back to the park, where she meets Mrs. Black hurrying back with the white baby. The children are exchanged, and taken home to the anxious Black and White families. Mrs. Black gets a black baby back, but when she kisses it it turns white, while Mrs. White's kisses turn the white baby black. Another hurried exchange is made, with the assistance of the police, and finally the Black and White families superintend the washing away of the black and white paints.

Scene from "Mixed Colors" (Pathe).

"It's the cutest little thing," and will be released on January 16th.

"FIFTY MILES FROM TOMBSTONE" (Kinemacolor).

This story is a combination of comedy and pathos, filled with gripping scenes and strong suspense. The man of the East leaves wife and baby for the gold fields. Later he strikes gold, writes for wife and baby, the mail bag falls off the stage coach, floats down and catches on the rocks, while the husband and wife wait for news of each other. Here occurs moments of intense suspense as we flash from the waiting husband and wife, back and forward to the lost mail bag.

The wife starts to find her husband, but arrives too late for the weekly stage to the camp. A boy takes her in a wagon across the desert. At a "water hole" the woman alights to fill the canteen. Some drunken Indians frighten the boy, who drives off. The mother wanders till her strength gives out, leaving the baby under some bushes. She climbs a nearby hill, hoping to see some signs of life. She falls exhausted and is found by some Indians, taken to their camp and nursed back to life. The baby is discovered by some cowboys, taken to camp, and Jim, being the only man who knows about babies, adopts it. Here occurs a great comedy scene. The baby must be fed; there is no milk, but the Chinaman solves the difficulty by buying up the "only female in camp"—a goat.

Scene from "Fifty Miles from Tombstone" (Kinemacolor)

An itinerant priest visits Jim's shack and sees the baby. He next visits the camp of the Indians, hears the white woman's story, and by his efforts the little family is united. Even the goat gets the priest's blessing. In this film there are pathos and comedy, a beautiful story, strong suspense and the wonderful coloring of Kinemacolor.

UNIVERSAL OPENS A NEW EXCHANGE.

NO TWO-REEL RELIANCE RELEASE ON JAN. 15.

The next two-reel Reliance release will appear on January 22nd, when a pretentious production of "The Bells" will be released. On January 15th, will be presented a special single reel subject with a double name "The Wheel of Fate" or "Trapped by Science."

The Russian manufacturers of films have combined in an organization with headquarters in St. Petersburg. It is claimed that the French and American manufacturers monopolize the Russian market and the organization of native producers is intended to check a further spread of the alleged monopoly.

Mr. E. H. Calvert, leading man of Essanay's Eastern stock company, appeared in a special pantomime sketch, written especially for an entertainment held Tuesday afternoon, December 31st, in the Fine Arts Building, Chicago. The entertainment was given by the Daughters of the American Revolution. Mr. Calvert played the lead.

"A TIMELY RESCUE" (Lubin).

This is one of the intense stories so much favored by Arthur Johnson and his clever little leading lady, Lottie Briscoe. The atmosphere of the big scenes is very realistic as is notable in all of Mr. Johnson's pictures. The story is at once pathetic and true to life, and the moral shows the power of lovely womanhood to bring out the better nature of a reckless man.

John Bronson, Mr. Daly's farmhand, desiring advancement, goes to the city much against the wishes of Lottie Daly, who loves him. John soon gets a position in a department store and is well liked. Lottie's father dies, leaving nothing but a mortgage on the little home and eventually the mother and girl are dispossessed. They go to the city and Lottie seeks work, but her inexperience prevents her from getting employment. One night heart broken and hungry she falls fainting against the door of a dance hall. A girl accosts her and giving her some food induces her to enter the hall. Lottie is frightened, but mixing with the crowd a man puts his arm around her waist. She struggles to get away, but the man holds her firmly and is about to wheel her into the dance when they recognize each other. The man is John Bronson. The owner of the hall endeavors to make Lottie dance, but John knocks him down and carries Lottie from the place. Bronson takes her home, relieves her needs and makes the home happy by marrying his faithful little sweetheart.

Scene from "A Timely Rescue" (Lubin).

GAUMONT WEEKLY No. 43.

The world-wide activities of the Gaumont Weekly forces are clearly indicated in its issue of January 1st—No. 43. Subjects covered include the Philippine typhoon of recent date; a religious ceremony in Lima, Peru; a railroad journey through Cuba; the launching of a German vessel, and a party of American tourists with a Gaumont Weekly camera operator at the Pyramids in Egypt. There are also subjects covering events in California, Washington, Illinois and New York. To gather material for this issue of the Gaumont Weekly, ten cameramen were employed. The combined distance necessary to travel from New York City to the places filmed total 28,000 miles. The pictures of the Philippine typhoon were the only ones taken of that disaster, which cost millions of dollars in damage and many lives. The weeklies produced by film manufacturers having international connections thus occasionally show their wider scope. The Gaumont Company has branch offices and camera operators in almost every large city in the world. Consequently producing a weekly as comprehensive as No. 43 is a simple matter.

THE OLD AND NEW.

McIntyre & Richter of New York have the unique distinction of inventing a long looked for idea in the film renting and selling business, which is proving very successful. Exhibitors everywhere are taking advantage of the special service, which they run in connection with their regular service. McIntyre & Richter serve a special club service, and also have the exclusive rights in New York and New Jersey on all the Ambrosio Gold Series classics, such as "Siegfried," and "Parsifal." They have issued a handsome catalogue, which fully explains their entire system of film renting.

"JAMES, THE HUNGRY ONE" (Great Northern).

James is a private soldier who falls into disgrace through a combination of hunger and appetite. The army rations are liberal enough, but they are not sufficient to appease the appetite of James. He has been appointed to duty at the home of Colonel Kraft, and loses no time in finding his way into the family kitchen. Here he plays havoc with a special luncheon which is being prepared for the Colonel, and, to make matters worse, proceeds to make love to the buxom cook. He is interrupted by the arrival of the butcher, who has a soft spot in his heart for the young woman. He promptly throws James through a window and cuts off one of the tails of his military jacket in order to make his revenge complete. James runs a considerable distance and, being again overtaken by hunger, pauses in front of a country home. Peering through the window, he sees a table spread with good things, and climbs in without an invitation. He is mistaken for a burglar while seated at the table partaking of the food prepared for supper, and escapes only after he has been shot at repeatedly by the angry householder. His hasty flight brings him to a steep hill, and he loses his footing and rolls to the bottom. Here the Colonel and his guests are enjoying an outing, and James promptly tumbles into the midst of the party gathered about the luncheon cloth. He begins to eat, but is placed under arrest and sentenced to pass his time at the barracks doing gymnastic physical culture exercises.

Scene from "James, the Hungry One" (Great Northern).

"The New Boot Cleaner" is another spirited comedy appearing on this reel. Fritz obtains a job as boot cleaner in a fashionable hotel, but through inexperience he mixes the boots and shoes that he has collected during the night, and when morning arrives there are many complications on the upper floors. Guided by their own shoes, guests find themselves in the apartments of others, and a riot is narrowly averted until the truth is learned. Fritz is found at work in the basement and only saves himself from physical violence by administering a dab of blacking on the face of each angry guest who appears at the small window. Finally he is surrounded and ejected from the hotel.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE OUTLAW'S MOTHER" (Essanay).

Mr. G. M. Anderson, in his impressive and world-wide popular character creation of "Broncho Billy," in "Broncho Billy and the Outlaw's Mother" plays the part of a Western sheriff in an exceptional manner.

Jim Dawson, a desperate Western outlaw, is seen sleeping by the roadside. His horse is startled by the approach of a stage coach, which awakens him. Mounting, he waits in ambush and holds up the driver and occupants. In the meantime his mother is seen leaving her home to visit her son in the far West. The sheriff, having been informed of the hold-up, makes a record-breaking ride to the scene of the robbery and traces the bandit to the woods. A revolver battle takes place and the sheriff is killed. Placing the body on his horse, Dawson takes him to the road. Writing a note which reads, "Send his deputy, Broncho Billy, after me; that's the man I want," and, pinning it to the saddle, he gives the horse a slash with the whip and starts him on a gallop to the town. Broncho Billy finds the horse, with the note attached. With a reward notice in his pocket offering $5,000 for the capture of the outlaw, dead or alive, Broncho takes up the hunt. Seeing Broncho entering the woods, Dawson fires at him and misses. Broncho, having a better eye, hits his mark. The outlaw, wounded, finally reaches the road, where, with much difficulty, he mounts his horse and gallops to his home. Entering the house, he falls on the bed. Dawson's mother arrives and, finding her son in a most serious condition, prepares to nurse him back to health. During her absence from the room Broncho Billy enters and covers the outlaw with a revolver. Seeing his condition, he puts up his gun and speaks to Dawson. The outlaw tells him that his mother is there, that she does not know the kind of a life he has been leading, and that it will please him if she is not informed. A moment later Jim Dawson dies in his mother's arms. Broncho takes some gold from a bag in his pocket and, placing it on the table in Dawson's room, unobserved, quietly leaves the house.

Scene from "Broncho Billy and the Outlaw's Mother" (Essanay).

KINEMACOLOR AT LOS ANGELES.

The Kinemacolor company also has added a new director, Charles Fleming, who has been chief assistant to David Miles, the producing director. The other two directors are Frank E. Woods and Jack LeSaint. The principal reason for the new move is that Mr. Miles will devote his entire time to directing the special pictures in which Lillian Russell is to appear, and will have to give up most of his routine work. It is understood, however, that Fleming is to continue after the Russell pictures are finished, and that the output of the Kinemacolor company will be correspondingly increased. Miss Russell made her first appearance before a motion picture camera December 23d. Extraordinary preparations were made for her comfort at the studio preceding her arrival. A special dressing room was built and luxuriously furnished for her, and a retinue of servants employed. All of which was appropriate, considering that Miss Russell is one of the most famous personages in the theatrical world, and that, in addition, her husband, Alexander Moore, owner and editor of the Pittsburg Leader, is reported to own $75,000 worth of stock in the Kinemacolor company.

Eustace Hale Ball, of the "Majestic," has just presented the literary world with a new book of modern satires and epigrams, called "Bubbles." Mr. Ball is a firm believer in the artistic and financial possibilities of photoplay writing, selling at least two successful scenarios every week, in addition to his other literary labors.

Charles Weston, director of the Punch comedies, has not forgotten how to skate. It has been several years since Charlie toured the world as a "Wizard On Roller Skates," but he appeared in one of his own pictures recently, and some novel comedy was the result.

CORRESPONDENCE

LOUISVILLE.

THE past week, as a matter of course, has been one of the most prosperous of the entire year with the moving picture exhibitors of Louisville and Kentucky. Christmas time invariably develops business to the fullest possible extent for all shows. All conditions affecting the development of patronage have been very favorable, and while the capability of the houses to handle any audiences coming to them was threatened for a time by the impending strike, this labor difficulty has been met without the least serious embarrassment. Local theater owners and managers are delighted that the insurgency of their operators, coming at the most inopportune moment as it did, was met in so capable a manner and proved to be of a comparatively trivial nature. The difficulty in which the trade hereabouts has become involved may be termed trivial because the most vital matter at which it was directed—the operation or suspension of local houses—has not been affected. As was anticipated, twenty-three operators employed by members of the Louisville Photoplay Association and belonging to the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, Local No. 168, were dismissed last Saturday night and non-union men were put into their places. The trouble began some time ago, when the exhibitors and their musicians could not agree as to a new form of contract which was proposed for 1912-13 by the Musicians' Mutual Protective Association, Local No. 11, specifying that the orchestra members in local picture shows shall be given at least three months' notice by their employers before termination of the contract. The new form provides that an incompetent man, or one who does not meet the requirements of his employer by reason of a personal failing, may be dismissed in short and accustomed order.

The exhibitors have felt that they cannot meet the demand of the musicians in this connection, and the rupture between the employing trade and the unionized branches has resulted. When a few union men walked out in sympathy with the musicians a short time ago, notice was served that the remaining unionists would be dismissed immediately and this has been done.

Since the strike has actually been broken, and non-union operators have been taken on by the house owners and managers, the situation is strained but easier. One or two attempts of discharged employees to remove fuses and otherwise incapacitate picture machines have been reported, but the exhibitors are on guard, employing experts from other cities to take charge of their operating-rooms, and the general attitude of the two parties is one of friendship. Harry Hughes, business agent of the local operators' organization, and Oscar Shreck, of Cleveland, O., third vice-president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, have charge of the situation from the operators' end, and declare that a firm stand will be maintained, while the members of the Louisville Photoplay Association are equally confident of being able to hold their own. The present chance of a compromise or of one side or the other winning is very vague, inasmuch as the business of not a single house has been interrupted, and the exhibitors declare that they are doing admirably with men from other cities at their machines.

Shortly after the first of the year definite steps will be taken toward the establishment of the new National Theater on the southwest corner of Fifth avenue and Walnut street in this city. The National will be a combined vaudeville and moving picture house, giving several shows daily and featuring a very complete popular-priced programme. It is expected that either a straight ten-cent or a ten-twenty-and-thirty admission scale will be adopted. The National is to cost upwards of $250.000 and will seat 3,000 people, figuring as one of the biggest play houses south of the Ohio river. In addition to the auditorium proper, the building will contain seventeen stores and a number of offices and is to be one of the handsomest and most modern in Louisville. Plans for the house have been completed by Joseph & Joseph, well-known architects in the Commercial building, and contracts for its erection are to be awarded early in the new year. The National theater will be owned by the National Theater Company, a big corporation which has been organized. David King, the owner of the National theater in Detroit, Mich., is one of the majority stockholders in the enterprise, along with George J. Eppstein, of Detroit, a real estate man, while extensive local interests are involved.

The Consolidated Theaters Company, of Louisville, recently tendered to the State Railroad Commission, of Frankfort, Ky., the use of the Empress, its handsome moving picture theater in Central City, Ky., for hearings by the Commission during the meeting of that body in southwestern Kentucky. The Commission met in Central City to hear the discussion which has arisen between the coal miners and operators of that district and the Illinois Central Railroad Company. The Empress met the needs of the occasion admirably.

A motor generator set of 15 kilowatts capacity has been installed in the Royal theater at Eighteenth street and Broadway in this city, purchased by the Royal Theater Company from Childers & Waters, well-known local electrical contractors. The new equipment will provide an amperage of more than 80 units for the new Kinemacolor pictures which are being featured at the Royal. The original electrical equipment of the house did not possess sufficient strength for the new type of colored-to-life films and in giving his patrons the best service available, President Louis J. Dittmar decided that better light for the Royal machines was essential.

The opening of Hopkins' theater for excellent moving picture business has been signalized by exceptionally fine trade and the owners of the well-known Market street house have decided to play up special reels more prominently than has ever been done heretofore by the management. "The Speckled Band", telling one of the famous Sherlock Holmes stories pictorially, was one of the first features at Hopkins', immediately followed by "Death & Resurrection." In showing the latter feature reels, the theater employed Edward W. Dustin, who recently visited the Vatican at Rome and who is thoroughly acquainted with the foreign topics of which the film treats, to lecture at each show. Both offers were warmly received by audiences of the house.

A fight has begun in Indiana, and is now centering about the cities of New Albany and Jeffersonville, directly across the Ohio river from Louisville, to secure favorable legislation in the matter of Sunday opening for the photoplay interests of the Hoosier state. It is proposed to secure the enactment of a law at the coming session of the Indiana legislature in Indianapolis which will legalize the opening of moving picture theaters on the Sabbath, an amusement which has hitherto been under the ban. is that petitions have been circulated in many Hoosier cities and are gaining many signatures. At the same time considerable opposition is developing among the church and settlement workers and it appears that the patrons of the exhibitors will have to work hard to win the statute which will give them harmless, honest pleasure on the seventh day of the week.

The Orpheum is the newest moving picture theater, recently dedicated with appropriate formality, in Carlisle, Ky. The house is one of the prettiest and best equipped in that section of the state, seating approximately 400 persons. A three-reel show with musical accompaniment by the Carlisle orchestra of eight pieces constitutes the program of the new theater.

John White, the proprietor of the Crystal, one of the best known moving picture theaters in Madison, Ind., recently co-operated with the pupils of the Eggleston school in that city in a novel manner, calculated to develop endless good will in Madison for the Crystal. The juveniles of the school announced their intention of securing funds with which to purchase an Edison Kinetescope for educational purposes, and Mr. White offered liberal cash bonuses to the children for the sale of Crystal theater tickets. The pastboards were sold at a rate which brought the school $50 in less time than it takes to talk about it.

Christmas week at the Lyric theater in Huntington, Ky., was signalized by the donation of an entire day's receipts to the Huntington branch of the Salvation Army. "The Passion Play" was the film offering at the Lyric during the day when the Salvation Army gained by the shows.

The Plaza Realty Company, of Charleston, W. Va., was recently incorporated in that city to develop moving picture theater and real estate. The company is capitalized at $100,000 and its incorporators are as follows: J. B. Crowley, P. J. Crowley, J. B. Prairie, F. C. Major and T. W. Legg.

A handsome moving picture theater seating more than 600 persons is to be erected on the northwest corner of Fifth and John streets in Cincinnati, O., by the Lincoln Amusement Company. Plans for a thoroughly up-to-date house were recently completed by Stewart & Stewart, well-known Cincinnati architects and the general contract for the building has been awarded to Bruce Brothers, to be rushed to completion.

INDIANAPOLIS.

THOMAS A. Winterrowd, city building inspector, has submitted an ordinance to the city council incorporating a new building code, in which is incorporated drastic provisions regarding the construction and operation of motion picture theaters. The ordinance also increases the annual license fee from $25 to $100. All walls and floors must be fireproof or if joist construction is used, the space between the joists must be filled to a depth of at least four inches with fireproof material. Seats must be spaced thirty-one inches from back to back, must be eighteen inches wide and not more than six seats between aisles. All vaudeville or other theatrical attractions are prohibited, but an orchestra of four pieces and a piano or organ is permitted.

Petitions are being circulated throughout the state, asking that the state legislature, which convenes in bi-ennial session during January, pass an act permitting Sunday performances by motion picture houses. At the present time Sunday performances are permitted through suffrance of some places while in other localities the law forbidding one to follow his usual vocation on Sunday, except in case of charity or necessity, is enforced to the letter.

D. P. Roberts, who has been interested in motion picture theaters in this city for several years, has disposed of his interests to E. M. Rife and will devote his attention to another line of work. About thirty of his former employes gave a farewell dinner to Mr. Roberts at the English Hotel.

With an authorized capitalization of $10,000 the Peoples Circuit Company has been organized and incorporated here to operate a circuit of motion picture theaters. Those interested in the company are George W. Ray, C. W. Horn, Edward Schuenemann, J. C. Hall and A. L. Blunt.

The superintendent of the Indiana State Reformatory at Jeffersonville has introduced motion picture entertainments in the prison for the inmates. An entertainment is given each week, the program including largely films of comic, historical and scientific subjects. All films portraying criminal acts are forbidden.

Morris I Wolf, Louis Friedman and Isidor J. Siegfried have organized the Cosmopolitan Amusement Company at Gary to conduct a motion picture theater. The company has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $10,000.

The board of school commissioners at Crawfordsville has bought a motion picture machine for use in the schools of the city. This is one of the first cities in the state to introduce motion pictures as a means of teaching history and other subjects.

J. Earle Cunningham lectured at the Iris motion picture theater in this city recently. Cunningham is making a trip from New York to San Francisco in a japanese jinrikisha on a $10,000 wager. He is to earn his way by lecturing on his trip in motion picture theaters.

NEW ENGLAND.

A MOST severe epidemic of scarlet fever is raging at Lowell, Mass., and it is believed that all schools, theaters and other places of public amusement will be closed, unless there are immediate signs of abatement. Nearly 300 cases have been reported thus far.

Gordon's theater, Chelsea, Mass., is slated to play moving pictures and vaudeville during 1913.

On Monday, December 23d, Poli's new theater opened at Bridgeport, Conn. The house, which seats 3000, was taxed to its capacity and good business is expected as a general thing. The new theater is a model in every way; fireproof and up-to-the-minute in construction. Vaudeville and pictures form the program. Mr. Poli now has two theaters in the city of Bridgeport, but the old house is playing stock company shows, in order that the new house may not have this competition to overcome.

When B. F. Keith decided to switch his Portland, Me., theater to vaudeville and picture programs, instead of continuing with stock company attractions, he started things! It seems that Julius Cahn immediately hired the entire stock company for his Jefferson theater of Portland, which had been playing road attractions. However, it is understood that Keith's will adhere to the vaudeville and picture policy.

In Burlington, Vt., there is considerable discussion going on regarding the possible re-opening of the Lumiere North American Company's plant at Lakeside, just outside the city, for the manufacture of moving pictures.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union, Boston Local, is having a most spirited argument with Mrs. Alice S. Wells of Los Angeles, Cal. Mrs. Wells, who claimed bat she had made a careful, impartial investigation of Boston photoplay houses, stated that some of Boston's moving picture houses were "positively degrading," going on to remark that the inspection of the shows is inadequate and that the theaters are principally attended by boys and girls. Such an obviously untrue and misleading tirade might well have been ignored, but it was promptly answered by William C. Franke, business agent of the local. Mr. Franke stated that in justice to the industry, Mrs. Wells should be answered, and simply explained that the theaters were operated under the direct supervision of the Mayor's office, and inspected by the state police. Mr. Franke truthfully stated that the Boston theaters were owned by conservative business men who, having invested large amounts of money, would not jeopardize their business for the sake of showing degrading pictures. Mrs. Wells's attack is of a kind that was formerly quite frequent, but which now appears but seldom.

After the opening performance of the new Poli theater at Bridgeport, Conn., Sylvester S. Poli was tendered a dinner at the Hotel Stratford. Stephen J. Breen is resident manager of the new theater.

Geoffery L. Whalen, New England's premier dramatic lecturer on the films, is now happy in the possession of a bouncing son.' Mr. Whalen is just now startling the natives of Lynn, Mass., where he is lecturing at Gordon's Olympia. Mr. Whalen is a remarkably fluent talker, and highly educated.

W. C. Franke, business agent of the Boston Local of the Operators' Union, was presented with a handsome gold watch charm, with the emblem of the order, by his organization.

M. H. Gulesian reports that his new St. James theater is more than pleased with the films secured from the Boston Offices of the Mutual Film Corporation. The St. James is a stock company theater, but plays to pictures on Sundays, at 15, 25 and 35 cents admission.

J. W. Hawes reports excellent business at his Puritan theater, Washington street, Boston. This house seats about 800, and delivers the goods in the shape of first quality Mutual service.

Miss L. M. Pierre is accounted one of the cleverest of New England exhibitors, even if she is a member of the fair sex, and her Lyric theater, Manchester, N. H., is proving that fact by being full regularly.

"Buffalo" Jones, the former game warden of Yellowstone Park, and a renowned hunter and lecturer on films played his annual Boston engagement at Tremont Temple, for a week, beginning December 30. Mr. Jones had some unusually instructive and pleasing reels and gave an account of his experiences in Africa and among the Rocky Mountains.

Loew's South End theater, Boston, strongly advertised and featured "Dr. Gar El Hama," the great detective story. This house is now charging up to fifteen cents for admission.

The New Hampshire State Hospital has installed a Power's Cameragraph, No. 6-A., and expects to give regular photoplay programs to the inmates.

Burton Holmes, the well known globe-trotter and lecturer, plays his regular Boston engagement at Tremont Temple, beginning with Friday evening, January 10th, and extending until March 1st. Mr. Holmes is a big favorite in Boston, and has no difficulty in drawing full houses to see his motion pictures, and to hear him lecture and explain them.

The Mutual Film Corporation announces that it has opened a branch office at Bridgeport, Conn., in order that prompter and more efficient service may be given to exhibitors in that section. Manager M. Leighton is installed at 15 Fairfield avenue, where he is ready to "deliver the goods."

Messrs Rush Brothers have opened their new theater at Millinocket, Me., and are more than pleased with the outlook. The house is reported to be one of the nicest in the state and should find it easy to fill the auditorium.

John Griffin has been engaged to fight the absurd five minute law in Massachusetts by the Massachusetts section of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, when legislature convenes again. This law has been a sore spot to exhibitors for several years, and is popularly supposed to have been a piece of graft legislation. The results following the passage of the law have been most pernicious—for the presence of vaudeville in the Massachusetts picture houses can be traced to the five minute bill. No theater can show a moving picture for longer than 20 minutes, without interspersing five minutes of something else; either slides, or vaudeville. In order to urge the passage of this bill many gave testimony going to show that motion pictures were injurious to the eyes. Many operators swore that the pictures had not harmed their eyes, but this availed but little. Under this law, Massachusetts houses can't run multiple reel features without these absurd five minute haltings, which spoil the effect of the two and three reel pictures.

Mr. George Therrin announces that he has secured a lease on the Central theater, Old Town, Me., and will take possession on February 13th., when Mr. McPhee steps out. This house has been a money maker, and plays to vaudeville and pictures.

The Theatrical Stage Employes' Union of Boston, has selected Edward J. Reynolds, John J. Barry, James H. Duffy, William Marr and Walter J. Goff, delegates to the meeting to be held at Worcester, Mass., next month to consider forming a New England District Council.

Manager C. B. Kelliher of the City theater, Waterville, Me., reports great business with a programme of vaudeville and pictures. Manager Kelliher is most popular with the trade.

Hartford, Conn., will soon have two new theaters built for moving pictures—the Princess and the Bijou. Both of these theaters are of the better sort and should do well.

Manager James H. Donovan of the Central Square theater, Lynn, Mass., reports that his business was excellent for holiday week. "Just added special features as a special inducement, and advertised the fact," said Manager Donovan.

Manager A. J. Burns reports that his Johnson Opera House, Gardinar, Me., is doing a mighty good business, with a steady policy of pictures and vaudeville.

Mr. Louis Mayer, Manager of the Colonial theater, Haverhill, Mass., gave a party to some of his friends last week, consisting of a theater party to hear Madame Tetrazzini sing. After the theater, a supper party was held.

A most popular Manager is Frank L. Collier of the Washington and Old South theaters, Boston, who was presented with a silver watch by William Zimmon, assistant manager of the Old South theater, in company with Fred Norris, assistant manager of the Washington.

It is persistently rumored that James W. Greeley, Manager Greeley's theater, Congress street, Portland, Me., is to build a second theater in that city.

Manager Rundel of the City Opera House, Biddeford, Me., is doing very nicely, and has demonstrated that even a small city will patronize a theater well, provided good shows are offered. Manager Rundel never hesitates to book two and three reel features, provided they are of standard quality. Next summer Mr. Rundel will have a theater at Old Orchard, Me., a famous summer resort.

A recent incorporation is the Maine Theater Company at Augusta, Me. This concern has a capital of $10,000, with these men of Augusta as the promoters: Ernest L. McLean, Joseph Williamson, V. B. Williamson and another.

John S. Whistler has leased the Unity Church property, Springfield, Mass., for a term of three years, and will change the place into a photoplay theater to seat about 750. The location is one of the best in Springfield and Mr. Whistler should make good in his new venture.

The Crown theater, Hartford, Conn., had a most satisfactory opening on Christmas Day. This theater is situated on Main street, and formerly was a garage. A seating capacity of well over 1,000, plus a mighty good location, should spell prosperity for the Crown, provided the bright grade of photoplay programs are offered.

John J. Sheehan is about ready to open his new photoplay house at Waterbury, Conn. The theater is being renovated from what was Schlitz Hall, and is well located on South Main street. Mr. Sheehan's intention is to operate the theater as a picture house.

Horace Blackwell, being mortally injured by lightning striking the tree beneath which he was standing, tells his adopted daughter, Dorothy, of her parentage, and how she, a tiny mite, was found on his doorstep. He gives her the locket found about her neck, containing the picture of a beautiful woman, and which he believes to be her mother. With Horace Blackwell's death, Dorothy is dispossessed of her home, and because of jealousy of her charm and beauty she is forced into the ranks of the unemployed. She, however, finds employment in a department store, but is accused of theft and brought before the proprietor, who questions her closely as to her history. Her story, together with the locket and picture, solves the mystery of her birth, and Dorothy finds a home with her father.

The Mexican Spy

LUBIN 2 Reels

Tom Loring, a handsome but dissipated youth, loves Mary Lee, daughter of the regiment's paymaster. In order to pay his gambling debts to the Mexican, Senor Rivera, supposedly rich but in reality a spy, Tom steals $5,000 from the paymaster's safe. The Mexican threatens exposure unless Tom secures the plans of certain forts in the Southwest, but Mary hears of the situation and pawns her jewels to replace the stolen money. Realizing the sorrow he has caused his father and sweetheart, Tom disappears, leaving a note that he will not return until he has redeemed himself. He enlists under an assumed name, and his regiment is ordered to the Mexican frontier. Mary becomes a Red Cross nurse and is also ordered to the Mexican border. Tom's bravery and strategy during a desperate encounter with the Mexicans under Rivera wins him promotion to Lieutenant, but he is seriously wounded, and Mary is greatly surprised to find among her patients, her lover. Her careful nursing restores him to health, and having redeemed his former misdeeds by his faithful and heroic service to his country, he claims Mary for his wife.

The Wives of Jamestown

Bryan O'Sullivan, an Irish lad of humble birth, rescues Lady Geraldine from drowning as her boat capsizes, thereby meriting her lasting gratitude. Forgetful of his station, Bryan falls madly in love with Lady Geraldine, who momentarily listens to his pleadings. Her acceptance of attentions from O'Rourke angers Bryan and he upbraids her for falseness. The nobleman draws his sword, but Bryan wrenches it from his hand and breaks it to pieces. Knowing that he cannot now remain, Bryan bids farewell to Lady Geraldine and sails for America. Bryan O'Sullivan, Irishman, becomes John Pierce, Colonist of Jamestown, Virginia. Years later Lady Geraldine suffers many vicissitudes; her castle is besieged by the Cromwellians and she with many others is sent to Jamestown to be sold to the colonists as wives. John Pierce is startled to see Lady Geraldine, but she fails to recognize him because of a heavy beard. Seeing that he is an honest man, she offers to become his wife. He takes her to his cottage and stepping into another room shaves off his beard, and begins to play the flute, which he so loved in days gone by. Lady Geraldine, who is about to end her life, hears the music and stepping to the door recognizes John Pierce, her husband, as Bryan O'Sullivan, her lover, and love claims its own.

The Fielding Brothers, farmers, are served with notice of foreclosure of mortgage on their farm. George, the elder brother, is engaged to Susan Morton, who is also beloved by John Meadows, the wealthiest man in town. Meadows realizes the futility of his efforts to win Susan by fair means, and plans George's undoing and his own aggrandizement. George goes to Australia to seek his fortune; and Meadows, sure of success, selects the house for his bride, and ousts the present tenant, Isaac Levy, thus gaining the enmity of the Old Jew. Levy has been protected from Meadows' cane by George Fielding, and he now determines to protect George from the plotters. He rents an office next to Meadows, and through a hole which he bores in the wall keeps informed of their plans. Meadows' schemes are frustrated, and George returns with six thousand pounds to clear the home and claim his bride.

ROMEO and JULIET Shakespeare

A wonderfully Colored Film of the Immortal Playwright's Great Romantic Play

January 3, 1913. Pathe. Two Reels.

Romeo, of the House of Capulets, and Juliet, of the House of Montagues, scorn the family feud of years, and love each other with all the fervor of Veronian youths. The ardent wooer sings his love beneath his lady's window while the stars wink their approval of the lovers' happiness. Juliet's father urges her marriage to Tybalt, a man of his choosing, but Romeo determines she shall not, so together they visit the venerable Friar Lawrence and are secretly united in marriage. Romeo is challenged by his rival, Tybalt, and in the encounter wounds his antagonist, for which he is exiled. Romeo's departure leaves Juliet open to the demands of her father, who insists upon her immediate marriage to Tybalt. In terror she flees to the old Friar, who gives her a powerful sleeping potion, and on the day she is to marry Tybalt, her friends are horrified to see her fall into a deathlike swoon. She is interred in the vault of her ancestors, and Romeo, hearing of her death, returns home, enters the vault and after gazing upon the face of his beloved plunges a dagger into his heart. Juliet awakens to see him expiring, and in her agony seizes the same dagger, inflicts a death-wound, and expires beside her lover.

Quinetrea eventually conquers and Karma falls a vctim to her wiles. She triumphantly taunts him, and outraged at her cruel deception, Karma curses her, and Quinetrea is transformed into a huge snake. Fifteen hundred years later, Karma appears, reincarnated in the personality of Leslie Adams and loves the beautiful heiress, Lillian White. Together they visit the ancient Temple of Karma and are shown the reptile, which every hundred years resumes human form. While Leslie gazes fascinated, the snake uncoils and Quinetrea stands before him in all her bewitching charm. She holds him with her hypnotic power and forces him to accept an amulet for his betrothed, upon receiving which Lillian falls dead. Karma beholds a vision of his former self as High Priest, again curses Quinetrea, and drops dead across the prostrate body of his betrothed.

THE SHAUGHRAUN

A Genuine Irish Drama Produced Amid Genuine Irish Surroundings

December 23, 1912. Kalem. Three Reels.

His sister, Claire, and sweetheart, Arte, are dependent upon Conn, the Shaughraun, who supplies them with food by his poaching. Several years later Robert returns to Ireland, but is captured and thrown into prison. The crafty Conn assists him to escape and feigns death when fired upon by a sentinel. It is commonly believed that Conn has been killed, and a wake is held, during which the Shaughraun learns of a plan to spirit the girls out of the country. Kinchela and his accomplices are brought to justice and the sweethearts reunited.

The LAST PERFORMANCE

His spectacular thriller, "The Platform of Death," wins him the title of the "Greatest Horseman in the World," and because of the public admiration his wife becomes jealous. She drugs his horse, and as he mounts the Platform of Death the horse becomes frightened at the first explosion of fireworks and plunges forward, bringing with him the Count to death in the ring below.

THE RED MAN'S HONOR

December 16, 1912. Eclipse Kleine. Two Reels.

June Dew, a pretty Indian maiden, is betrothed to Red Hawk, the bravest warrior of the tribe. Seated Bear, another brave, also loves the dark beauty and his savage heart is inflamed with jealousy at the success of his rival. One day he surprises her alone and forcibly carries her off to his canoe. Red Hawk appears just in time to see the act, and springing into the stream soon overtakes his rival. A desperate struggle follows in which Red Hawk's arm, strengthened by the "Great Spirit," mortally wounds his treacherous enemy. Red Hawk and the maiden return to the village and the wounded Indian painfully makes his way to shore, where he tells a greatly distorted story of Red Hawk's crime. The accused warrior is ordered before the great chief "White Eagle," and the death sentence imposed: "He that kills a brother must die. Twelve moons hence his spirit shall join that of the dead warrior." Red Hawk's heart is filled with bitterness and he leaves his tribe to join the army of the pale faces. His bravery in surmounting indescribable difficulties to destroy a mountain bridge, thus checking the advance of the enemy, gains him the high regard of the army, but his happiness is short lived as he remembers the sentence and returns to his tribe to pay the debt of a red man's honor. With his beloved June Dew he is taken to the funeral pyre and their souls go forth to join the Happy Hunting Ground of the "Great Spirit."

With his Hindoo servant, Arthur follows the trail until it reaches the City of Tunis, where it is lost. The sisters arrive in the city, are sold to a wealthy merchant and accordingly enter his harem. Budlong finally learns of the abode of his beloved and her sister and despatches his servant with a note to them, giving his plans to effect their release. Ourida is overjoyed and Fatima feigns to be, but instead, turns informer, and when they come to the gate to await Budlong's arrival they are met by servants and brought back to the harem. Arthur and his servant reach the gate and after a desperate struggle with the guard they rescue the girls. Finding that Fate is against her, Fatima gives vent to her jealous anger. They hurriedly leave her, to act as principals in a wedding ceremony.

"THE HUNCHBACK"

By PAUL FE'VAL in three parts

Comprising Sixty Scenes of Magnitude and Magnificence

Produced by Les Grands Films

He wasn't really a hunchback, though every one thought him so. And, in this disguise did one of the most daring, romantic and fascinating characters in all fiction's history, plan and plot his way through a daily death threatened life. A life beset with danger at every turn and with the Spectre of the eternal End ever peering and leering at him.

Buyers:—It has an absolutely absorbing plot. It has as much action as any feature ever released. It is enacted by the very best artists in France. The settings are marvels of beauty. In a nutshell—*it is a feature among features

"THE IRON HAND"

In Two Parts — PRODUCED BY PARIS ECLAIR

A strong, straightforward story of a man, a so-called gentleman, whose curse of greed made him more dangerous, more cruel and more to be despised than the very "rats of society." In it an unwritten law of custom is made to furnish a plot of absorbing dramatic value.

It is an exceptional feature for it has an unusual and unhackneyed plot. It is simple in construction, yet powerful in its enactment. It is played by the pick of the Eclair stock company, and staged most admirably. And the photography is perfection. Every scene carries suspense, every movement starts a thrill. The plot is baffling as to outcome, yet is wonderfully free from confusion in understanding. It is a feature with a swing—a "punch" and a power for "getting over" as a great big feature success.

LOVE AND CIRCUMSTANCES

SYNOPSIS.

Frank Wainwright and George Duncan are rival clerks. They are both in love with their employer's daughter, Helen Morris. Duncan, to pay gambling debts, steals a large sum of money, and suspicion falls on Wainwright. Wainwright is given time, by his employer, to prove his innocence, but circumstances being too strong against him, he is forced to go West. Helen, who believes in his innocence, accompanies him as his wife. The hardships that they meet, coupled with the sudden appearance of Duncan in their Western home, and the actions of a revengeful Mexican, make this picture intensely interesting.

BOSS OF THE RANCH

SYNOPSIS.

Nora Price, being left in charge of a large Western ranch by the sudden death of her father, is wooed by her foreman, Ben Lane, who is not only desirous of winning Nora's heart, but also of becoming possessor of the ranch. At the same time that Ben is making love to Nora he is leader of a band of cattle rustlers. His treachery is discovered by Steve Gibbs, the son of one of Nora's father's friends. The cleverness with which Steve rounds up the rustlers, and the thrilling situations that arise in bringing the band to justice, makes this picture one that will be remembered by all who appreciate real Western life.

ECLECTIC—"Selecting; choosing; not confined to or following any one model or system, but selecting and appropriating whatever is considered best in all."

This definition will ever be the motto and guiding star of our enterprise. Choosing, as we do, the best from a chain of European studios with particular regard to fitness of subject for American audiences, and commanding vast resources, financial and technical, the American trade is assured of a supply of matchless and truly ECLECTIC films, such as will fill a long felt want among the rank and file of the progressive American exhibitor of today. ## SELIG.

THE CLUE (Jan. 13).—Ben Ames, through circumstantial evidence, is forced to serve a prison sentence. Upon his release he returns to his home and wife and child. The next day he is fortunate enough to secure a position in the wholesale house of Arnold & Co. He works hard and succeeds so well that he is promoted several times. One day when he is leaving the store he accidentally bumps into a former cellmate named Hogan. Hogan learns that Ames has been successful in keeping the knowledge of his prison term from his employer, and uses this bit of information to blackmail Ames. Ames gives him money time and time again. Finally, however, Hogan's demands grow too strong and, after Ames' refusal to contribute further, Hogan tells Arnold of Ames' record. Ames is discharged and is unable to secure other work. The day comes when he is forced to take up his former profession, in an effort to secure medicine for his sick wife. His child's doll gets mixed up in his bag of burglar tools, and it is through this clue that Arnold traces Ames, who has attempted to rob his former employer's house, and learns of the true state of affairs that exist in Ames' home. Arnold gives him his old job back again, and the past is forgotten.

BUD'S HEIRESS (Jan. 14).—The sisters Wayne, Ruth and Flo decide to spend their summer vacation on the famous Diamond S Ranch. They engage accommodations in advance, and consequently their arrival is somewhat looked forward to by the ranch cowpunchers. The girls arrive at the little station near the ranch and engage an automobile to transport them to their new quarters. One of the tires blow out, and the cowboys drag the auto to the ranch at the end of their ropes. Upon their arrival at the Diamond S the girls are shown some real wild Western stunts. This proves to be an unqualified treat, for few, if any, "punchers" can surpass the famous Diamond S ranchers in those feats of dare-deviltry common to the cowboy life of the West. The girls find their vacation to be a most unique one and the little god Cupid takes advantage of their outing by playing strange tricks with their hearts.

A PLAIN GIRL'S LOVE (Jan. 15).—Silverton West is a worthy young blacksmith in a prosperous town. He is engaged to Martha Day, of plain face but fine character. Nancy Cleveland, the village belle, returns from the city. West becomes infatuated with Nancy's beauty and breaks off his engagement with Martha. Martha is heartbroken, but bears her loss with dignity. Jack Bloodgood, something of a "dandy" and wise to the ways of the world, becomes a rival of West for the affections of Nancy. Nancy doesn't fancy either, but figures on marrying the one who can best satisfy her extravagant tastes. West starts on a lone expedition in the search for gold, which he eventually finds, although his life is nearly lost in the hazardous search for it. In the meantime Nancy, thinking West to be lost in the desert, marries the "drummer." Martha, the plain girl, leads a posse in search of West, and rescues him with her own hand. West learns the worth of a plain girl's love and the two are happily married.

A REVOLUTIONARY ROMANCE (Jan. 16).—Jorden Alden, a young American officer, is in love with Molly Brown, the daughter of a well-to-do New England farmer. Jorden is on a visit to the home of his loved one, when he receives a message from his general, instructing him to don the uniform of a British soldier, make his way through the British lines and report on the strength of their troops. He makes the change in uniforms and starts on his dangerous mission, leaving Molly broken-hearted. Before going Molly warns him to be most careful in returning, as British soldiers are constantly camping on their grounds. Molly agrees to warn Jorden, by a light signal, in case it is dangerous for him to return to the house.

While Jorden is away the British quarter themselves in the Brown home. Molly is confined upstairs by force and is unable to warn her returning lover of his danger, as arranged. He is captured and is about to be shot, when Molly, who has, by a clever ruse, managed to escape, turns the tables on the British soldiers and Jorden is saved for the arms of his sweetheart.

POISON IVY (Jan. 17).—Lazy Sam, a typical member of the tie-walking gentry, accidentally stumbles into a poison ivy patch. His hands become infected with the dreaded itch, and he goes to sleep on a park bench while vainly attempting to scratch away the cause of the annoyance. In his troubled dreams he sees himself walking down the street. He meets and shakes hands with another hobo. The second hobo immediately starts to scratch vigorously. He applies at a good housewife's door for food and is given a saw with which to earn his "hand-out." He abandons the saw at the woodpile, and the next user contracts the annoying itch. This happens to be the housewife herself, and she in turn passes the itch on to her daughter, who immediately inoculates her sweetheart. In the meantime the two tramps have been spreading the itch to other quarters, and in short order the entire village, including the mayor and the sewing circle, are scratching with all the power at their command. The tramp's realistic dream, however, is rudely interrupted when the village marshal's club beats a tattoo upon his thinly-clad feet.

THE CLAY INDUSTRY (Jan. 17).—A rare educational subject, showing the various processes followed in the art of clay pottery.

EDISON.

THE OFFICE BOY'S BIRTHDAY (Jan. 13).—In the office where Lionel is employed is a bevy of pretty girl stenographers who, though in a measure fond of Lionel, at times become greatly provoked with him because of his boyish pranks. Lionel advertises the fact that his birthday is approaching and advises the girls to sit up and take notice; he also tells them that he should like them to present him with a watch in remembrance. The girls say that they will be glad to give him one if he will promise to conduct himself with decorum. All goes well until the day before. Accident follows accident and as a result he is "in bad" with all the young ladies. They tell him he will have to do something to regain their favor.

Lionel's wits commence to work. He has an Italian fruit seller who is a friend. He confides in him and together they concoct a scheme which they put through. It works well and as a result he gets the watch after all.

THE LAKE GENEVA CAMP OF THE Y. M. C. A., Lake Geneva, Wis. (Jan. 13).—Besides being of decided interest this picture furnishes a remarkable illustration of the wide-spread work which the Y. M. C. A. is doing. The association realizes that a healthy mind can be stored only in a healthy body and thus every encouragement is offered to athletics in all branches.

Their "camp" on Lake Geneva is a beautiful place with every facility for study and play. The film shows us gymnastic work of great variety (even including dancing) field athletics, water sports and races. Of special interest is a series of diving scenes.

AT BEAR TRACK GULCH (Jan. 14).—Alice Loraine, a young Eastern school teacher takes her father to a little Western mining camp recommended by her physician, in the hope of saving or at least prolonging his life. The physician provides her with a letter to an old friend in the camp so "the boys" of Bear Track Gulch give them a real Western welcome.

Alice is the first woman to ever alight from the stage at the Gulch and her personal charms and devotion to her invalid father soon win the admiration of every man in the camp.

The change of air failing to benefit her father, Alice is soon left alone and to add to her misfortune she gets a letter telling her that the bank in which she had deposited her meagre savings in the East, has failed.

The boys learn of this and start to raise money for her by subscription but old Pete Griffin realizes the danger of wounding her by this method. They decide that Bear Track Gulch is an illiterate camp and that it needs a school. Of course a school requires a teacher and none but Alice would do. Thus is Alice put on a living wage, at least.

Jack Turner, one of Alice's pupils, is deeply smitten with her but his bashfulness prevents an avowal of his love. One day he finds her crying over and kissing the photograph of a young man and decides that she has left a sweetheart in the East. He tells the boys that she must be sent back and keeps his own feelings in the background.

Under his leadership they steal over to Alice's little claim at night and "salt" a mine at her very door. The following morning the "school committee" call under pretext of business and apparently accidentally pick up a piece of valuable ore from the salted mine. An auction is immediately arranged and, Jack buys the claim, thus enabling Alice to start East at once, but Alice does not want to go.

At the last moment when about to board the stage Jack tells of his love and speaks of the photograph. Alice quickly shows it to him, a picture of her father taken years ago. Needless to say, Alice does not go back East.

THE TITLE CURE (Jan. 15).—Mr. Clayworth, a wealthy American and self-made man, has a daughter Bessie, who is determined to marry a foreign title much against her father's wishes. She has an American suitor William Brooks who is deeply in love with her but he is given little encouragement.

Mr. Clayworth plans to discourage his daughter with nobility and accordingly goes to an employment agency where he engages three foreign menials to impersonate noblemen, supplying them with evening clothes and arranging to have them call at his house that evening. Bessie is overjoyed when she learns from father that three noblemen are to honor them with their presence. Father incidentally suggests that if the noblemen do not come up to her expectations to patch up her little quarrel with Billy and say no more about marrying a title.

The fun begins when the three bogus noblemen present themselves at Clayworth's house as Duke Macaroni, Lord Brien Berue and Baron Hasenpfeffer. They are ushered into the drawing room and introduced one after another to the ambitious Bessie who vainly attempts to entertain them. At first she is puzzled, then she becomes discouraged and finally thoroughly disgusted.

Father fairly revels in his daughter's discomfiture as she dismisses one after another. After her experience with supposed nobility she meets her American suitor and welcomes him with open arms.

Bessie turns father's joke into a boomerang when she jokingly sends him a message stating she has eloped with Duke Macaroni. Father takes this message seriously and nearly goes insane at the thought of losing his daughter through his foolishness. When Bessie returns home on the arm of Mr. Macaroni to ask forgiveness her father's rage knows no bounds and just as he is about to throw the bogus Macaroni out off comes his wig and mustache, revealing the welcome features of Billy Brooks, Bessie's American suitor. This gives father the surprise of his life and his joy is unbound for his daughter is title cured.

A TIMELY RESCUE (Jan. 13).—John Bronson, Mr. Daly's farmhand, has ambitions and decides to go to the city. He breaks the news to Mr. and Mrs. Daly and their daughter Lottie. They do their utmost to dissuade him from his purpose, but John has made up his mind to go, He gets employment in a department store. Soon he is promoted to a slightly higher position. He has become neglectful of his country friends, and Lottie waits in vain for an answer to her letters.

Things have not been going well on the farm. Mr. Daly dies, leaving nothing but a mortgage on the old place. With John everything is fortune. He is promoted to the manager's private office with a chance of advancement. The holder of the mortgage tells Lottie and her mother that they will have to foreclose unless interest is paid. Lottie begs for more time, but finally she and her mother lose the old place and decide to go to the city. They find a room in a cheap lodging house and Lottie starts on her search of work.

John, who is popular with everyone, is very comfortable in a pretentious boarding house. Weeks go on and Lottie can find nothing to do because of her inexperience. The landlady duns Lottie and her mother for rent, Lottie desperate, resolves to do something and goes out once more. John in his boarding house has an evening on his hands and falls in with the suggestion of a friend to go to the new dance hall. Lottie, faint from lack of food, leans wearily against the entrance to the dance hall. A girl comes out, takes pity on her and invites her in. After eating the girl explains to Lottie how she can make money by dressing herself in the clothes she is willing to lend her and mingling with the crowd on the floor. Lottie hesitates but finally accepts. She is timid and ashamed, but the dance hall proprietor bluntly tells her what she must do. Lottie still hangs back until the proprietor roughly pushes her out on to centre of the floor with the crowd.

John without a partner for a moment, sees Lottie, is pleased with her, puts his arm roughly around her waist. She tries to break away, but John tightens his grasp and swings her around and is about to start to dance when they recognize each other. John asks no questions, his only thought being to take her away. The crowd gathers round to see what the trouble is and the dance is broken up. Proprietor angerly upbraids Lottie for spoiling the night's business. John knocks him down and leads Lottie out. Bronson pays the landlady and Lottie gets a position in the office with John who soon discovers that he has loved Lottie and only needs her to make his life happy, and their marriage soon follows.

PETER'S PLEDGE (Jan. 14).—Peter Lang, a retired army veteran, receives a pension which is just enough to enable him to live comfortably in a cozy flat and to keep a Chinese man servant. In his younger days Peter had been a wild one, but now, being paralyzed from his knees down, is confined to a chair built especially to accommodate his mountainous anatomy, Peter weighing over 300 lbs. To the arm of this chair is fastened his old cavalry sabre. His life is not dull, however, for almost every day he has as guests a half dozen old veterans like himself. At their rallies the bottle flows freely and their numerous toasts to the "old days" often go to their heads.

Peter's cousin, Moriah Lang, is desirous of reforming Peter, so when she dies, rather than leave him her fortune of $20,000 to drink himself to death with, she aims to kill two birds with one stone by leaving the money to Sally Nelson, an old maid friend, with the proviso that she marry Peter and share the fortune with him, her idea being that married to a good woman, Peter would forsake his evil ways and sober up. Peter consents to marry Sally, thinking that after he has connected with the $20,000 he can relegate her to household work. After their wedding, the lawyers discover a later will providing that Peter must also sign the pledge against liquor, before the money is turned over. Peter is in a fix. He is married but refuses to sign the pledge. Sally forbids liquor to enter the house. Peter's old friends try to smuggle it in but Sally is too sharp for them. Peter, however, finally succeeds in securing a bottle of good rye. He has a week's thirst and goes at the whiskey accordingly. Sally's attempts to get the bottle away are met by Peter's flourishing sword and she is forced to retreat. When Peter recovers from his "souse" he finds himself out on the fire escape where Sally, through the door, informs him he must stay until he signs the pledge. Peter sticks it out all night with crowds in the street watching the game, but in the cold, gray dawn it begins to rain and Peter signs the pledge.

IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN (Jan. 16).—Richard Dent, an old recluse, gets into a heated argument with his nephew, Manning Mulrey, over some creditor's bills and disenherits him. The old man's only companion is a neighbor's girl, Nellie Brooks, who is in love with the boy, and his old servant, Thomas. The servant who is very fond of the boy meets him as he is leaving and gives him money.

Two years elapse and Mulrey returns, a failure. He is greeted by the old servant who invites him to eat; the boy is weak and refuses, but asks for brandy. After he drinks the stimulant he starts to brood and while in this mood there flashes through his brain the scenes of "What Might Have Been." He pictures himself welcomed by his uncle, but the will brings back the thought of his disinheritance and causes him to doubt his uncle's sincerity. He becomes enraged, kills the old man, reads the will and finds it is in his favor. To throw suspicion off himself he upsets the room, takes money out of the draw to make it appear as if robbery was the motive. Then he flees to a large city.

The following morning the servant discovers the body and gives the alarm. The boy meets Nellie Brooks and her mother at a restaurant where he also reads a newspaper account of a servant being accused of murdering the old man. Later he calls on the girl, proposes and is accepted. Two months elapse; the servant has been tried, is convicted and sentenced to be hung. Mulrey calls on the old servant who encourages the boy to proceed with his marriage. The ceremony is on, but at the last moment he reflects and rushes off to the gallows in time to proclaim the servant's innocence. With a smothered cry Mulrey awakes out of his trance, and rushes out of the servant's quarters into his uncle's house. The old man is glad to see him, welcomes him and everything is forgiven.

QUARANTINED (Jan. 17).—Lieutenant Mason, U. S. A., is engaged to marry Ruth Wilson, the Colonel's daughter. His father, a snappy, grouchy old banker opposes the match. He learns that his son is ordered to the Philippines and will marry Ruth and take her with him. He determines to appeal to the Colonel to prevent the wedding.

There is a small-pox scare prevalent and the doctor of the regiment, to help the lieutenant, detaines the banker as a possible patient and has him confined in bed in the hospital quarters. He hears the instructions that he is to be detained there until after five o'clock, the hour set for the wedding. His clothing is locked up to prevent his escape but he manages to get out of the window in his pajamas, slides down the bed sheet and is chased by the sentinel and orderlies to the Colonel's office where he surreptitiously puts the clock at five minutes after five. He finally reaches the Colonel's house as the bride and groom are leaving. Realizing that he is too late he extends his congratulations.

FOOLING THEIR WIVES (Jan. 17).—Brown, Jones, Smith and Black are camping. The wives of the first three find things rather dull. They decide to take their turns when the men come back. They do. The husbands think they will have a fine time with their wives away, but they get lonesome and try to scare the women back to town by posing as tramps and attacking the camp. It's a good scheme, but it works the wrong way, for the women chase them from the camp and run them up to their necks into the lake, where they reveal their identities. They are permitted to come out again and all start for home.

THE MEXICAN SPY (Jan. 17).—(2 reel special)—Tom, son of Colonel Loring, is a handsome but dissipated youth, easily influenced to moral transgressions. Mary Lee, the pay-master's daughter, loves Tom despite his failings, and tries desperately though vainly to reform him. Senor Luis Rivera, polished and apparently wealthy (in reality a spy) becomes intimate with Tom, who, to keep up his end and pay his gambling loses to Rivera, and steals $5000 from the Paymaster's safe. Rivera threatens to expose Tom's theft unless he steals for him the plans of forts in the Southwest, proposing to give back the money, which Tom may replace in the safe, if he does so. Tom cannot resist the temptation, and secures the plans from his father's office, but before he has delivered the drawings to Rivera, Mary learns of the situation, and by pawning her jewels and using a little legacy, raises enough money to replace that stolen. She then forces Tom to defy Rivera, and replaces the plans. No one suspects Tom, but he realizes that he is breaking the hearts of his father and the girl, and swears that he will prove worthy of their love.

Rivera has gone away. Tom disappears and under another name enlists in the army, leaving a note for Mary in which he tells her that she will not see him again until he has redeemed his shameful past. Shortly afterward the regiment, to which Tom has become attached, is ordered to the southwestern border on account of difficulty arising with the Republic of Mexico. In the meantime Mary has applied for and received an appointment as a Red Cross nurse and is herself, sent to the border. One day after her arrival she is sent by the surgeon in charge to a point some distance away from the hospital and is greatly surprised to find the soldier assigned to drive the wagon furnished for her transportation, none other than Tom. The two young folks are overjoyed to see one another again. Tom takes his seat with Mary and the escort inside and the journey starts.

Rivera with his troop learns of the trip, and starts in pursuit of the little party. A running fight follows. Mary and Tom are the only ones left alive on the wagon. Tom stops the wagon and hastily mounting Mary on one of the mules, sends her in search of aid, while he undertakes to hold back the attacking Mexicans. Upon Mary's return with a troop of cavalry they find Tom lying wounded. Tom is taken to the hospital and with Mary's careful nursing is restored to health. Later Tom is made Lieutenant and secures Mary's hand.

THE GIRL AND THE GAMBLER (Jan. 18).—Jack Oakley is a gambler, but different from many of his profession, he was square to everyone. When he came to the palace to deal poker, he surprised the habitues of the place by telling them that his game would be run "on the level" or not at all. He was not there long before he was obliged to call two crooked card men and run them out of the palace.

A few days later he was surprised to see these crooks chasing down the road after a lone defenseless girl. He immediately gave chase and put them to flight. The girl was Marion Darrick, daughter of a ranch owner. Marion had a brother Tom who had a craze for gambling. He went so far as to steal money from his father. He frequently sat in Jack's game but invariably lost.

One day Jack thought he would teach him a lesson. He stacked the cards and relieved him of every cent. Almost crazed the boy arose from the table, wondering how he would return the stolen money when Jack stopped him and, with this advice, "Never touch a card again—you don't know the game," he handed Tom the money he took from him.

Marion had followed him to the palace to try and prevent the loss of the stolen money. She arrived in time to see Jack slip a card in his boot and calling the sheriff, sent him in to save Tom's money. The gambler admitted stacking the cards and when the sheriff heard his explanation he shook his hand for being the squarest gambler he ever met.

Later Jack and Marion fell in love, but her father objected to Jack's attention to his daughter because he was a gambler. Jack saw that he was a social out-cast and decided to quit the game forever. On the day Jack left the town Marion's father went to the little town bank to draw the monthly pay roll for his cowboys, but on his way back to the ranch he was held up and robbed by the outlaws Jack had twice encountered. Again he came across them, but this time he held them until the sheriff arrived and took them. Marion's father saw his mistake in classing Jack with the majority. With the consent of Marion, Jack asked Darrick for the hand of his daughter, which was freely given and Jack received his reward.

The actress sends her regrets, but about the time she should have appeared, the young lady, living in the flat above, returns from a visit and mistaking Gerald's door for her own, in the darkness, enters his room to the great embarrassment of both Gerald and herself.

Meanwhile Ralph, who has been watching in concealment, hastens to fasten the outside doors, making the pair prisoners. She appears impervious to the calls of love and laughs her way through life, careless of the lovemaking of the young swains. Henry, besides being more persistent than the others, enlists the sympathy of her father, but she will not listen to either of them and ridicules her fisher-lover's protestations of affection.

One day, however, on her way home from the shore, she meets two young fellows, who become rude and even attempt to kiss her. Her cries bring Henry to the scene, who quickly disposes of the assailants. Stella now begins to look upon him with favor, but he, remembering her previous attitude, determines to put her to the test. He pretends to make violent love to another girl, with such good effect that Stella soon becomes madly jealous and makes unmistakable her passionate love for him. THE THREE BLACK BAGS (Jan 13).—"Slick-Fingered Mag must be captured, or I will know the reason why!" These are the proud words of Detective Brown, as he prepares to go in search of the elusive "Mag." He packs his traveling bag and leaves it open upon the sofa in his room; then goes downstairs to eat his breakfast. "Slick-Fingered Mag", seeing the front door of Brown's home ajar, enters and makes a sneak upstairs. She carries a bag of the same character as Brown's. She gathers up all the valuables she finds handy, not overlooking some of Mrs. Brown's choicest jewels.

Hearing sounds of approaching footsteps, she becomes excited and empties the "swag" into Brown's bag, supposing it to be her own, and with it, escapes from the house, leaving her own bag behind her. Mrs. Brown, placing some clean linen in her husband's grip, sees the female apparel. She comes to the conclusion that he is about to elope. Brown dramatically bids his wife goodbye. She follows him to the Railroad Depot, where he meets "Mag." She takes a seat on the settee next to a very giddy and restless spinster, who carries a bag of the same make as "Mag's." When Mag gets up, she takes the spinster's bag in mistake. The maiden lady immediately demands her bag back and "Mag", just as persistently, refuses. Detective Brown suggests that each one describe the contents of the bags and then open them. They do so and the mistake is discovered.

"Mag" becomes quite familiar and flirtatious with Brown, and in showing the contents of her bag, exhibits a jewel case, containing his wife's jewelry. At this juncture Mrs. Brown arrives on the scene. He tells his wife that the woman is "Slick-Fingered Mag." Showing his badge, he arrests and proudly marches off with "Mag" to the police headquarters. The spinster, who has a strong sense of the ludicrous, grasps the humor of the situation and almost laughs herself into convulsions.

THE WINNING HAND (Jan. 14).—The young sheriff is after the outlaw, Manuel Mandazo. The sheriff stops a moment to see his sweetheart Beth. Hardly has he left her when the outlaw appears at the cabin and advances admiringly toward the girl, but is repulsed at the point of a revolver and, in the struggle which follows, the revolver is discharged. The sheriff hears the shot and rides back and is struck down senseless by Manuel. After disarming the senseless sheriff, the Mexican is about to stab him, when Beth snatches up her revolver from the floor and drives the Mexican from the cabin. He swears vengeance upon the sheriff and his sweetheart.

The sheriff regains his senses and weak and wounded, takes the trail after Manuel. He comes upon him in the deserted powder shack of an old mine. He is surprised and overcome by the Mexican and left bound. A stub of candle is left burning on an open can of blasting powder.

The Mexican returns to the girl's cabin and forces his way in. Meanwhile, the sheriff has struggled to his feet and realizing Beth's danger, he lifts the burning candle from the powder can with his teeth and burns through the bonds which hold his wrists and rides back to his sweetheart's house. Just as the Mexican has broken in the door, the sheriff bursts through a window, covers him with his gun, while the girl snaps a pair of handcuffs upon his wrists.

OFF THE ROAD (Jan. 15).—"If you do not pay the money you owe me at once, Beware!" This is the angry threat of James Farrar to Robert Evers, whom he claimed, owed him a large amount of money for which he is in great need. Farrar meets Evers, and demands the money. Being refused, he kills Evers and the crime is never fastened upon him. Mrs. Farrar, through grief over the suspicion against her husband, dies.

Farrar, in remorse of conscience, moves with his daughter from the city, far away from civilization and off from the beaten road into the heart of a dense forest, where he builds a cabin, hoping to forget the memories of the past.

Robert Evers, Junior, the son of the murdered man, now grown to manhood, visits the forest in which Farrar and his daughter have their home. He accidentally sprains his foot and sitting on a fallen tree, unable to walk further. Estelle Farrer comes along and he tells her what has happened. She brings liniment and bandages to him with which she rubs and bandages his foot. He falls desperately in love with her and when she takes him to her home and introduces him to her father, Farrar becomes greatly exercised. He sees such a strong resemblance in young Evers to his father, it seems to him as if a vision of his victim has appeared before him. Young Evers recovers from his accident. He declares his love for Estelle and she accepts him as her affianced husband. Suddenly, a shot is heard. The young man rushes into the cabin and finds Farrar dead upon the floor. He sees, lying on the table, a confession, admitting having killed Mr. Evers. Young Evers takes the paper and burns it, so that Estelle may never know of her father's crime. He then comes out for Estelle, tenderly breaks the news to her and comforts her in her grief, telling her that she will soon be his wife and he will care for and protect her and she will be the light and hope of his life.

THE BRINGING OUT OF PAPA (Jan. 16).—By the death of a relative, Mr. Dean, a bookkeeper, suddenly finds himself a rich man. At once, his family become exceedingly ambitious to shine in society. Papa Dean has always been under the subjugation of his wife and now she becomes more domineering than ever. Poor Dean is escorted about from store to store where she and her daughters purchase elaborate gowns and indulge in all sorts of luxuries. After they are thoroughly outfitted, Papa is taken to a fashionable tailor's and clothed in the most up-to-date apparel and furnished, in their opinion, as a gentleman of his wealth should be. They move to a hotel, attend the opera and eat in swell restaurants. Papa Dean, in his full dress suit and knickerbocker trousers, is a sight to behold.

He creates a sensation and no end of laughter. He is so indignant he forgets to open his opera hat and places it like a plate on the top of his head, which brings forth more peals of mirth from the diners. Mrs. Dean and the girls are so puffed up with themselves, their heads are so elevated, they are in danger of falling over on their backs.

Their one great ambition is to possess the Carmon jewels, which they have seen at Biffany's. A pair of precious rascals get news of this and try to pass off a fake imitation of the jewels on old man Dean. Fortunately, he is called up by Biffany's on the telephone and becomes wise to the attempted swindle. He has the men arrested and saves his cash. This bit of good luck which Papa Dean announces to his family, as an evidence of his great shrewdness, raises him as a hero in the estimation of his family. His daughters compliment and caress him and Mamma Dean is obliged to acknowledge that he is a little more than mere man.

At night, he tries to find a place to sleep. His own bed is occupied by the two aunts. "Me for the hotel!" says Dickson. He engages a room, takes a little nip and finds his room occupied by a party of suffragettes, who have suddenly taken possession of the hotel. Making his way outdoors, he lies down under a tree. The sheriff comes along, wakes him up and invites him to spend the night at the jail. He accepts, and snuggling up in his little cot, all his troubles are soon forgotten.

With the assistance of her aunt, she tries to get rid of the friend by pretending to fall in love with him so that, as an honorable man, he would flee from the scene. Their visitor sees through her scheme and makes love to her. When her husband notices this, he gets furious. His friend explains matters, they all have a hearty laugh. The friend, seeing his opportunity, makes a graceful departure, leaving the young couple blissfully to themselves.

One day, while quarreling, Mrs. Mathews, in anger, threatens to kill her brutal husband. Her words are heard by their little child. A few days later, a hunter, in passing the house, sees a squirrel on the fence and shoots it, just as John Mathews is turning the corner of the house. The bullet from the hunter's gun kills him and the man disappears.

Mrs. Mathews is convicted of her husband's death on circumstantial evidence and the testimony of her child. She is sentenced to die and during her imprisonment, she is seen by the matron surreptitiously sewing some baby clothes. The matron takes an interest in Mrs. Mathew's case, makes a personal appeal to the governor, that two lives cannot be taken by the state for one. The governor commutes Mrs. Mathew's sentence. The hunter, who accidentally did the killing, conscience-stricken at the thought of an innocent woman suffering for his deed, appears before the authorities, makes confession and Mrs. Mathews is pardoned.

A DANGEROUS WAGER (Jan. 13).—In a spirit of fun Jack wagers with Ned that he can hold up the stage coach with his straight-stem pipe. It happens that both men are in love with Nell and Ned sees an opportunity to gain the ascendancy over his rival.

Ned takes passage on the coach and with the other travellers turns over his valuables to the supposed highwaymen. In gathering up the passengers' belongings that he may return them and claim his wager, Jack inadvertently leaves his pipe by the roadside and it is picked up by an Indian.

Meanwhile the stage returns to inform the authorities and Ned accompanies the sheriff's posse to capture the robber. They meet Jack on his way home and the young man is overwhelmed when Ned repudiates the wager. As Jack has lost his pipe he cannot convince the sheriff that he has merely been perpetrating a joke.

A trial is held and the evidence of Ned and the other passengers convicts Jack. The sheriff and deputies lead Jack to a lonely tree for the execution.

Nell is almost prostrated with grief and coming to the stage house she implores her friends to intercede for Jack—but to no avail. Just as she is about to abandon hope, the Indian who has been sleeping on the porch extracts the pipe and begins to fill it. Nell recognizes the pipe as Jack's and orders the Indian to accompany her to the tree, where her sweetheart's innocence is established.

RED SWEENEY'S MISTAKE (Jan. 15).—Red Sweeney, living by his wits, makes a humorous mistake which results in a protracted visit in jail. Harry and George each purchase a stick pin with brilliant imitation diamonds for 25 cents, and when they return to the office their employer, Mr. Goodwin, is deceived by the cheap jewelry. Goodwin is induced to wear one of the pins in his tie as a joke, and when he steps from his office he is accosted by Red Sweeney, who begs the price of a meal. As Goodwin is extricating some change from his pocket, the pin catches Red's eye and he makes away with it. Goodwin is almost convulsed with laughter as he thinks of the thief's poor selection, but he decides that the man should be punished in any event and he informs the police.

Red returns to his shack and extracting the pin't setting, places it in a ring which he hands to Rose, his accomplice, to pawn.

The pawnbroker is suspicious when the ring is offered to him and slipping out the back door, he summons an officer. Rose, becoming alarmed, makes her escape but is finally apprehended. A woman detective at headquarters dons Rose's clothes and, carefully veiled, she enters Sweeney's abode. Red asks for a report and is confronted by the detective's revolver.

The thief is taken to the station house and Mr. Goodwin is called. When Red and Rose are brought before him, Goodwin takes the supposed gem and smashes it into a powder with one blow of the sergeant's pistol.

"What do you know about that?" exclaims the disgusted Sweeney to Rose. Then turning to the sergeant, he remarks, "Lock us both up till we get some sense."

When Willie becomes insistent, Iva informs him that he must prove as heroic as Hen Boggs. Willie therefore schemes to "get the Chief's goat," and this he does in a very effective manner.

Securing a large augur, Willie bores a number of holes in the board walk leading to the Chief's house. He then sets an old barn on fire and manages to be with the volunteer fire department when they arrive on the ground. Meanwhile, the alarm is carried to the Chief, who rushes from the house only to catch his wooden leg in the augur holes. By the time the Chief extracts his phoney limb the fire is extinguished and Willie is the hero of the day.

After several years of this unsatisfactory existence she meets a gentleman whose curiosity is aroused by the presence of a white girl among the Indians. There is a wild scramble until the babies are exchanged. Mrs. Black gets a black baby back, but when she kisses it, it turns white, while Mrs. White's kisses turn the white baby black. The clairvoyant gives her a powder which she tells her to ignite and leave on the table over night. Mrs. Cheltenham does so. Almost immediately there is an explosion and in the smoke which follows the good woman's troubles blow away. How? It would be spoiling a good story to explain how it all happens, but we will say that the women will enjoy the film and any man who knows what it is to have indigestion will appreciate it as well.

OUR ENEMY, THE WASP (Jan. 17).—Perhaps you have been accorded a close view of the wasp but did not wait long enough in the vicinity to add to your store of useful information the knowledge of the habits and nature of the insect. A view of this film will supply the missing lesson with illustrations which are missing from the text books, and you will not, by any chance, get stung.

THE PALACE OF FONTAINBLEAU (Jan. 14).—Scenes in and about the famous palace built by Francis I of France which has been the home of French Kings ever since.

THE JELLY FISH AND THE PLANKTON (Jan. 14).—Although hardly visible to the naked eye, there are thousands of sea-animals that perform useful functions in the scheme of things. They are known as Plankton and exposed herein to microscopic view. The life and habits of the Jelly Fish are also illustrated and explained for the benefit of everyone since there is no one who has not made his acquaintance while bathing at the sea shore.

ALONG THE RIVIERA (Jan. 17).—A series of views of the most beauteous resort in all the world, including views of the famous Monte Carlo.

MELIES.

A BALLAD OF THE SOUTH SEAS (Jan. 23).—This photoplay was produced in Tahiti, one of the South Sea Islands, and is the reconstruction of an ancient ballad sung by the "Kanakas," natives of the island, since the year 1650.

Of all the great chiefs of Tahiti in the year 1650, Tavi was the most generous, and, therefore, the most powerful. Sharing his high position was his consort, the beautiful Taurua, whom Tavi cherished and honored more than was the custom. So that when the neighboring chier Tuiterai dispatches envoys of peace imploring the loan of his wife for seven days, Tavi must needs comply, though it break his heart, for Tavi was generous.

The seven days up, Taurua is not returned and Tavi declares war. It is a long, fierce barbaric struggle. Taurua is regained and Tuiterai taken prisoner to the camp of Tavi, for none but a chief can kill a chief. But "Why?" says Tavi, "did you bring him here. My home now makes him a secred guest." Alas for Tavi! He cannot punish Tuiterai, and to cap the climax, Taurua has fallen in love.

But Tavi is generous, and surprising the lovers in tender embrace, he nobly blesses them, and gives Taurua to Tuiterai "for all time."

ESSANAY.

CHINA AND THE CHINESE (Jan. 14).—In less time than it takes to tell it we are transported to China. We are shown the Shanghai Bund from the river boat. Landing on the shore, we are taken to the race course in Shanghai by a Chinese racer in a jinriksha. Hundreds of American tourists are seen there. The first jinriksha was made in the state of Indiana. This seems strange but nevertheless true. From the race course we are taken through the streets in and around Shanghai. Next into the country we are taken, where we see a Chinaman plowing with the Carabao. Next a Chinese saw-mill. From there we are taken up the Nan Siang, where we see the natives Cormorant fishing. The steam roller in China is a funny and impressive thing to see. A large iron roller such as we may use in America on our steam roller, is used in China, but the steam is lacking. Instead about two hundred Chinamen pull this gigantic roller up and down the pavement. While strolling down the street we see Revolutionary soldiers capture a Manchu and cut his queue from his head. This is considered quite severe punishment. Along the water front we see thousands and thousands of river boats where the Chinese are born, live and die. These boats are fifteen feet long by four feet wide. At the wharfs we see the Chinese coolies at work carrying large and heavy pieces of freight. Up the Yangtse River, we see a forest of masts, where unnumbered Chinese vessels are anchored. War junks on the Wangpoo ready for immediate action are seen with colors flying. Sailing into the harbor we see an array of warships representing the world's great powers. Thousands of miles from home we realize, no matter what country we are from, that we shall be protected.

THE GIRL AT THE BROOK (Jan. 15).—Bedford Austin, bored with social life, decides to go camping. Evelyn Creyton, a society girl, persuades her father to go camping with her. One day while fishing at the brook, young Austin accidentally falls and sprains his ankle. Miss Creyton finds him unconscious and, dipping her handkerchief in the water, places it on Austin's forehead. Love at first sight makes Austin forget his aching ankle. A few days later, Austin shows Miss Creyton a ring that he prizes highly. The ring is dropped un-noticed by either of them. Miss Creyton finally discovers the ring two or three days later and writes a note, pins it on a twig of a tree and sticks it into the ground on the spot where Austin is accustomed to sit while fishing. Austin discovers the note the following morning. In it, Miss Creyton tells Austin that she has returned to the city, and if he ever comes there, to look for his ring that he lost one day at the brook, and that where he finds the ring he will find her. Austin gives instructions to his valet to pack up and return to the city immediately. A few months later, Austin attends a reception where he meets the fair Evelyn. The ring is returned to its owner and a new one placed on the engagement finger of the charming young society debutante.

THE CLOSED DOOR (Jan. 16).—Alice Williams, her brothers, John and Frank, and the gray haired father, Andrew, are in destitute circumstances, John secures a position with the Jackson Company. One day Alice comes to see Frank at the office. Jackson notices her, seeks an introduction from Frank, and the two meet. That evening, Miss Williams receives a note from Mr. Jackson in which he states that her brother had allowed him to ask her to dine with him that evening. The brothers persuade and insist that their sister accept the invitation. Later the brothers tempt her to accept money from Jackson. Finally pretty Miss Williams receives a tempting offer from Jackson to dine with him in his apartment. She innocently accepts. Later she staggers home and accuses her brothers of her downfall. Frank, the youngest son, threatens to kill Jackson. William finds a note on the library table written by Frank, which tells the terrible truth, and discovers Alice in her bedroom weeping. He is about to strike her when he realizes that after all she is his own. Walter Jackson, realizing his terrible mistake and tortured by conscience, goes to the Williams' home, begs Alice to become his wife, and she sobs out her gratitude.

WHAT GEORGE DID (Jan. 17).—Geo. Riley, the keen, clever, nonsensical office boy, buys a loaded cigar and puts it in a box of cigars on his employer's desk, Mr. Carney. Mr. Carney enters the office with Mr. Calvert. He offers Calvert a cigar and takes one himself. The one Carney tries to smoke blows up. That evening, Calvert calls at Carney's home and proposes to his daughter, Beverly. Carney, aware of the fact that Calvert is trying to induce his daughter, to marry him, orders him from the house. Returning to his office, Calvert gives his office boy, George, some money and tells him to buy some flowers and take them to his sweetheart, Beverly. George, in delivering the flowers, passes a street faker, who is selling celebrated sneeze powder. George buys some of it and scatters it over the flowers. That evening, Calvert calls on Beverly. Mr. and Mrs. Carney enter the living room where the couple are seated. Beverly shows her mother and father the beautiful flowers, which they all smell. A sneezing contest is held right then and there. Again Calvert is ordered from the house. The next day, Calvert reads an ad in the paper, stating that a certain love tablet would aid bashful lovers. He sends George after a box of them. George, the rascal, gets a box for himself, and pours half of it into the office sterilized water cooler. Calvert takes his box of love tablets and bribes the butler in the Carney home to put some of it in Miss Beverly's coffee. The butler carries out the plan to the letter, but instead of Beverly getting the coffee, her mother drinks it. Mrs. Carney becomes a love feign immediately and makes violent love to the butler. Mr. Carney sees it all, leaves the house in a huff, and goes to his office, where George gives him a glass of the "love" water. Carney following his wife's footsteps makes love to Calvert's stenographer. At this point Mrs. Carney rushes into the office, and a reconciliation is brought about. Calvert suggests that they all drink to the health of Mr. and Mrs. Carney. George pours out four glasses of wine and fixes them all with the love

Broncho Billy wins everything. Being a "game" gambler, Dupont agrees to play for anything that Broncho Billy may suggest. Broncho Bily tells him he will play for his signature on a note that he will write. Dupont agrees. Broncho Billy writes the following: "Dear Nell: I am not on the square with you. Am leaving today. A DIP INTO SOCIETY (Jan. 19).—Bumski is a pianist. He pays attention to Miss Smooth, who, in spite of his rude manners, treats him as if she were very much smitten with him. This angers her brother and he determines to end matters before they go too far. He induces Maggie, the maid of the scullery, to appear in evening finery, and introduces her to Bumski as a friend of his. Bumski immediately transfers his affections, leaving both Miss Smooth and Dawkins, the butler, who is Maggie's sweetheart, very angry. Maggie tells Bumski that she does not like him to wear his hair so long, and he promises that he will get it cut short. This he does, and the next day, minus his main stock in trade, he again visits the Smooths and asks to see Maggie. Miss Smooth, provoked, takes him to the kitchen, and there he sees Maggie as she really is. He leaves hurriedly and tries to get into Miss Smooth's good graces again, but he is rebuffed. He is ordered out of the house, and he leaves bemoaning the loss of his beautiful hair. Miss Smooth is forever cured of pianists and their temperament, while Maggie returns to her old love, the butler.

THE FAKE GAS MAN (Jan. 19).—Mrs. Pretty goes to the office of the gas company to pay her bill and to complain about the size of the bill. Freddy Barnett, who is a gay masher, sees her and follows her home. He follows her into the house, and Bridget, thinking he is the gas inspector, admits him. He tries to engage Mrs. Pretty in conversation, but Bridget drags him off to the cellar, where the meter is. She leaves him there, and Freddie, not knowing anything about a meter, sits down to enjoy a smoke. Bridget comes down and makes him go to the meter. He stands on a box to reach it, and she again goes upstairs. Freddie, in trying to balance himself on the box, takes hold of one of the pipes connected with the meter and it breaks loose from its fastenings, precipitating Freddie into a pile of coal. The gas escapes and Freddie, rendered unconscious by the fall, is nearly asphyxiated. Bridget smells the gas escaping and goes to the cellar, She locates the trouble and goes for a policeman. They carry Freddy out and revive him. Just then the real gas inspector arrives and Freddy is exposed as an impostor. The gas inspector fixes the meter, and Freddy is dragged off to jail.

VICTOR.

THE LIE (Jan. 7).—Two fellows, Charles Young and Tom Moore, are in love with Dora Blake. Charles was the choice of her mother, but hated by her father, while Tom was the man whom the father chose as a husband for his daughter. Now, Dora did not know which to decide upon, but at last decided to marry Charles, whom she had known the longest. Upon hearing of the engagement, Mr. Blake forbade Charles ever entering the house again. Knowing that he could not succeed in making Dora his wife as matters now stood, Charles wrote a note to her, asking her to elope with him and to meet him at the station the following morning. Dora was delighted and answered that she was willing to go to the end of the world with him.

The next morning she was waiting for him, when in he came, intoxicated. She never imagined such a thing of Charles. She would run back home, was her first thought, and when he informed her that he would have to go for the marriage license she was glad to have a chance to make her escape.

In the meantime, when Tom found out that he had lost all hopes of winning Dora he decided to leave the town, go out West with a friend and forget his troubles. He went to the station, and there he met Dora just as she was coming out of the station door. She calmed herself as best she could and talked along with him, not thinking how fast time was flying, so by the time she thought she must get out of the place Charles had returned with the license. Tom, seeing that Charles was intoxicated, felt sorry for Dora when she denied knowing of what Charles was talking and took her away from him.

Later Tom again pressed his suit, and was readily accepted, as by this time Dora had learned of her mistake and really loved him. All the family were now happy, and as the time for the wedding approached Mrs. Blake was glad that Dora had accepted Tom, after all.

The night before the wedding Mr. and Mrs. Blake had gone out, and the butler came in with a note to Dora. She was horrified. It was from Charles, whom she had not seen since that day at the station. Thinking that she might get him to consent to go away forever, she allows him to be shown into the room. He had been away, but had heard how she had told Tom she was innocent. He was going to stay until the day of the wedding, and then show Tom the marriage license, and also the sort of a girl he was going to marry. Too dumb with terror to speak, the words she meant to say were forgotten. When he had gone she came to a full realization as to what would happen if she did not stop him. Thinking only of her happiness, she told her butler where she was going, and immediately set out for his home. When Tom came that night he asked the butler where Dora had gone and, being told, he set out after her. Upon reaching Charles' room he witnessed a scene he would never forget—Dora pleading with Charles to destroy the license and give her her happiness. Walking into the room, he asked what it all meant. Things were explained. Charles had wronged her, but she had lied to him. Taking her by the arm, he led her from the room and took her home. She begged for forgiveness, explaining that she did it to be happy with him whom she loved, but he was hurt and, kissing her good-bye, he said, "Only a little lie—you have told me one—you will tell me others," and then he left her.

THE HYPOCRITE (Jan. 17).—The Rev. Jones and his wife awaited the arrival of their son from college with delight. Rev. Jones had a friend of his boyhood days by the name of Smythe who was a business man. Smythe was a man who loved society as did his wife. They had one daughter, Gladys who went to boarding school. She too was expected home. Gladys arrived with two friends whom the friendly Mrs. Smythe soon made comfortable.

Soon after, Tom, the minister's son arrived; his friends began to drop in and when Mr. and Mrs. Jones went out to a meeting Tom and his friends indulged in a friendly game of cards and enjoyed themselves thoroughly. How horrified were the parents when they found Tom liked "worldly things!" The Rev. Jones immediately decided that he should not enter the ministry and sent him with a letter of introduction to the house of his friend Smythe, asking him to place him in business. The Smythes were just enjoying themselves and while in the midst of the fun the butler announced that "the minister's son" had arrived. Not knowing the circumstances under which he had been sent to their home and thinking him a pious, good "little fellow," a deep gloom set over them as well as their faces. He was received in a solemn manner. He being full of fun and finding them so quiet, thought they were shy and home-loving people and immediately adopted the pious air.

One day Tom met a couple of old friends in a tavern near the Smythe home and decided that at his first opportunity he would invite them over for a good time. This opportunity soon over for a good time. This opportunity soon occurred when one night the Smythes, who were going to a dance, came down stairs in full evening dress and walked into the room where Tom was laughingly admiring a picture of a dancing girl. In an instant he put it in his pocket but not before it had been seen by Bess, one of the friends of Gladys. He immediately concocted a story which moved him to tears as well as his consolers. It was the picture of a dead school friend and he felt sad. Of course then he would not feel like attending "the Biblical lecture"—no, he felt too bad. This made the Smythes and their friends happy and they hurried off to the dance. As soon as the door had slammed, up jumped Tom, telephoned to his friend to come over and have a good time. It was while they were in the midst of their game when the Smythes came home from the party to find the butler had retired—after being pressed to do so by Tom, by means of a good tip. Upon hearing the noise in the library they opened the door and found the boys smoking and playing cards. Then the game was up. Each found that they had been "acting" and decided they would all have a good time together hereafter.

A SECRET OF THE SEA (2 reels) (Jan. 11).—Burton, a private banker, is heavily involved; financial ruin stares him in the face. Capt. Corri, has been easy prey in the hands of the wily banker, who led him into losing stock speculations.

The captain has planned to sail on what promises to be a profitable trip at an early date, only waiting for necessary funds to provision his ship. Tired of the delay he upbraids Burton, who calmly informs him of the situation and that his bank will not open the following day.

But fate intervenes in behalf of the banker and the captain. Burton has won for his promised bride, Flora Dorney. It is Flora who saves her fiance from impending ruin. She calls at the banker's office interrupting the wordy interview between Burton and the Captain. Flora has great news, she has induced Baron Mauntant, the millionaire husband of her old school chum, to deposit a large amount with Burton's bank, and the banker is to meet the millionaire and his family that evening with Flora.

The meeting takes place and Burton easily influences the millionaire to deposit the major portion of his funds and securities in his care. The Baron, who is shortly to leave Paris for a lengthy stay abroad, by a strange coincidence takes passage with Capt. Corri, of which fact Burton is informed.

Burton, elated at the possibility of regaining his losses now that he has the millionaire's funds to speculate with, conceives a means to forever gain possession of this fortune. He does not hesitate to take Capt. Corri into his confidence and propose that the Baron must meet with a fatal accident while aboard ship. The captain refuses to be a party to the conspiracy, but Burton points out it must be done or ruin will only be temporarily deferred until the Baron returns. Corri eventually realizes there is no other alternative and reluctantly consents to carry out the plot.

The vessel sails and the captain and the Baron are much in each other's company but the captain cannot bring himself to deliberately put this man out of the way. Sighting a group of rocky islands during the trip the captain has an idea. He unobserved, disables the engines of the vessel which necessitates anchoring off the island until repairs are made. During the wait he induces the Baron to visit the island and Captain Corri returns alone, reporting to the vessel's crew that the Baron accidentally fell down a bottomless ravine.

Reaching port the captain wires the news to Burton who consoles the sorrowing widow and her daughter. Burton has applied the Baron's funds to his own use and even though the millionaire is dead, his widow will some day ask for an accounting. He cultivates her friendship, neglects Flora and at the end of a year proposes marriage. The widow is evasive, promises to consider his proposal realizing that he has some ulterior motive and consults her friend Flora. Capt. Corri returns from his trip and hastens to Burton to obtain his share of the spoils but meets with disappointment as the arch villian points out that it cannot be done until after he has married the widow. The conspirators are not to meet with the success they anticipate, the sea gave up its secret. Baron Mauntant did not fall down the ravine; de was deserted by Capt. Corri and marooned upon the island, Corri was too cowardly to personally put his victim out of the way, so left him to die a lingering death. The crew of a fishing smack picked up a bottle at sea in which was found the story of the Baron's misfortune, dated over a year ago.

The authorities were quickly notified of the message and attended to the punishment of Burton and his tool in short order.

MAMMY'S CHILD (Jan 15).—Daddy who has been away for sometime, writes to Mama that he is coming home to see the new baby. Early, the new baby's sister, loves the new addition to the family, but cannot see why she is not allowed to fondle and nurse it. She makes up her mind that she will have a new baby of her own. She goes for a walk with her dolly. She meets Matty, a little colored girl, who is wheeling their new baby in a perambulator. Matty wants the big doll and Early wants the baby, so they swap babies and go on their ways contented. When Matty returns there is trouble with Black Mammy, and Early takes the white baby from its cot and puts her baby in its place. Daddy arrives and sees the black baby and there is more trouble. Daddy starts off to find the negro mother. They meet and after some complications, matters are straightened out.

THE TRAMP REPORTER (2 reels-Jan. 17).—Glenn is a reporter on the "Times." He is sent out on an assignment; but yields to temptation and attends a cocking main. He falls down on his story and is discharged. He has no money and turns tramp, going to a distant city where he obtains a situation as a reporter on the "Star." Lyman Garnett is also a reporter on the "Star," but his work is no longer brilliant and he falls under the ban. He turns in a story which is mediocre and he is given the usual two weeks notice and Glenn is hired to take his place on the staff.

Lyman has a wife and daughter, who are ambitious. He has not been saving and has no means of support other than his weekly wage. He returns home from the office the day of his discharge and finds Lucy all expectancy as she is going away to college. She shows him a few simple gowns and he groans in despair as he knows she must give up her cherished dreams. He cannot tell his family that he has been discharged on this occasion.

In the office Glenn is kind to him and the old man unbosoms himself and Glenn is much affected. Garnett again goes home and tells his wife their misfortune and she is well nigh distracted.

Glenn makes good and in a few weeks becomes the star reporter. There is a mysterious murder and the entire staff is put on the story. Reporters come in with accounts, but the city editor is violent for the reason that other papers have had the same stories and he demands a solving of the mystery. Glenn is fortunate enough to be in a locality where the murderer is pursued by a policeman and shot. The thug, dying, confesses and Glenn has a scoop, taking notes of the confession with no one present except himself and the officer. He sees a way to reinstate Lyman Garnett in the good graces of the owner and editor of the "Star." Going to a saloon he writes the notes of the confession and sends them, together with a note to Garnett, who is alone in the city room. Garnett verifies some of the facts by telephone, writes the big story, scooping all the younger and more active men and is reinstated and given a raise in salary.

Just after this, Glenn reels into the presence of the City Editor apparently drunk, without any facts in regard to the crime. He is fired on the spot and goes out. Reaching the street he stands erect, sober, and is thankful for the good deed done that the old reporter may be retained. Garnett returns home to break the glad news to his wife and the story closes with Glenn boarding a box car to hunt for another position.

NESTOR.

CUPID FINDS A WAY (Jan. 13).—Jack is broke. His last ten cents have just gone for a tip to the telegraph boy, who has handed him a message which is from a rich aunt, telling him to come and mind her house while she is away. Jack boards a fast freight and after a vigorous dusting he summons up enough courage to enter and face the supercilious looking butler. Jack must have some cash, so he approaches the butler and finds the latter is as gay a dog as he is himself, and that he is reduced to a dollar note, which Jack promptly appropriates. The butler is an incipient, frenzied financier and makes the brilliant suggestion that they rent the rooms during aunty's absence and divide the proceeds.

They do this and the household soon comprises a professor of the cornet, an opera singer and a highly respectable family of four, with the possible elimination of Louise, who makes eyes at Jack in a manner which quickly seals his doom.

The opera singer, the professor and the highly respectable family soon come to high words, resulting chiefly from high notes, and Jack and the butler have their hands full in placating the interested parties. Louise looks on and she and Jack look at each other whenever opportunity presents—and they manufacture opportunities.

A bomshell explodes. The bomb, in the form of a wire from aunty, stating that she has changed her mind and is returning home that same night. Jack and the butler see their "simoleons" vanish into thin air as they go to the various parties and offer them their money back. The offers are refused with disdain and even vulgar violence.

A woman's scheming solves the problem. A few dabs with Louise's rouge box on the butler's face, added to a few moans and groans from the butler, and a disguise and a doctor's bag for Jack, bring the roomers to the scene. Jack mildly suggests smallpox and the ensuing marathon is easily won by the professor.

Aunty returns and recognizes Louise as an old friend and she and Jack are happy, They go to town together, and as Jack leaves the butler suggests his share of the money, but Jack, with dignity, tells the butler to keep his place. The butler has common sense and does.

THE QUICKEST WAY (Jan. 15).—When Dan arrived at the ranch with his bride, he received the following letter:

"Dear Nephew—I hear you are about to get married. If you do so without my consent, I'll cut you off without a dollar. I am coming at once to investigate. Your uncle, JOHN."

Hurrying over to an adjoining ranch, he succeeds in getting his friend, Matt, whose wife was away on a visit, to come over and pose as his wife's husband, while Dan put on overalls and told his uncle upon his arrival that he was the hired man. Uncle John was delighted to see him working so well, and Matt, enjoying the joke, pretended to be making love to his bride whenever the unfortunate groom appeared. His amusement, however, was cut short upon his wife's, Millie, making an appearance and accusing Matt of his attentions to another woman—whose hair she attempted to pull. This brought the bride to tears, and both husbands had their hands full trying to pacify their angry wives. No sooner was this accomplished than Uncle John, upon learning the truth, flew into a rage, and it took the combined efforts of everyone to at last pacify the old gentleman and make him see the humor of the thing.

A WAIF OF THE DESERT (Jan. 17).—A broken-down prairie schooner comes to a full stop on the desert. The horses can go no further. A man, on the verge of exhaustion, unhitches the horses, and helping down a dying woman, who clasps a little child to her bosom, composes her as comfortably as possible, looks around hopelessly and sinks to her side.

John, a young rancher, having occasion to ride on the hills skirting the barren alkali grounds, sees the bodies, and, riding up he rescues the baby and takes it home, where his mother receives and nurtures it. They call the babe "Welcome Betsy."

Seventeen years roll happily by and John is in love with this winsome creature. Youth seeks youth, and it is but natural that Betsy shall fall before the amorous wooing of young Carl.

It takes John a long time to discover that the girl loves him as an elder brother or a father, and not as a possible husband, and his mental struggle is severe. His old mother helps in her quiet, understanding way, and a quotation from the Song of Solomon completes John's victory and he emerges a stronger man than ever. He possesses the love of the young couple, whose hands and hearts he joins together.

A FRONTIER PROVIDENCE (2 reels) (Jan. 14).—Bill French, a ranch owner, determines to press his suit with Edna. He goes to where she is drawing water and proposes. Edna refuses and Tom comes up and interferes, and there is a rough and tumble fight, in which Bill gets a bad mauling. Bill is furious. He goes to the village with ugly feelings, and insults an Indian squaw who inadvertently gets into his way. He goes into a saloon and after an altercation with an Indian chief, who wants a drink, Bill throws him out of the saloon. The old man waits for him and accosts him upon his appearance. Young Bear, the chief's son, tries to pacify his father, but the old man, goaded to madness, draws a knife and Bill shoots him.

Young Bear, now chief, determines upon vengeance and his followers are eager for war. They set out to exterminate the Pale Faces.

Tom sets out to get stock and bids Edna and her parents farewell. The latter start for town in a wagon. Tom reaches the brow of the hill, sees the Indians and dashes back to warn the Lees. The horses attached to their wagon run away and the father is thrown out and sustains a broken leg. They get him back to the cabin and Tom elects to stay and defend the old people, whilst Edna rides for assistance.

Tom barricades the doors and windows and the Indians attack. They roll rocks down upon the roof and they crash through into the cabin. Tom picks the Indians off as they come to the opening made. They throw fire brands in, which Mrs. Lee puts out with a pail of water. Young Bear gets impatient and climbs to the roof himself. Tom shoots first and the Indian falls into the room. Tom disarms him and throws him aside. The defenders have held their own and look anxiously for Edna's return with help.

Whilst all this has been going on Edna has spurred her horse until the poor beast has gone lame. Bill rides up and gloats over her misfortune. She implores him to let her have his horse in order to get assistance to rescue her people. Bill says he will help her if she will marry him. She retreats. He is adamant. She consents in despair and they ride to a Justice of the Peace and are married in haste. They secure the help of troops and ride in haste to the cabin in time to affect a rescue and to drive off the Indians.

Bill announces his marriage and Edna hangs her head, but Young Bear sees his vengeance at hand and creeps up behind Bill, and with a last effort he kills him with a knife thrust. Tom and Edna pass out hand in hand, awed by the terrible retribution.

REGIMENTAL PALS (Jan. 18).—As this subject was originally scheduled to be released on January 4, a synopsis of it was published in the issue under date of December 28, on page 1336. Its time of release has now been deferred until January 18.

THE FLOWER GIRL (Jan. 16).—Jack Rogers, a wealthy, profligate young fellow, still has honor enough to refuse to marry the snobbish young lady his socially ambitious mother has selected for him. While Jack is dining at a restaurant, a flower girl, Eleanor, comes to sell her flowers. He buys a few, and she ties them into a buttonniere. In cutting the string the knife slips and Eleanor wounds herself on the wrist. Jack bandages the cut with his handkerchief, and Eleanor, shy and happy, runs away without accepting payment for the flowers.

Jack goes home and again meets the haughty society girl who considers her money a good exchange for Jack's handsome manhood. After an angry interview with his mother, he repairs to the cafe at which the flower incident occurred. He soon proceeds to become drunk. Two of the party attempt to restrain him, but their efforts are futile. Eleanor comes again. He again buys flowers and insists on paying with bill of larger denomination than the cost of the flowers warrants. As Eleanor refuses to accept, Jack draws her to himself, and covers her face with kisses. Eleanor resents the outrage with a slap. Jack goes home, disconsolate, but a changed man. Pressed by his mother to marry her selection, he decides to leave the house and go away for a while. He calls the valet to have his clothes pressed, and in going through the pockets of one of his suits, he comes across the rose which Eleanor had given him, crushed and broken. The rose brings back the memory of the beautiful face and he resolves to stay in the city, find Eleanor, and make reparation for the insult by asking her to be his wife. He meets Frank, Eleanor's brother, weeping in front of a shoe store because the salesman would not give him an expensive pair of slippers for mamma in exchange for a few pennies. Jack buys the much desired slippers and a pair of new boots for the boy. Frank insists on bringing Jack to his home and introducing him to his mother and sister. Jack follows Frank to the little hovel and there meets Eleanor. He apologizes to her for his caddish act, and touched by his sincerity, her old interest revives. She says yes to the question, and he takes her home. The mother, indignant, when she hears from the astonished butler that her son is arriving with a strange woman, strikes a haughty attitude. As the two enter the room, the mother sees the clean light in the girl's face, and she takes her to her arms.

HE NEVER KNEW (Jan. 19).—Mr. Wharton's business compelled him to make frequent visits out of town, causing him to neglect his wife unintentionally. His wife is unable to appreciate the true reason for her husband's neglect. She allows herself to believe that he has ceased to love her, which causes her to become despondent, in spite of the fact that her daughter Lois, a girl of seventeen, is with her to cheer her. Lois and Billy Jones, a rich young man, who is a frequent caller at the Wharton's, are in love with each other.

Mr. Wharton meets Mr. Blair, an acquaintance from the East, whom he invites to his home. Mr. Blair makes his temporary home in the same town where the Wharton's live, and becomes a frequent caller at the Wharton's home, being greatly attracted by Mrs. Wharton's charms. The great love that Blair professes for her wins over Mrs. Wharton and when her husband telegraphs that he will remain out of town for a long time, she reaches a decision. She writes Blair a note, telling him that she cannot remain any longer with her husband and that she consents to go away with him.

Lois and Billy decide to tell the mother of their love affair, which they have kept a secret, and ask her consent to their being married. The mother, on learning of her daughter's wish to get married, is brought to realize the step she is about to take. She thinks of the disgrace it would bring to her daughter. She considers her daughter's future and decides to break her promise with Blair. She nevertheless gives her consent to the engagement of Billy and Lois.

Mr. Blair arrives at the appointed time, only to meet with a refusal from Mrs. Wharton to go with him. He declares he will place the note she has written him in her husband's hands, if she refuses to keep her promise. Billy, coming upon the couple unawares, overhears the conversation between them. After Blair leaves Billy informs Mrs. Wharton that what he has heard shall never be repeated.

A tramp sees Blair placing the letter in his wallet. As he is leaving the grounds the tramp encounters Billy, who is coming to Blair's house in hopes of getting the letter. Billy struggles with the tramp, getting possession of the wallet. In the meantime, Blair, having discovered the absence of the wallet, searches for it. Hearing the commotion on the lawn, he comes out of the house as the gardeners bring the tramp forward. They are explaining about the capture as Billy comes up. Billy returns the wallet to Blair, who is relieved to get it back so easily. After Billy and the gardeners have taken the tramp away, Blair finds that the letter is not in the wallet. He is unable to find it.

Billy returns the letter to Mrs. Wharton. While the affair at Blair's is taking place, Mrs. Wharton receives a telegram from her husband stating his great luck in putting his business deal over, and proposing a trip abroad. Blair calls to get Mrs. Wharton's final answer. She informs him that she has the letter in her possession. Blair seeing that it is useless to try to advance any arguments, takes his leave of Mrs. Wharton forever. Mr. Wharton arrives home and is welcomed by his wife, who is secretly joyous in the belief that the step she was about to take had been providentially averted and that her husband never knew about it.

A BLUE GRASS ROMANCE (Jan. 15).—Judge Breckenridge and his wife, his daughter, Alma, and his son, Robert, are living together in 1861. Robert is expelled from a military academy on account of his intemperance, and comes home. The judge is very angry. Robert's habits do not improve, as he falls in with bad companions. The war breaks out and the town grows mad, waving flags and marching around. Recruits are called for, and Judge Breckenridge is elected an officer. Robert attempts to enlist, but his application is refused, as he is slightly inebriated at the time. Sullen and angry, Robert goes to a saloon, where he meets Lieut. Burr, a Federal secret service man, in disguise. Burr makes himself agreeable and the two become friends. Late at night Robert goes home and endeavors to sneak into the house. The judge awakens and, finding Robert in an intoxicated condition, again orders him away and disowns him. The next day Burr meets Robert and persuades him to accept a commission in the government secret service, and following the plan outlined, Robert goes to another Confederate post and enlists.

Scenes of battle are shown, with thrilling encounters between the two armies. Robert manages to keep in communication with Burr, and it is arranged to lure the Confederates into an ambush. Robert receives a letter from his mother, as follows: "My Dear Son:—Was so thankful to hear from you. Your father joined the Fifth Virginia and is somewhere in your locality. He will be proud when he knows that you are fighting for the cause. God guard you and bring you safely back to me. With greatest love. Mother."

The darkies are singing "My Old Kentucky Home," and as the strains of the music from the banjos come to his ears Robert's thoughts are wafted back to his home. In a tremendous conflict of emotions he has a revulsion of feeling and decides not to betray the South. Accordingly he sends a false dispatch to Burr, telling him that the rebels will attack Benton Bridge that night, but to disregard it, as it is a ruse to distract attention from the enemy's left, which they intend to storm in full force. Burr therefore protects the left wing of the Union army, and the Confederates attack in full force, sweeping away the right wing and falling on the left and defeating it. During the thrilling battle Robert is wounded, and in undressing him the messages from Burr are found. He is arrested as a spy, and a dramatic scene takes place as his father, in charge of the courtmartial, finds that he is to judge his own son. Robert is convicted and sentenced to be shot, meeting his death without fear.

The war ends. Some years afterward Judge Breckenridge and his wife are seen in their home. While reading the paper the judge comes to the following item:

"SUPPOSED SOUTHERN TRAITOR REALLY A HERO."

"A remarkable instance of wartime has just come to light through a statement made by Lieut. Burr, U. S. A. Secret Service, during the war. It seems that Robert Breckenridge, the son of Judge Breckenridge of Blairsville, Ky., was not the traitor he has been pictured, but was really a Southern hero, as it was through his loyalty and strategy that the South won the battle of Blairsville."

THE LITTLE TURNCOAT (2 reels Jan. 17).—Violet Gordon, a southern girl, has a brother, Capt. Gordon, in the confederate army. The vicinity of his home is converted into a battle ground, which devastates everything, and the Capt. risks his life to visit and comfort his sister, who, as well as himself, is mourning the death of their father, Gen. Gordon, who is shown sacrificing his life for the flag.

The house is surrounded by Union soldiers under the command of Col. James, who falls in love with Violet. In searching the house Hart goes to plunge his sword in a clothes basket, in which Capt. Gordon is hiding, and Violet stops his uplifted arm, and the silent plea of her eyes moves James to say nothing of his suspicions, though she passes off her action with a light remark asking him not to spoil her best clothes.

Col. James goes on, and on the eve of a big battle sends her a note saying that she must not think him a traitor, but that he did it for her sake. She understands, and answers with an acknowledgment of her gratitude. Her letter is intercepted by her brother who does not know it is addressed to the man who saved his life, and a trap is laid for the Colonel by adding a postscript asking him to call.

James is captured and temporarily imprisoned in a barn. Violet determines to save him, and while her brother is asleep she dons one of his uniforms, and with her hat pulled down to shade her face, manages, that night, to secure entrance to the barn. A dramatic meeting takes place, as he accuses her of having betrayed him, but she finally makes him believe her innocence in the plot. She makes him put on her brother's coat and hat, and he departs, passing the unsuspecting sentry.

Col. James rejoins his regiment, which is plunged in battle. Capt. Gordon misses his sister and searches frantically for her, and when he finally finds her, a prisoner in the barn, and learns why she played the part of "a turncoat" he forgives her.

KEYSTONE.

THE CURE THAT FAILED (Jan. 13).—George is addicted to the flowing cup, and his friends all try to reform him. His intentions are good, but his will is weak and he cannot resist the companionship of bibulous friends. Drastic measures are resorted to, to cure him. One of his friends dresses as a woman, who presents a fierce aspect. When George awakens he is told that while under the influence of liquor he has married his woman, and she proceeds to assert herself. George is in a terrible mental state, but finally he sees the shoe of the "woman" who has forgotten to change those pedal protectors, and the scheme dawns upon him. He decides to turn the tables upon the jokers, and stepping into an adjoining room he smears his shirt with red ink and discharges a revolver, and lies still with the gun clutched in his hand. The police and neighbors rush in, and he feigns death. The party is arrested, and after they have departed George gets up, runs around the block and heads them off. Their consternation when they behold the "corpse" laughing at them is mirth-provoking.

HOW HIRAM WON OUT (Jan. 13).—Hiram, a country youth, is in love with Sallie. They go fishing and Sallie falls into the water. Hiram cannot swim, so he runs to the road and stops an automobile, driven by Alfred, a city chap. The latter rescues Sallie, and she feels grateful to him. His attentions to Sallie are not displeasing, and Hiram becomes insanely jealous. He tries to scare her by faking an attempt at suicide by hanging, but Alfred sees through the joke and pulls the rope until Hiram begs for mercy. In revenge he gets a dummy woman from a clothing store, and makes love to her. Alfred sees him and calls Sallie, and when they pounce down on him the laugh is on Alfred. Sallie's sense of humor is touched, and she forgives Hiram for failing to plunge into the water to save her.

RELIANCE.

DUTY AND THE MAN (Two Reels—Jan. 1).—Inspector MacGregor is in love with Jess, who is engaged to Jim Hackett, a quarryman. Knowing his case is hopeless, the inspector wishes her happiness, and at her wedding writes the following inscription in her autograph album: "Follow your conscience, whatever you do; both God and man will reward you in the end." Another admirer of Jess, a rich man named Hodges, shows in many ways that he also loves the pretty bride, who shrinks from his insinuating admiration.

About a year later Inspector MacGregor receives word that Jim Hackett made an attempt to kill his employer, Hodges. Jess comes to MacGregor and pleads with him to release her husband. Despite this, MacGregor sends Philip Steele, a young officer, to bring Jim to jail. Jess sees Philip Steele leave, and suddenly conceives an idea whereby she may be able to save her husband. She attracts Steele's attention by pretending her horse is lame, and as she leads him on he finds himself caught by three men, who gag and bind him. He is carried into a cabin and placed in a large box, which has holes cut out for him to look through. While in this box he is taken to Hodges' home, where he hears the men explaining that the box contains maps.

Jess soon enters the room. Philip, from inside the box, can see her plainly. He sees Hodges trying to make love to her, and hears Jess furiously denouncing him. He listens, and for his benefit Jess tells the story of why her husband attacked Hodges. She explains how Hodges gave her husband work in his quarry, and then came to her cabin to make love to her, knowing her husband to be away; how Jim came home one day to see her struggling in Hodges' arms and, unable to restrain himself, he rushed upon Hodges, injuring him. For this he was put into prison. As she finishes her story Hodges laughs and tries to take her into his arms. In the struggle his gun goes off and he is killed.

Jess releases Philip Steele, who finds Hodges dead. Steele does not know what to do, and while undecided an orderly rides up to him and hands him the "Follow your conscience" slip torn from Jess' album. He sees that this was signed by MacGregor and thinks it came from him. Following his conscience, he decides to help Jim and Jess escape over the boundary line. Taking off his uniform, he dons an old suit. With his gun he holds up the guard at the station in which Jim is held. He gets Jim out and, taking off his mask, discloses his identity. He gives the young couple money and sees them safely on their way. Next day he returns to MacGregor. When the inspector asks, "Did you bring back your man?" he shows him the "Follow your conscience" slip, and MacGregor understands the brave fight Jess made for her husband's freedom.

A JOLLY GOOD FELLOW (Jan. 4).—Jack and his twin sister, Jacqueline, are good pals and the girl is as able a sportsman as her brother. He comes home to spend the holidays and the girl is overjoyed. They plan a hunting expedition. But an invitation arrives from Jim Clark inviting Jack to a house party, and to Jacqueline's dismay he decides to go. At the last moment a wire from his father calls him to town. Jacqueline, left alone, gets an idea. She will impersonate a friend of Jack's and attend the party. She wires ahead informing them that Will Graham, a jolly good fellow, is on his way to join the party. She signs the telegram "Jack." She borrows Jack's clothes and sets off. She takes a room at the hotel and later goes down to the party where the supposed "boy" is received cordially. Lois, to whom Jack is devoted, is a trifle disappointed but finds the stranger good company. Will Graham proves a master hand at tennis and a capital shot. He puts all the other gentlemen of the party to shame.

In the meantime Jack and his father arrive home. Jack misses his clothes and realizes what Jacqueline must have done. He tells his father and they start after her. They arrive at the hotel and find her name on the register. Shown into her room they find young Jim Clark holding a boy's wig in his hand. The door to the other room is locked and Jacqueline evidently inside.

The case is explained to Jim who is relieved at the explanation. Jacqueline is brought out and after many invitations from Jim, consents to remain at the party with her father and brother.

And the Jolly Good Fellow and Jim soon become as inseperable as Jack and Lois.

THE GIRL AND THE INVENTOR (Jan. 8).—Young Tom Lawson in his little hallroom perfects his invention to reduce the great cost of electricity. He goes to the millionaire head of a big concern, but this man has no faith in the invention and Tom is turned away. The head of the factory, however, hears Tom's explanation and realizes at once the worth of the invention. As Tom leaves the house the millionaire's daughter, Alice, expresses her belief in him and offers him money on his invention. This he refuses. Later Tom is put out of his room by an irate landlayd who also appropriates all his belongings including the invention. The manager calls to see him and hearing that he has been put out he rents his room and finds the patent which he steals and places before a rival concern. Tom gets a job in the modelling room of his company and to his intense surprise sees his invention and also the manager.

Realizing the truth he rushes to the millionaire and explains. Alice takes him in her car to his boarding house where they find the invention gone. Tom is in despair until he remembers some blue prints thrown carelessly on a shelf. With these secured he feels safe. They go back to the factory and Tom accuses the manager who, of course, denies his guilt, claiming the invention as his own. Tom smashes it and then defies him to produce another. Of course, he is helpless and then Tom produces his blue prints. The rival concerns see the value of the invention and get together to produce it. Tom turns to the girl who had helped him all through, and as he bends over her hand the father sees the hint of a possible romance.

THANHOUSER.

A GUILTY CONSCIENCE (Jan. 5).—A widow who believed she was well off was surprised on learning from her trustees that her property had practically vanished. She consulted eminent lawyers, but had so muddled up affairs, signing anything and everything handed her that the legal lights were compelled to report that she had no chance of recovering anything. They believed she had been the victim of sharp practice, but regretfully feared that she could not prove it.

The daughter had a sweetheart, not a lawyer, but a keen, shrewd business man. When he heard the story of the woman's loss, he determined to recover her money. It could not be done legally, the lawyers said: the young man was too honest to commit a crime, but he figured that by properly utilizing fear he might force restitution.

The young man's theory was that every one has secrets, and he was certain that an individual who would rob a defenseless woman must have committed other crimes. He first sent the man an anonymous letter of warning, and it worked like a charm. The recipient was convinced his sin had found him out, although he was not clear as to which sin it was. Later he received telephone warning that the police were on his track and with his own eyes saw a minion of the law approach his door. Terrified he gladly accepted the offer of his unknown friends to flee, and was led to a place of safety, a deserted cottage in the woods. By this time the criminal was convinced that his condition was serious and gladly accepted the suggestion of compromise made by the unknown.

So the widow, whom the law would not aid, regained her fortune and the man who would have robbed her fled in terror on a freight train to seek in some place where he was not known.

THE BOOMERANG (Jan. 7).—A dying man confided his little daughter and his fortune to his only relative, a brother. The brother lived in good style, but no one knew that because of reckless speculation he was skating on the edge of financial ruin. He accepted the trust imposed upon him, and really meant to keep it, but a time came when he needed securities to bolster up a stock deal. Quieting his conscience by swearing he would make it good some day he used the gilt edged stocks and bonds of his ward, replacing them with wildcat securities of his own.

The years passed on, and the girl grew up in the belief that she was penniless and owed everything to the generosity of her uncle. He grew prematurely old and suffered from remorse. Finally when, as he believed the dead appeared and reproached him, he wrote out a full confession, and started to go upstairs, meaning to hand it to the girl, for he did not dare to confess face to face. He was very weak and staggered against the piano in the drawing room as he made his way painfully toward the door. The confession fell into the piano as the writer toppled over to the floor dead.

The widow grudgingly gave a home to her neice, but made her life miserable. One day while the woman was in the drawing room admiring a new piece of jewelry, she was summoned to the telephone in the library. She dropped the jewel on the table, and when she returned her niece was there and the jewel had disappeared. No one but the niece had been in the room, consequently the woman argued, she was the thief, and the gem was on her person or concealed in the apartment. Caring nothing for the disgrace she was bringing upon her own kinswoman the widow summoned the police, and the place was carefully searched. They did not find the jewel, but the confession of her husband's misdeed came to light and the drudge received the fortune that was rightfully hers. No human being stole the jewel. That was developed later.

THE EVIDENCE OF THE FILM (Jan. 10).—A girl who worked in the joining room of a motion picture factory had a little brother, of whom she was very fond. He visited the plant one day, and saw from "the inside" how pictures were made.

The youngster was a messenger boy, and later was summoned to the office of a broker, and given a package which he was to deliver to a rich woman up town. The woman received the package herself, opened it in his presence, but found only bits of blank paper, instead of the bonds she had expected. At first she suspected the broker, but he clearly proved that, in the presence of two witnesses, he had placed the bonds in an envelope, and carefully sealed them up. The messenger boy protested his innocence, but the woman and the broker both insisted the he be prosecuted, and the weeping child was locked in a cell. His sister pleaded with his accuser, but in vain, and for several days the case against the boy was dark.

One morning while joining film the girl happened to glance with extra care at one scene. She thought she recognized her brother, and close examination under a microscope proved to her she was correct.

With a cry of joy she rushed to the police station and told the officers in charge she had important evidence. Two detectives accompanied her back to the plant, and saw a scene of a play thrown upon the screen. It revealed the messenger boy, a package in his hand, coming around the corner, whistling merrily. A man close behind him ran into and upset the child, deftly substituted a package he held, for the one the boy had dropped, and then walking down the street, so rapidly that he did not notice the camera.

"Don't you know that man?" screamed the girl. "He is the broker who had my brother sent to prison."

The broker was arrested, and when the evidence of the film was displayed to him, he broke down and confessed. He had hoped by throwing the blame upon the boy to keep the bonds for himself. A long term in prison was his punishment, while the plucky girl was warmly complimented for the shrewd way in which she cleared her little brother.

THE CITY MOUSE (Jan. 12).—There was great excitement in a little farming village when the daughter of the best known resident returned from the great city. She was dressed in the height of fashion, sported a poodle dog and a lorgnette, and, all in all, was an object of interest. The local paper chronicled her arrival and added that she filled a position of great importance with a big mercantile firm in New York.

The young woman made only a brief stay, but won the hearts of nearly all the rural swains. Hopefully they showered presents upon her, vainly they proposed to her. In fact there was genuine grief when she went away, and another truthful news item informed its readers that the girl was engaged to "a prominent public official of New York." The girl went back to the city leaving aching hearts behind her. There she "resumed her position of great importance" which it might be explained was that of saleswoman in a department store. The fine clothing which delighted her country friends was returned to its owners, for the girl had practically been dressed by a syndicate of friends.

It must be admitted, however, that the rural paper told the truth concerning the "prominent public official." A man answering that description did love her, and in due time they were married, but there are many kind of public officials.

THE TINIEST OF STARS (Jan. 14).—When a member of a theatrical orchestra went "on the road," he left behind him in a big city his wife, their little boy and their baby girl. For some weeks he sent them money regularly, then all word from him ceased. The wife on inquiry learned that the company had disbanded in a western city, and the members of it were presumably making their way East the best they could. The woman was sickly, and practically unable to work, but her little son proved to be an energetic bread winner, secured free board by aiding his mother to do the work of a Janitor, and at odd times sold newspapers. He always had his eye out for a chance to make money and one day determined that little sister was in a position to help them. A local theater advertised "Amateur Night" with a cash prize for the winner, and the boy saw no reason why the little girl should not bring the money home to mother. She was little, and cute and could recite, therefore why should any one doubt her success.

"Amateur Night" was a night of triumph for the little girl and the brother who believed in her. The other contestants were outclassed, while the audience rapturously greeted the baby girl who smiled at them so sweetly and lisped out a few words with a confident air. Even the members of the orchestra, ordinarily the most stolid of individuals, enjoyed her performance. One in particular, the first violin, was deeply affected. It was his first night at the theater, and he was overcome with emotion, when he recognized in the tiniest of stars his little girl whom he had so vainly sought. There was a joyous reunion in the wings of the theater, and a proud little girl went home to tell her mother that "I got papa and some shiny money for being a good girl." It is needless to say that with the father's return their troubles of the family ceased, and the little girl was never again called upon to be leading lady on an amateur night.

AMERICAN.

THEIR MASTERPIECE (Jan. 13).—Absorbed in his painting, Robert Gainsworthy neglects his beautiful wife—not intentionally—but rather in the pre-occupied way of a man who did not want the single train of thought broken. He worked for days in his studio without ever speaking to her and the strain told on their relations for the wife brooded bitterly.

Jack Sanders, a globe-trotting cousin of Robert, visited at the Gainsworthy home. He took many strolls with the heart-sick wife and found himself madly infatuated. Sunken deeper and deeper into the fervor of his work, the artist did not see. One day, while rising in his studio, he surveyed the picture and found the face wanting. Looking from the window, he saw the wife and the cousin idly strolling arm in arm. He conceived a plan. He would accuse her of unfaithfulness, study quickly the horrified expression on her face, and paint that expression into the woman of his canvas. He did so and worked many hours feverishly.

Stung to the quick, the innocent wife fell easy prey to the machination of the scheming cousin. The latter proposed that she write a note of farewell and fly with him temporarily until the husband should come to himself. She fell into the trap easily.

Arising from his canvas, the artist knew that his fame was made. He thought of his wife for the first time and started to go to her. He found the note, the world opened before his feet, the pleasure of his success turned to bitterness. And then the cousin proved unworthy of his trust and the artist again reclaimed his wife, both happily in a new and better understanding.

THE AWAKENING (Jan. 16).—Alone in the mountains the girl held the still warm hand of her dead mother. She awoke and the hand was cold and clammy. She fled, frantically in a fearful terror or the cold moist hand of death.

The Good Man of the mountains met her and took her to his home where he sheltered her from evil. She grew fascinated with this wonderful being, and he, on the other hand, found himself madly loving this waif of the hills. They played together like children and the girl was supremely happy.

One day he good naturedly placed her up an extending limb of a tree and left her, and the ban man, wandering through the hills, found her. He told her of the pretty places of life and civilization and went with her to the good man's cabin. Instantly, in the most primitive minds grew antagonism. They decided to leave decision to her and she chose the pretty places and the bad man. He took her away with him and the good man grieved.

Then he bad man kissed her and awoke strange sensations. She did not like this and suddenly before her, stretched the warning, clammy hand of her dead mother.

Alone in his cabin, the good man grieved and repented. Then he followed in a mad endeavor to recover her. The bad man, anticipating pursuit, placed a pitfall for him, but into this he himself tumbled madly, and the girl, escaping from the clutch of the bad man, fled before him. Thus they met the second time, the girl and the good man, and in the answering light of the other's eyes found an explanation for their happiness.

HIS OLD-FASHIONED MOTHER (Jan. 18).—Mrs. Whitman and son James reside in a small town and their circumstances are very poor. The one desire of James' life is to become a physician, but the funds are not present to pay for the education. Determining to do his best to gain his ambition, he writes a letter to the Fenway Medical College, offering his services for the education. He receives a reply and goes to the college, leaving his old mother in the old home. Six years pass and the old mother hears nothing from her son, until one day a letter arrives telling her of his big success and of his coming marriage to the dearest girl.

The mother decides to give her son a pleasant surprise and starts for the city. On her arrival there, she is unsuccessful in her search and becomes discouraged. She goes into the park to rest, as a young lady and her maid are strolling through the park. They see this old lady and go to see if they can assist her. The old lady tells them she is looking for her son, and shows them the letter. Mabel is surprised as from the letter she learns of the mother of her fiancee, whom she thought dead. Mabel bids her to cheer up as she will find her son for her, and takes her to her own home. In the evening James comes home, and on entering he attempts to caress Mabel. She stops him saying, "I don't think I can marry a man who is ashamed of his mother." Then she turns and calls the mother in. She runs to James who takes her in his arms and decides to go, saying, "If I can't have you I can have my mother." Mabel stops him saying, "Your mother shall be my mother."

THE WALNUT INDUSTRY (Jan. 18).—The cultivation of the walnut tree has assumed very large proportions and the norman growth of an acre represents an unusual income of about $300.00. This series shows the modern methods in vogue in the groves in California and is comprehensive in all departments.

PUNCH.

TOM, DICK AND HARRY (Jan. 23).—Mlle. De Loir, a pretty actress, has her jewels stolen out of her dressing room in some unaccountable manner. She cannot be consoled until her maid suggests they send for Tom, Dick and Harry, three famous detectives who have never gone astray on any case.

The three arrive with numerous disguises and make-ups and get to work at once digging out clues and asking questions. Little Tom finds the foot prints of a rat in the talcum powder on the actress's dressing table. He needs no further clue.—I will disguise myself as a cat and catch the thief! Donning the paraphernalia of a cat he watches at a hole in the floor until he sees the guity rat going through. He follows it to its home and there sure enough are the missing jewels. Gathering them up he seeks his confreres and together they wait upon Mlle. De Loir and present her with her gems, restored through the sagacity and intelligence of those past masters of the detective's art—Tom, Dick and Harry.

MAJESTIC.

THE LITTLE ENCHANTRESS (Jan. 5).—Old Mr. Merton and his cross servant live together in a big mansion. Their chief annoyance is the children who play about the stoop and disturb them. Little Dolly Deane, left alone by the death of her father, wanders out into the world and finds her way to Merton's home. When the servant attempts to put her off the stoop, she runs through the open door straight into Merton's arms. She says she is hungry and out of pity they give her some dinner. But she shows no inclination to go and falls asleep on the couch.

The sight of the little sleeping child touches a tender chord somewhere in the crusty old bachelor's heart. He decides to slip out and buy her some toys. He meets his servant at the stoop and the two old men laugh at the joke on each other.

While they are gone the child wakes up and wanders downstairs. A burglar, entering the deserted house meets the little one who trusts him implicitly, and never dreams of such a thing as being afraid of him. He calls to mind his own baby, long dead, and he sets about to amuse her, innocent of robbing the place.

When Merton returns he sees the burglar, and understands that he, too, has fallen under the Baby's spell. He has a talk with him, and makes him promise to live a straight life. The man gives his word, and leaves the house without his tools.

The child, tired out after her day, falls asleep again and Merton and the servant creep in and draw the coverlet softly over her.

THE HUNDRED DOLLAR BILL (Jan. 7).—Luigi starts forth from his humble home to find work. He has a sick baby and there is no money in the house for food or medicine. He helps a swell young fellow who has been drinking too much, into a taxi, and is rewarded with a bill. When Luigi looks at it, he sees it is a hundred dollars. He runs after the taxi, but cannot catch up with it. Deciding that he might as well use it, so long as he has it, he takes it to the grocery store. But the clerk is immediately suspicious, and refuses to have anything to do with the hundred dollar bill. Luigi tries the baker, the butcher and finally the drug store. But no one will touch the money; they are all afraid of it.

Returning home, in as bad a predicament as ever, he finds his baby worse and rushes out for the charity doctor, who after looking the child over, gives Luigi a prescription and tells him to have it filled at once. The drug clerk not only refuses to change the bill, but he calls a policeman and is about to have Luigi arrested when the young man who was drunk the day before, comes along and recognizes Luigi, and the hundred dollar bill. He tells them the money is good and offers to change it. Luigi, with medicine and a basket of food, rushes home and shows his wife all the money he has left out of the hundred dollar bill.

TO HELLAND BACK (Jan. 7).—Artie Artichoke realizes that in the midst of life we are in debt. In the cafe, although he would simply love to pay for his canary-eyebrow salad, he finds that he is broke. The proprietor has a few kind words to say, and Artie is in a fair way to spend the rest of his days in jail. Just then who should pop along but little Red Riding Hood Mephistopheles, a devil of a fellow. He makes a perfectly good bargain with Artie, who writes a contract as follows: "Received from A. Lucifer Match $20.00, rent of my soul for one hour. I herewith guarantee said soul to be in perfectly good working order, of fast color and guaranteed not to shrink." Mephisto, escorts Artie to a "helluva" place and Artie has a "helluva" time. The devils there are acrobatic and they put Artie through a thirty-third degree hazing. Artie admits that they are merry cut-ups and says that if they are doing the tricks for his pleasure, they can take a day off and change their act. After having been mauled until his patience is sadly frayed, the hour is up and Artie is wafted back to the cafe. It was all a Welsh Rarebit dream.

Harry Templeton's tutor, a woman hater, decides to keep a watchful eye upon the feminine intruders, but despite his efforts cupid manages to make his presence felt in the household in no light manner. His stinging darts go flying at random, and strike every heart with the exception of that of the tutor, whose lot it is, when after many amusing incidents the lovers have decided to take the step, to fetch the parson and witness a large number of marriages. ### ATLAS.

FROM SING SING TO LIBERTY—An eccentric old millionaire has hid himself in humble apartments with no attendants except a valet. One of his peculiarities is a desire to use his large fortune in helping his fellow man, though continually possessed with the delusion that everyone is after his money. He is finally coerced by two deacons of the church to will his great fortune to the establishment of an Institute to perpetuate his name, and themselves to be appointed executors and trustees and have the handling of this vast sum of money. After signing the will as drawn by his attorney, he has a fainting attack, to which he is a victim, due to a weak heart, and his valet revives him as has been customary by pouring spirits of camphor on a towel and holding before his nostrils. These attacks bring on a terrible headache which an application of chloroform relieves.

One day, while being wheeled around the avenue by his valet he has a very narrow escape from an automobile, being saved from injury by the quickness of mind of a plodding young lawyer, whom he afterward invites to his apartment. The lawyer being unsuccessful and nearly impoverished accepts the invitation and later rues the fact.

The persistent importunities of the two deacons that he put aside a small sum for them to use while working on the plans for the institute so angers him that he tears up the will and orders them from his sight, and when the young lawyer calls later he executes a new will making the lawyer the executor of his wishes and cutting down the institute's share to a small sum, naming others as trustees. He also gives the young lawyer a check for a large sum of money with instructions to bring the money to the house the following evening when he will instruct him how to dispose of it.

During the absence of the valet on a few hours visit to an ailing relative the old millionaire is taken wth one of his fainting fits and in trying to get the spirits of camphor to stave off the attack he accidentally gets the chloroform and kills himself. The valet is arrested and worn to a nervous wreck by the third degree, when offered his liberty and a large sum of money confesses that he murdered his master at the instigation of the young lawyer, who is arrested at the bank while attempting to cash the check given him the night before. The lawyer is tried and found guilty while the valet is turned adrift on the world with his ill gotten money, though the stress of it all has turned his mind and he is almost an imbecile shunned and shunning mankind.

A reporter on one of the large dailies interests himself in the case and finds undoubted testimony that the Lawyer is innocent, but while on his way to present his evidence is run into by an automobile and rendered insane from the shock.

Some time after the reporter is restored to his senses by an operation and presenting his evidence to the Governor succeeds in securing pardon for the young lawyer.

AS A SOUVENIR, OUR PHOTOPLAYERS PHOTOGRAPH POST CARDS are of such fine quality that the public are enthused into making complete and uniform collections of all the PLAYERS. We learn from many exhibitors that their patrons look forward to souvenir nights. ## WE DENY THE ALLEGATION AND SCORN THE "ALLIGATOR."

Very often we hear the remark made that it is a waste of money to buy a high-priced screen, without stating one solid, business reason, or offering some sort of an argument to substantiate their claims—they insist that their ideas are absolutely correct.

To us these parties are huge jokes, measured from the standpoint of a successful exhibitor; they can be quite easily "whipped" by any live, energetic competitor, because they have permitted their own foolish notions to get the upper hand. They attempt to force them on their patrons who know only too well what they want and like.

Mr. Exhibitor, if you hope to mount the ladder of success we ask you not to drop into this rut. From one end of America to the other today are beautiful theatres, standing as monuments to the good sound judgment of live, ambitious managers, who have installed the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN in their theatres. They know only too well that it exclusively shows MOVING PAINTINGS.

Our screen is guaranteed, not only paper, but by actual performance, and a vast number of users of our screen will today testify gratefully to the service rendered them.

THE THANHOUSER THREE-A-WEEK

The Commuter's Cat — and — A Few Million Birds

A fine split reel, the main feature of which is a very funny story based on a commuter's desire to get rid of an unwelcome parcel, which persists in sticking to him, and on an exchange of bundles on the train. A few flying things are shown in the closing subject.

(Released Tuesday, Jan. 21st)

The Girl Detective's Ruse

A stirring tale of a pretty sleuth's adventures among the counterfeiters. It is our best effort yet in the detective story line. It doesn't feature gun-play so much as mind-play. You see the clever brain of the girl detective extricating her from difficulties and dangers.

(Released Friday, Jan. 24th)

Her Fireman

is a brave proposition, who hesitates not to risk his life when he finds the life of her protege-from-the-streets in danger. And it is not an ordinary rescue scene. Everything about the picture, every scene in it, is away from the ordinary "fire film" with the made-to-order rescue situation. And it grips you in proportion.

Facts and Comments

FROM time to time exhibitors are approached by advertising concerns with a proposal to sell them the advertising space on their screens. Some of these propositions may be all right, some look dubious, and all of them will bear close scrutiny. We have recently seen a circular sent out by a New York slide making concern urging exhibitors to have advertising slides made at their own expense. In order to encourage the exhibitor to order such slides he receives just about the same time an offer to exhibit certain advertising slides. The pure philanthropy of the scheme is of course apparent to most exhibitors and they consign both offers to the waste-basket. The screen in the motion picture theater is pretty valuable advertising space, and as a rule it is most valuable to the exhibitor himself. He has announcements to make to his patrons all the time and by means of the screen he is sure of their immediate, close and undivided attention. If he decides to share the benefits of the screen with other advertisers he ought to get as good a rate as the average newspaper, and he ought to be very careful in controlling the character of the advertisements. As a rule patrons do not care for advertising slides—they come to see the pictures.

BOX office statements are always interesting and often curious and significant. Wherever great feature films have been exhibited as substitutes for regular theatrical attractions the statement of the receipts has invariably shown that the higher priced seats sold best. Sometimes managers were a little timid about fixing prices at the regular theatrical schedule and made a bid for the support of "picture" patrons by going below their ordinary prices for galleries and balcony. The results generally proved the timidity of the managers to have been ill-founded. The sale of the unreserved "hard" tickets did not at all come up to expectations, while the more expensive seats sold easily. A number of conclusions may be drawn from this fact, but one seems to stand out as self-evident. The best classes of theater-goers are ready to patronize real features properly put on and are not disposed to haggle about prices. The public are quite able to discriminate between "pictures" and "special features," especially if the latter are properly advertised and fittingly presented.

Curiously enough some of the features of conceded extraordinary merit, such as Dante's Inferno or The Odyssey, etc., are often offered to exhibitors who are unable to understand them. They cannot even estimate their drawing power. This comes of the process of transition in the personnel of exhibitors. There is, of course, far more intelligence and knowledge and experience in the average exhibitor to-day than could have been found six or seven years ago, but the non-progressive kind is by no means extinct. Many humorous incidents are current in the talk and gossip of feature men. One exhibitor in the interior of Pennsylvania insisted on popular songs by a local girl singer as a means of enhancing the merits of a presentation of Dante's Inferno. The result was that between portrayals of the agonies of lost souls the patrons heard such felicitous selections as "Everybody's Doing It," "Alexander's Ragtime Band," and "Moonlight Bay." Another exhibitor declined to book "The Odyssey," because his people "positively did not care about religious pictures." A film exchange is actually advertising "The Odyssey" as "The Fall of Greece." Two spectators at an electric theater in the Northwest having seen "Camille" advertised in their town attended the show and came away disappointed because there had not been a single camel in the whole show. It would be foolish to be discouraged about these things. They are bound to occur in the natural evolution of things, and he is a poor philosopher indeed who cannot get a laugh out of them.

The law is openly defied by the Cattlemen's Association headed by a bully named Dunlavey. Hollis thrashes Dunlavey for insulting Nellie Hazelton. "Ten Spot," one of Dunlavey's ruffians comes to The Kicker Office to murder him. Hollis overcomes "Ten Spot" and turns him from a murderous foe into a friend. A gang of toughs oust Dunlavey's man. They see them steal a herd of cattle.

Are these sentences extracts from a particularly bad scenario of a Wild West play in motion pictures? Not at all, dear reader. These interesting excerpts are taken from a synopsis of a story just concluded in the Evening World entitled "The Two Gunmen's Play." The story was, of course, published by the Evening World to counteract the pernicious effects which these Wild West motion pictures have on the minds of the young.

IN a number of states the legislatures have convened for their regular sessions. It behooves exhibitors and all friends of the motion picture to be watchful and active. The organized exhibitors especially have no greater duty on hand than to keep an eye on all proposed legislation which may in any way affect the welfare of the exhibitor. It is not, however, enough to watch. It is essential to act when occasion requires. All bills affecting motion pictures are referred to the proper committees and the officers of exhibitors' organizations must be in touch with the chairmen or secretaries of such committees. The exhibitors should make sure of receiving timely notice of any hearing to be held and should never fail to be represented at such hearings. Up to now every piece of legislation affecting motion pictures, whether friendly or hostile, has been proposed or put on the statute books without so much as consulting the interests of the exhibitors. No legislator would dream of advancing to final passage a bill affecting bankers or theaters without giving the bankers or theaters a chance to be heard. If the organized exhibitors will make themselves heard this year they may be sure of a much better standing before the legislature that assembles next year. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has made arrangements to be informed of the progress of any legislation at Albany affecting the interests of kinematography in this state. No ill-advised legislation will be suffered to advance without energetic protest and no favorable legislation will fail to receive a hearty and vigorous support.

Lurid Films Make Lurid Posters

By W. Stephen Bush

We cannot always discern the origin and cause of agitations against the motion picture. Wherever it is possible for us to see the causes plainly at work, it is our duty to point out the danger and suggest remedies to avert it. Every intelligent and observant friend of the industry knows that, at this very moment and in every part of the country, the lurid poster is a constant menace and a powerful argument and provocation to not only the enemies of the picture but to the clean-minded portion of the whole community. Partly from personal observations and partly from reports covering widely distant parts of the country, we are in a position to know that the lurid poster is silently but surely conjuring up another storm against the motion picture. In more senses than one the lurid poster "works while we sleep." There is not a city anywhere within the United States today without its lurid posters in the front and lobby display of at least one or two houses which are, as a general thing, situated in the busiest and most prominent thoroughfares. By slow degrees a hostile sentiment against motion pictures takes root and gains in force and momentum as the poster evil grows worse from day to day. It needs but a slight cause to start a crusade, and great damage follows both to the individual exhibitor and to the industry and its good name in general.

Must we always wait for the police to step in and tear down the hideous posters and close the theaters? Can we not learn something from the lessons of the past? Will the majority of the enlightened and progressive manufacturers never get together on this subject and put the ban of absolute prohibition on lurid films and thus end the evil of lurid posters?

Every man familiar with conditions in the industry today knows that a majority of the manufacturers in the organized groups want the uplift of the picture. The same is substantially true of importers and producers not affiliated with any trade organization. The majority of the exhibitors do not care for either lurid films or lurid posters. It seems to us that the majority of the manufacturers have it in their power to stop the lurid film by suggestion and persuasion if possible, and by more radical measures if necessary.

Why not make a good beginning for the present by putting the ban of absolute prohibition, say, on pictorial portrayal of the crime of highway robbery, also known as "stage hold-ups"? Burglary, stabbings and lynchings, prison horrors and gun-plays, etc., may then follow in any order we please. The "stage hold-up" is the most fertile source of the lurid posters. It has in its train the masked bandits, the gunplay and robbery or abduction. I do not believe there ever was or ever can be any demand for pictures of highway robbery, but taking the viewpoint of the manufacturer or exhibitor who may think that the industry cannot endure without this sort of thing, I want to say that the present supply exceeds any possible demand by about a thousand to one. I am sorry to say there are producers who started their career with highway robbery pictures in 1900 or thereabouts and who still cling to this form of "amusement." Some of them have companies in the most beautiful portions of the North American continent, with superb light and magnificent landscapes. One would almost imagine that in such surroundings their thoughts would turn to something better and higher than the presentation of highway robberies. Not at all. It is said that an advertising man on beholding for the first time the grandeur and beauties of Yellowstone Park exclaimed enthusiastically: "What beautiful spots for advertising Jones Celebrated Liver Pills!" Our producer, gazing upon the glories of Nature in river, lake and forest, is moved to cry out: "What an ideal background for a hold-up!" If the motion picture camera were used for holding the mirror up to Nature, we would have mighty few hold-ups indeed, for it is inconceivable that the largest part of the male population of the Far or Wild West ever consisted of road agents. How often is the murmur heard among the patrons of electric theaters, "Well, I only hope the next one won't be a cowboy picture!" These hold-up pictures give a wholly false and distorted view of life in pioneer days. Stages were not made to be held up; they were held up only occasionally. It is truly sad to think that one can hardly go into an electric theater nowadays and see the whole program without a stage coach being stopped by highway robbers, who are pursued by the sheriff and his posse, and after a most tiresome chase and a foolish waste of gunpowder are captured or killed. Of course, the thing is bad from a moral point of view, but it is just as bad from every other point of view. There's nothing new in it, nothing artistic, no merit of any kind. The sameness of it all is simply nauseating. It gives a chance to the wrong kind of exhibitor to do his worst with a blood-curdling lobby display. He views the public much as the spider views the fly. "Get them in and get their money any old way." The power for evil that such men possess would be minimized if hold-ups and similar follies were absolutely discontinued by the manufacturers.

Why was melodrama, the old, cheap melodrama, laughed off the modern stage? Simply because it was a lie and a burlesque on real life. The characters that stalked or sneaked or marched across the old melodramatic stage provoked ridicule, and people became ashamed of taking the thing seriously. Do we want the blight of ridicule to come down upon the motion picture? We know very well that the characters and "heroes" in the hold-up pictures are absolutely unreal. We cannot help laughing at them; indeed, a normal man must be ashamed of himself if he did not laugh at them. The normal man with the usual quota of common sense is the predominant type in every American audience.

There ought to be a closed season for pictorial hold-ups to go into effect immediately. The lurid poster, nourished by the hold-up variety of kinematography, will lose much of its luridness or disappear altogether. The time to apply the remedy is now. When the storm breaks the damage is certain, and we must pay the penalty of our neglect to right things in due time.

SUNDAY OPENING BY POPULAR VOTE.

Pierre, S. D., took hold of the Sunday picture question in rational manner. A local election was used as a means of securing an expression of public opinion on a subject, which for a long time has agitated this little community. In spite of the opposition of all the Protestant clergyman a majority was returned in favor of the Sunday picture show. While this method is decisive, in a municipality where it may legally be left to a vote of the people to settle, it is hardly likely that it will prove popular with those who most strenuously oppose Sunday opening of picture shows. The majority of the people want them, and no one knows it better than the man who talks loudest against them.

Plays of Mechanism

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE moving picture business fell into the hands of a few privileged producers and was thus not democratic from its inception, nor were the gentlemen who happened to get in first particularly gifted in the intricate and difficult craft of the theater and still less in communal consciousness and civic interest in art. Exhibitors have long been treated as tenants so far as paying toll is concerned, but without the right to say what attractions they should furnish in their own houses. The low price of admission has held the people, but I am one of those who believe that the business would have been more largely patronized under the competitive system and more profitable to all concerned if stimulated in the open market to a constantly increasing standard of quality.

There were many mechanical difficulties to overcome at the outset—most of these have been disposed of for many years—and a result unfavorable to progress is canned drama largely devoted to what is purely artificial and about as interesting as a row of houses in Philadelphia. Patriotic releases may serve to illustrate. People are beginning to laugh at them. Why should we pay a cent to watch a lot of supers popping blank cartridges at one another merely to indicate that there is a battle somewhere, while the hero or heroine carries dispatches from one point to another in spite of all? No patriotic spirit is aroused, and the only thrill felt is that of intense relief when the lights are turned up. We are then refreshed with a hope that the next number may prove worth while. All of us are cheerful and hopeful about the future of moving pictures, but the war dramas we are shown will not do for 1913.

These are plays of mechanism. Probably the reason so many of them are produced is that they are easy to put on. With a few cast-off uniforms and guns—possibly an ancient cannon—a country house for exterior scenes, some smoke bombs and sticks, an awkward squad or two, and a hero with a bloody bandage and a heroine in hoop-skirts, the same ridiculous old performance is repeated over and over again. War is declared in the first scene; recruiting stations are introduced to stretch the perversion of art, "bang, bang," the war is over, and hero and heroine embrace.

All that is conveyed to the audience is that the message is supposed to be very important. Almost any message is supposed to be important to those sending or those receiving it, but not to the world in general. The situation that makes the delivery essential is rarely portrayed, and then in such a slighting manner that nobody cares. The element of suspense is very thin, and what else is there in the photoplay? What is the idea? If it is simply to flaunt the flag for the sake of some applause from the unthinking, the little shockheads playing hooky, the moving picture business is not on its way to prolonged favor with those who attend the shows for the sake of being entertained.

In any photodrama worth the price of admission to see there must be an idea transmuted into action. The decay of our theater was largely responsible for the popularity of moving pictures among those who feel that they have a right to enjoy relaxation. The decay of moving pictures will result if they become devoid of artistic quality or refinement of taste. The blight of sordid motive is bad enough in itself, but is made worse when united to dull comprehension of what may be accomplished in this New Art.

An idea transmuted into action. That should be plain enough to those who imagine that we have no standard of criticism. I have often been asked by producers from what point of view I study a play and have invariably replied from that of the audience because it is impossible to deliver a lecture on the subject every time I look at a release for the purpose of reviewing it in print. The audience knows what it likes or dislikes without subjecting the impression to analysis. The critic is compelled to foresee the effect, make comparisons with past standards and thus be prophetic as well as retrospective.

True criticism is neither destructive fault-finding nor equally destructive flattery—one is as bad as the other—but notes the best there is in a picture as well as its imperfections. This requires some insight into character, motive, art, ideals and mechanism—it requires imagination and sympathy as well as judgment, so it is not to be expected that competent critics grow on every bush, but I wish every studio in the land had at least one who could see pictures as they ought to be and give his honest convictions without fear and trembling.

We might get relief from plays of mechanism, plays of cut-and-dried formulæ that have reappeared on the screen so often that they are as wearisome as copy book mottoes or those which were once popular in country homes embroidered on perforated cardboard. An occasional mechanical novelty is all right as a billboard inducement, but its novelty vanishes swiftly and can never replace the drawing power of plays that tend to make the little theaters social institutions, cultural as well as entertaining, and an educational force in the community.

The dreary round of mechanical plays, where mechanism is principal instead of merely accessory to the act, will follow the tiresome tom-tom travesties, the Villain-insults-Indian-Maiden-to-be-knocked-down-by-the-Hero-Cowboy boredom, in 1913. Ho for the ash cart with all that junk! And it looks as though they would be replaced by dramas of high incentive, bright and interesting, of finer quality of art, flourishing on a superior form of distribution. In case this seems too good to be true, let us read the signs of the times.

The year 1912 was marked by some tremendous political and legal activities from which there has been no complete readjustment. There have been some radical changes, but they will be regarded as comparatively insignificant in the light of future events. Live producers are strengthening their companies and making preparation for open competition. This means improvement in all departments and a much higher standard of presentation. This also means the elimination of the unfit. A result will be that moving pictures will appeal to millions who are now inclined to belittle the whole art because of its wretched examples.

Another sign is the powerful organization of exhibitors now in process of construction. The moment theater owners in all parts of the country get together, join forces and stand strong for a principle, they will have something to say about the attractions they wish to present at their houses. This will redound to the benefit of honest producers; those who are able and willing to deliver the real goods will enjoy a higher degree of prosperity than ever. It looks as though opportunity is dawning for unhampered effort towards making moving pictures the greatest modern means of expression.

"Satan"

The Drama of Humanity—A Four Part Production by Ambrosio.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THESE pictures seek to embody and express a most profound, gripping and tragic conception of Satan, the Tempter of Mankind, "going to and fro in the earth and walking up and down in it." The producer has attempted to show the work of Satan during four great periods of human history—the era before the coming of Christ, half biblical, half legendary; the time of the teaching and the passion of Christ; the doings of the "arch-enemy" in the middle ages and finally the modern Spirit of Evil, still working with the same hellish tools, but now rather the scoffing fiend in Faust than the medieval phantom with horns and cloven feet.

It must be said at once that the producer has on the whole succeeded in his attempt. The idea as it existed in his mind is by means of these pictures clearly conveyed to the mind of the spectator, who cannot fail to be deeply moved and impressed by what he sees on the screen. There is enough even on the surface and in the spectacular parts of the production to please any audience. There is, however, much fine ore beneath the surface. A good lecture would greatly aid in making this accessible to the intelligence of all parts of an audience.

The scenes open with a glimpse—all too brief—of the warring angels "on the plains of Heaven." We see Lucifer's last onslaught on the "impregnable towers" and his utter rout and expulsion. There is something at least of the Miltonic splendor in the following scenes, pleasing and impressive. For many of the later scenes the producer seems to have gone to Klopstock's "Messiah," probably the least read book in the world. He has, however, found helpful suggestions there and has made good use of them. Satan's devious entrance into the terrestrial paradise and his sudden transformation into a serpent, winding its uncoiled length upon the tree is a very fine piece of double exposure. Double exposure skillfully done is one of the great assets of kinematography and in these reels it is done with exceptional cleverness. The first reel touches deep cords in the human heart; we see Satan planning the deadly weapon with which Abel was killed and we see him fashioning the first sword and suggesting the first human sacrifice.

Scene from "Satan" (Ambrosio).

In the second reel, dealing with Satan's work in the lifetime of Christ, the producer has taken high aim. Satan at times takes on the garb and manners of a Pharisee. First he tempts Christ in the wilderness and later takes possession of the soul of Judas. The latter circumstance furnishes an occasion of introducing numerous scenes from the Passion of Christ. They are put on with great reverence and surely not lacking in art, as many of them have famous paintings for their prototypes. The convulsion of the elements at the moment of the crucifixion—darkened heavens traversed by flashes of lightning make a marvelous background to the terrible scene. There is so much sustained excellence in these scenes, however, that a detailed description of them would fill pages. A wonderful depth of thought and feeling pervades all these scenes. In the third reel, dealing with Satanic activities in the middle ages no finer subject could have been chosen than alchemy, a soul-destroying superstition, from which some of even the best minds of the day were not entirely free. Satan selects for his first victim a young friar, deeply enamored of the black art. He flatters the young man's vanity and lets him find a plant, which seems to have had its root in the infernal laboratory itself, for through its malign influence the noble convent of good works is changed into a workshop of the devil. All these scenes are full of strong dramatic moments and admirably acted throughout. The scenes in the laboratory of the convent are particularly fine in their realism and novelty.

The fourth and last reel takes us into the very heart of modern conditions. The contrasts between the different reels, the marked changes of time and costumes and manners and buildings are among the chief merits of this production and constitute not the least parts of its charm and power. The work of the tempter in the last reel is tragically destructive. The art and skill of the producer here reach rare heights. In the short space of a thousand feet he has touched upon one of the most fruitful dramatic themes of to-day—the inequalities of modern society. The tempter finds in them the great means of inducing the commission of crime and encompassing the destruction of human happiness. We see how luxury begets unrestrained lust and violence and listens to every evil whisper, that selfishness loves to hear. Poverty, too, affords baleful opportunities to the tempter. He destroys all who give him heed. The climax of the last scene is bold, striking and full of deepest meaning. The tempter's victims are buried beneath a heap of smoking ruins. As though he had just stepped out of a banquet hall in faultless evening dress the modern Satan contemplates his work with a sneer and a shrug of the shoulder and, plucking a brand from the blazing embers, lights a cigarette with "the friendly element." In wholly different surroundings is revealed the same demoniac touch we observed in the first reel, when the tempter followed the trail of the serpent into the paradise of man.

Scene from "Satan" (Ambrosio).

Scene from "Satan" (Ambrosio).

The task of the principal actor who takes the part of Satan is rendered with unfailing art. He possesses great vigor tempered with reserve and discretion. He, I understand, conceived the story and staged and directed it. His work in this production stamps him as an artist in the first flight of moving picture directors. He has compressed a gigantic idea into an incredibly short space. In choosing types and following traditions he has always adhered to the best, the most artistic and the most convincing. Vast as his subject was, he remained master of it throughout every part of it. As he has mastered his subject, so the subject will master and fascinate every audience.

Scene from "Satan" (Ambrosio).

Too much praise cannot be given to pictures of this kind. They justify the faith and hope in the higher possibilities of the moving picture. This picture particularly ought to be sure of a warm welcome from exhibitors, because it travels new paths and gives the spectator the rare pleasure of thinking. In electric theaters as on every other stage the patrons are hungry for new ideas. The most popular picture to-day is the picture with food for thought. Every exhibitor knows that such pictures are the real backbone of the best programs.

There is, to be sure, a wonderful lesson in these pictures; wonderful and wholesome as well, but very subtle. It is not at all obtruded on the spectator. He is not preached at in pictures as some overzealous moralist would preach at him in words. The tremendous lesson which forces itself on every man, woman and child seeing these pictures is: Avoid temptation. We absorb the lesson because we admire the way the story is told.

GLOBE THEATER BUSINESS SOLD.

The business of the Globe theater, of Springfield, Mass., one of the larger motion picture houses in the city has been bought from the Fidelity Amusement Company by H. P. Heine, who will control the business from now on with W. E. Cleary representing him as manager. The theater is located at 124 Main street and has a seating capacity of 530. Its business has been good, and the good will of the business is taken over by Mr. Heine together with the lease of the building and its fixtures. Vaudeville acts are to be added to the picture programmes.

NEW THEATER FOR BRISTOL.

S. E. Sherman of Hartford, Conn., has had plans prepared and took out a permit recently for a new moving picture and vaudeville house to be erected on Laurel street opposite the site of his old theater which was destroyed by fire. The new structure will cost upwards of $40,000, and Mr. Sherman expects the place to be ready about March 1st.

The new theater will be of fireproof brick and iron construction and will consist of a main floor and balcony. It will seat 1,500—500 more than the old house. There will be eight boxes, four on each floor. The lot on which the new house will be built has a frontage of 65 feet on Laurel street and is 130 feet deep. The stage will be 65 feet in width and 30 feet deep. The proscenium opening will be 30 feet. Mr. Sherman announces that the old policy of moving picture and vaudeville will be continued.

MONTGOMERY GETS "FROM THE MANGER TO THE CROSS."

Frank T. Montgomery, the Pictureman of Jacksonville and other Southern cities, has secured the big Kalem feature "From the Manger to the Cross" for Florida and Georgia. This feature will appear in all the Montgomery houses in those states and be leased to other licensed theaters.

PEGGIE REID,
Majestic Leading Lady.

PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITORS WILL DANCE.

The Philadelphia branch of the Exhibitors League is preparing to give a ball sometime during February. Plans have been laid to secure the attendance of John Bunny, of the Vitagraph Company, Miss Alice Joyce, of the Kalem Company, and a number of other leading picture players. It is probable that the event will be held at the Academy of Music, Broad and Locust streets, Philadelphia, or in the event that the committee is unable to secure that hall, the Second Regiment Armory on Broad street and Susquehanna avenue will be used instead. At the present writing there is very little information on the subject, but a committee is already at work on the details and a big time is promised.

"A Lesson From the Past" (Cines).

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THERE are films which afford a delight in reviewing them, not because of any special claims to greatness, but for the harmony that exists between the story and its production and one's sense of refined good taste and artistic merit. The Cines-Kleine one-reel subject, "A Lesson From the Past," may well be placed in such a class, and it can be further commended because of the tender, delicate heart interst which it possesses.

The principal characters are people of gentle blood and manners, and the Cines photoplayers present them with delightful art. Aunt Betty is made lovable, and even adorable at times, in the characterization of Miss Ida Talli. The strength that comes from bitter disappointment bravely withstood and years of heart anguish patiently borne is clearly reflected on her expressive face. And one can read there also, during the action of the photoplay, a great tenderness and sympathy for others, and a quiet dignity of demeanor, when the occasion calls for it, that proves far more effective than haughtiness. The closing scene, which shows Aunt Betty tearing into shreds the love letters and tokens of forty years ago, received from the man who had won her heart and from whom she had been separated by stern parents, is a lesson in psychology as one watches her face. She had refused all succeeding suitors, in loyalty to her first love; he had married another. She has just succeeded in winning his consent to the marriage of her niece to his only son, due chiefly to the remarkable likeness of her niece to what she herself had been forty years before. Old and feeble now, he has betrayed such emotion over recollections of the past and a rekindling of the old love for herself as she had once been, that she decides to make the disappointment of her life a closed book and find reflected happiness in the bliss of her niece.

Scene from "A Lesson of the Past" (Cines).

I would commend a study of the love-making of Aunt Betty's niece and her fiance, as pictured in this film, to photoplayers who nauseate the spectator by over indulgence in osculation—and not only by over indulgence, but, in some cases, by positive indecency in the manner of kissing. A true lover's kiss is pure and chaste, and is unaccompanied by a bear hug that threatens rib fractures and dislocation of shoulders. Such strenuous demonstrations of muscular power and ferocious lip-jabbing may be all very well where Calibans and their mates are concerned, but certainly not in the characterizations of civilized lovers, either young or old. The love scenes between Aunt Betty's niece and her lover are as fragrant as hawthorn blossoms, and possess the sweet modesty of the daisy.

The opening scene introduces us to Aunt Betty as she fondly and regretfully reads letters from her lover forty years ago. Then she reads the announcement of his marriage to another in the newspaper she has preserved. Placing these treasures of the past back in the drawer, she pays a visit to the barn yard to see her goats and other pets.

Scene from "A Lesson of the Past" (Cines).

A postman approaches and delivers her a letter. It is from her brother, Edwin, who informs her that he is sending his daughter, Marguerite, on a visit to benefit her health. The girl arrives and Aunt Betty is surprised to learn that she is in love with the son of her fiance of long ago, and that the latter has forbidden their marriage. To add to Aunt Betty's troubles Marguerite's lover arrives, having traced her whereabouts with the instinct of a homing pigeon. Aunt Betty receives him with a show of opposition at first, but her heart soon melts when she sees for herself how deeply the young people love each other. They persuade her to call on Count Alderi, the obdurate father and her own old time lover, with the hope that his consent to their marriage will be gained.

This meeting between Count Alderi and Aunt Betty is fruitless, and she returns sadly to her home. The lovers are crushed by the intelligence, and matters are brought to a crisis by the unexpected arrival of Count Alderi, who has come to take his son home. It is at this point that Aunt Betty exercises the skill of a well trained diplomat. She dresses Marguerite in a costume, which she herself had worn in the old days, and the old gentleman is so startled at her striking resemblance to his lost sweetheart that he takes her to his arms immediately, and gives his consent to the marriage.

The film will be released January 28.

"On Burning Sands" (Powers)

By George Blaisdell.

THIS photoplay will interest old-time picturegoers not only because in it Edwin August has the lead, but also because in it he essays for the first time the role of the ranchman. He is arrayed in all the panoply of the orthodox cattleman—from top to toe; he carries a frontier Colt that looks all of "forty-five"; he wears a garment that would be described by a Yankee as a "vest" which is so ornamented with beads as to excite real envy, and chaps that look like bearskin! It must be admitted, however, that he wears them as though to the regalia born. In no measure do they detract from his work as an actor, which throughout these two reels is up to his best standard. Mr. August has splendid support, especially from Farrell McDonald, who plays the "heavy." Mr. McDonald looks his part, that of the real bad man. The story turns on these two men, between Smiling Joe and Bill Stover. There is a woman in the cast, two in fact, but they are incidental. In its appeal to men the plot of the play is in a way Kiplingesque. Jeanie McPherson as Nell Carter, the girl who marries Smiling Joe, does good work, but as said before, the interest centers on Mr. August and Mr. McDonald, in spite of the fact that the feud between the two is caused by both men being in love with the same girl.

Although "On Burning Sands" is a "Western," it is well to note that not a shot is fired. There are several situations where such action may be expected, but it does not happen. One of the notable features in connection with this picture is that the interest is not all centered in the second reel; the action in the first is steady and holds the attention. As to the latter the scenes where Smiling Joe, informed that Bill is looking for him armed with a gun, goes out to find his enemy, himself armed, result in some thrilling moments. It is a search for each other, around the corners of houses, between buildings. The suspense gets into your blood, and you experience relief when as the two men are about to come together they are seized, Smiling Joe by his wife and Bill by Joe's sister, and peevishly put away their weapons. You may sympathie a little with the men, but you can't quite share their disgust.

The real feature of the picture, however, comes in the second reel, where Joe, deserted by Nell, who has been induced by Bill to leave her home by reason of a forged note to which her husband's name had been signed, comes across Nell in the desert, abandoned by Bill, dying in a fierce sandstorm. Joe learns the truth from Nell, and starts back with her. He comes across Bill, also exhausted. The two men fight on the desert, and Bill is vanquished. When Joe and Nell reach the edge of the desert, Joe decides to return for Bill. He finds his enemy and tries to save him. The two men fall exhausted in the storm. Nell gets help and hurries back in time to save the two. Bill is cured of his badness and admits that Joe is the better man. The situations are of the strongest; they are real. The storm is vividly portrayed.

The story is of Joe and Bill, in love with Nell. Bill is caught stealing a horse, has a fight with the sheriff and escapes. Joe is called on to assist in the recapture; he succeeds. Bill is sent to prison. When released he hears that Joe and Nell are married. He goes after Joe, but the duel is averted by the two women. Joe goes away to a round-up. Bill forges a note to the effect that as Nell seems to think more of Bill than she does of him she had better hang on to him. Nell, in the belief that Joe has deserted her, leaves word that her husband will never see her again and goes with Bill. When Joe returns and finds the note he sets out to find Bill. He traces them to the desert, with the result as before told.

A word is due to J. F. McDonald, who produced the picture. He has done well. The story is coherent throughout. Mr. McDonald is also to be commended for his realistic setting of the sandstorm scenes. There is a strong suspicion on the part of this writer that the identity of the producer and Bill Stover is identical—in which event double commendation is due.

"The Ways of Destiny"

Two-Part Pathe Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

FIRST impression is one of startling beauty. Second thought is that a fine sociological play is in process, one showing that the human creature is largely a result of uncontrolled circumstances. Here was a case where the reviewer, the perpetual appreciator of other men's work could settle down and enjoy himself a little, rather than sit up and watch closely for some flicker of intelligence in the presentation. You will never know what a relief it is to the critic to come out of the hot room with a smile on his face and be able to honestly say, "That picture is all right."

"The Ways of Destiny" opens with a picture I would like to frame and own. I felt a thrill of delight on seeing it and an after sense of satisfaction in realizing what I have so often idealized. No scene should be portrayed that is a blemish to the photoplay and a source of irritation to the audience. In this particular Pathe release, the view of the old shepherd, Jean Virat, and his adopted daughter, Margaret, among the sheep they are tending, is a gem in itself and is followed by a series of lovely exteriors and tasteful interiors such as are rarely gathered together in one film.

The story depicts what is coming to be recognized as true to the mind and to the life of human beings, that they are tremendously affected by circumstances. This view has been crystallized during untold generations of actual experience, but the biologists inclined to regard heredity as the dominating influence in shaping careers and forming character. The scientific view has been that our inequalities as individuals are due almost entirely to differences of parental inheritance.

"The Ways of Destiny" is intended to show the fallacy of any such belief. Margaret is an abandoned child, commended to the mercies of the finder, and has been raised in humble circumstances, though her mother's station is high and her father one of the ablest minds in industrial organization. He is, in fact, the head of an enormous department store and a man of proven superiority aside from his business sagacity. The role played by Alexander Leggett in the commercial world is secondary to the high probity and real worth of the man in his private capacity.

The child, unaware of her parentage, follows the natural course of a poor girl. When the shepherd is accidently killed by a falling tree during a storm, she is left alone and homeless. Her inheritance of beauty operates to her disadvantage rather than otherwise, as it makes her the object of those undesirable attentions which clean-minded women instinctively recognize and abhor, and that they do not prove her undoing is entirely due to the ways of destiny that affect each step of her career.

Chance lays her low where she is found by people of wealth, and she becomes part of a great household in the humble capacity of maid. A younger son becomes interested in the attractive young creature in the usual way—servitors are not supposed to have morals—and the warm impulse of her heart might have led her astray but for the intervention of the young man's mother. The mother happens to come upon her son and the maid at a moment of love-making and the lovely young servant is discharged.

Chance sends her to the home of a friendly seamstress, and the latter's good sense results in breaking off what promised to be a ruinous relation. The young man is fascinating; he has everything in his favor as a conquerer of womanly resistance, and it is not to be expected that a girl of warm blood will be able to stand out against him alone. Nothing in her parental inheritance protects her—her natural endowments make her desiring and desired—and she is on the point of becoming his toy and plaything of a day when his mother's discovery of the courtship and the protection afforded by the worldly-wise seamstress save the young girl where she would have fallen in the natural course of events.

After tossing about on the Sea of Circumstances for a while she finds anchorage in the great department store conducted by her father. He has, meanwhile, been searching for the child. From manly recognition of his early faults and desire to atone for them, Alexander Leggett has attained a breadth of mind that makes him merciful, as well as just, to his fellow beings. The character is a noble one and admirably portrayed. It is the gem of the piece. All that he can learn through his attorneys is that Margaret was abandoned when young and found by a shepherd, Jean Virat, since dead. The lawyers have not been able to trace the child's course from the moment death and misfortune drove her from the only home she knew.

This makes a deeply interesting story. The girl unaware of her father is working in his department store, while he is vainly searching for her. Every attempt to wrong her in the curious chain of circumstances that follow brings her closer to her natural protector. They might never have met but for the accidental visit to the store of the young man who first attempted her undoing. His attentions to her in the store rouse the envy and malice of other employees, and they report to the Superintendent that she receives visits from her male friends during business hours.

The Superintendent hears her case in his private office, makes vain overtures to the girl and discharges her because she repulses him. Alexander Leggett, while on a tour of inspection, chances upon her in her moment of grief and mortification and has her called to his private office. He there rights matters, but the Superintendent is furious over his own humiliation and frames up a crime to be attached to the girl. Even as he does so, two companions of Margaret see what he is doing while they are hiding behind the counter for other purposes.

The girl is brought before Alexander Leggett a second time, and a charge of theft is made against her. She protests in vain. Circumstances are all against her until her name is shown by the Superintendent making the charge, and the owner of the place knows that he is face to face with his own child. This highly dramatic moment is the culmination of a series of events tending powerfully to the girl's ruin, but the father is now roused in her behalf. He investigates closely and gets at the truth.

The story ends with his manly recognition of his child, and that is exactly the spot to end it. A strong after-impression remains. This is best explained by the French philosopher, Helvetious, "Citizens are like empires. Their elevation, their decline, the good fortune or their misfortune, are the products of a certain combination of circumstances and of an infinity of accidents, unforeseen and beyond explanation."

"A Ballad of the South Seas"

Initial Production From the Melies Trip Around the World.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE special and higher purposes of kinematography are always well served by the camera which travels. What greater service could be rendered to the cause of education, to the advancement of knowledge and to clean, useful entertainment than the making of a series of motion pictures on a trip around the world? When the enterprise is under capable and experienced direction, following a novel and well-conceived plan we may justly look forward to an unprecedented enrichment of the kinematographic library. Indeed, the finest collection of books on the same subject seems to me to compare with such a gallery of motion pictures as the canal boat compares with the Empire State Express. Both the canal boat and the train get to Buffalo, but who wants to travel by canal boat?

The Melies Company has laid out its route around the globe with a view to thoroughness and with an artist's eye for picturesqueness. Right here one very striking and unique merit of their plan ought to be pointed out. Their films will not merely portray a succession of native dances and customs and pretty bits of scenery. Of that sort of thing we have had our fill in books and slides and many of us tire of it rather easily. The Melies Company has hit upon a scheme which must make every inch of these films humanly and genuinely interesting and thoroughly acceptable, not only to schools and educational institutions, but to the average patron of the motion picture theater. I feel I am not stating the case strongly enough. The way the Melies Company has dealt with this tremendous subject will make the pictures not merely acceptable, but eagerly sought after and welcomed. They will show us the lands and lives of the races and nations of the world by enacting their stories and ballads and traditions. In this way we will be able to look into the very hearts of the people. We will see how they have met the questions that confront our common humanity.

The character of a people is best shown by its songs, its poetry, its legends. Add to this the true background, as fashioned by the hand of Nature, and I for one am willing to trade a hundred volumes on ethnography for these films and think myself the gainer. These pictures show us the substance of things, of which the form is but the shadow. There will be a modern touch here and there before the series is completed for in these days even the remotest corners of the earth are brought into some contact or other with the more complex civilization of the white men and it is surely within the province of the motion picture to show such relations. There are touches of humor and pathos in these meetings between the primitive and the organized races of the earth, and these are well brought out in the pictures.

The general plan, however, will be to seize the characteristic legends of the country and tell the people's story by means of them. A most promising beginning has been made in this first reel: "A Ballad of the South Seas." Here in brief is the story:

Of all the great chiefs of Tahiti in the year 1650, Tavi was the most generous and therefore the most powerful. Sharing his high position was his consort, the beautiful Taurua, whom Tavi cherished and honored more than was the custom. So that when the neighboring chief Tuiterai dispatches envoys of peace imploring the loan of his wife for seven days, Tavi must needs comply though it break his heart, for Tavi was generous.

The seven days up, Taurua is not returned and Tavi declares war. It is a long, fierce, barbaric struggle. Taurua is regained and Tuiterai taken prisoner to the camp of Tavi, for none but chief can kill a chief. But "Why," says Tavi, "did you bring him here? My home now makes of him a sacred guest." Alas for Tavi! He cannot punish Tuiterai and to cap the climax, Taurua has fallen in love. Oh cruel fate!

But Tavi is generous, and surprising the lovers in tender embrace, he nobly blesses them, and gives Taurua to Tuiterai "for all times."

To our sophisticated minds this sounds like a story from a colony of Peter Pans, who have refused to grow up. When we see the frame in which the story is set, the manifestations on every hand of a generous and even bountiful Nature, we begin to understand and our interest and curiosity grow apace. The dominant characteristic of the mild and child-like race that inhabits Tahiti and the neighboring isles is contentment. Out of this contentment and the simple lives of the people has sprung a most enviable quality of mind, for which the French have the happy term "naivete." Our English ingenuousness does not embrace all the finer shades of this state of mind. As the story goes on with a constant change of wonderful backgrounds our interest and curiosity are at once gratified and sustained and stimulated anew.

Scene from "A Ballad of the South Seas" (Melies).

This reel makes us hunger for more of the same kind and more are promised. It would be hard to single out any one scene as being especially fine, but I could not help admiring the fleet of war canoes, the sweet naturalness of the heroine, who is a native belle and who never tried to "act," the luxuriant vegetation and the work of the two members of the Melies Company with whom the natives worked in such charming and intelligent co-operation and harmony.

Scene from "A Ballad of The South Seas" (Melies).

The work of titling the reel has been done very cleverly and must add to the other merits of the production. The titles retain some of the Tahitian text of the legend and as this simple tongue consists mostly of vowels a very pretty touch of originality is felt by the reader. The English titles and quotations are clear and in happy poetic vein.

Scene from "A Ballad of The South Seas" (Melies).

It is not too much to say, that this globe-encircling enterprise is the biggest undertaking in kinematographic travel. Properly advertised and presented it ought to be a boon to every exhibitor. The Melies Company may be sure of the best wishes of every true friend of the motion picture in its further progress.

NEW PICTURE FACTORY.

The new factory of the Commercial Motion Picture Company, of New York City, will be opened sometime in the latter part of January. The factory is located at 102 West 101st street, and is equipped to do all kinds of work for the moving picture trade, such as developing negatives, printing, making titles, etc. Mr. Eugene Gaudio, formerly superintendent of the entire Universal laboratories, has resigned that position and has been appointed superintendent of the new Commercial factory.

The Ohio State Convention

GREAT preparations are being made for the annual convention of the Ohio State Exhibitors League, which will be held at the Southern Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, on January 21st and 22nd. Extensive reservations of space have been made at the hotel for the use of the convention and for the accommodation of manufacturers of machines and supplies who desire to make an exhibit. From last reports a large attendance of exhibitors, members of the association, and exhibitors from adjoining states will be present.

President M. A. Neff has visited a number of cities, urging the members to attend, and there has been an enthusiastic response to his solicitation. It is expected that a number of notables will be present, among whom are Governor J. M. Cox, of the State of Ohio, and former senator, the Hon. J. B. Foraker, both of whom will address the convention. Arrangements have been made to take moving pictures of exhibitors present. Every effort will be made to afford a good time to all who attend. The Columbus Chamber of Commerce is assisting the Committee of Arrangement in plans for the entertainment. A special committee has been appointed to look out for the welfare of the ladies.

In the way of business, a number of important propositions are scheduled to come before the convention. Among these is a number of legislative matters; a proposed bill for a state board of censorship; a bill to provide for the examination of operators; a bill to provide for the special inspection of picture theaters; a bill legalizing Sunday opening and a number of amendments to the existing building code. Officers will be elected to serve for the ensuing year, and delegates to the national convention in New York next July will be chosen. Of course, there will be the big banquet on the night of the 22nd, which will occur at the Southern Hotel. Beyond a doubt this meeting of the Ohio State League will be the largest state convention of motion picture exhibitors that has yet been held.

MEETING OF NEW JERSEY LEAGUE.

Another session of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League has been called by President Robinson to meet Wednesday, January 15th, at 10 a. m. at Achtelstetter Hall, 844 Broad Street, Newark, N. J., next to the C. R. R. Station. The state meeting held in Newark on January 6th was very successful and encouraging, there being a large number of representatives on hand from many parts of the state. Representatives were on hand for the first time from Lambertville, Perth Amboy and Elizabeth. There was an unusual amount of business transacted during the meeting, but there remained so much more for consideration that it has been decided to hold another meeting on the fifteenth for the disposition of unfinished business.

The state members responded to the call with much enthusiasm and a determination to do something for themselves and the exhibition business. A definite campaign was mapped out for procedure in the matter of legal Sunday opening. There were nearly forty members present and a majority of them willingly pledged themselves to contribute a generous sum for the employment of one of the best New Jersey counselors that can be had to represent their case. A Legislative Committee and a Ways and Means Committee were appointed.

A resolution was adopted inviting the press and public officials to all meetings of the league and the members went on record to the effect that they had no desire to conduct their business behind closed doors and that there was nothing in their affairs that they are ashamed for the whole world to know. By a unanimous vote, the members also adopted a resolution stipulating that hereafter no meetings of the league shall be held in any place where drinks are served. Such meeting places serve only to bring discredit upon the members and upon the league in general. They are not the right sort of places to which the press, clergy or public officials should be invited. Part of the business of the meeting was an arrangement whereby the Eliabeth members will join with the Newark exhibitors and their local will be known as the Union County Local.

From the general results of the meeting, it begins to appear as though something definite will be accomplished. The exhibitors responded encouragingly to President Robinson's recent notices, and went to work with a will. There are hustlers in the organiation and things are looking bright.

SANDUSKY LOCAL EXHIBITORS TO MEET.

Members of Sandusky Exhibitors Local No. 7, will meet at Bellview, Ohio, January 14th for election of officers and banquet. All exhibitors in the Sandusky district are invited to attend, and are requested to advise Secretary Higgins, Royal Theater, Sandusky, in advance.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

IN the recent trial of a case in the Municipal Court, of Cleveland, Ohio, in which the State of Ohio was plaintiff, and Louis H. Becht, a moving picture exhibitor, the defendant, it was found that the defendant was guilty of violating that section of the Ohio general code which applies to moving pictures. The section referred to reads, in part, as follows:

"Whoever gives a public or private exhibition of a lascivious, indecent, immoral or impure nature, or an exhibition tending to currupt morals, or owns or operates or permits another to operate on his premises a picture machine or other device exhibiting a lascivious, indecent, immoral or impure picture or figure, or a picture of crime, shall be fined," etc.

In his decision the Court referred to the large number of cases of the kind to be heard and that, in deciding the case under consideration, he would endeavor to express the general view he held on the pictures in the case before him, so that the other cases might be tried in briefer time. He also acknowledged that the defendants in the various cases "are representatives of a large class of men, engaged in a legitimate, proper and desirable business, in which millions of dollars are invested, and who are entitled to the protection of the Court in carrying on their business within the law."

He referred to the fact that since the statute was enacted the moving picture had made great progress, which, had it been foreseen by the members of the Legislature, a law more specific and certain for guidance would have been passed. The Court then continued:

"In applying the statutes in these cases, what should be taken as the picture exhibited? If a playlet, if that is the proper term, is pictured in ten or twelve or more scenes, and in one of these scenes some crime—no matter what—is pictured, can this part of the scene be separated from the rest and said to be a picture of crime, within the statute? It would seem this could no more be done than could a strip be separated from a huge canvas picture, and that strip treated as a picture in itself. It is only by a complete reversal of the rule of law, so as to construe every intendment of a criminal statute against the defendant, that such a construction could be adopted, and it is therefore rejected by the Court. This Court is of the opinion that the picture here to be considered is the entire picture, the playlet or story or connected scenes from beginning to end, precisely as though they were portrayed on one canvas.

"What principle then should be laid down to determine whether or not a certain picture is a picture of crime? Is it sufficient to constitute a playlet a picture of crime if, in one of its numerous scenes, some crime is perpetrated? These playlets can no more fairly be so judged or criticised than could a book be by a part of a chapter, or a canvas painting by a small portion of it.

"In construing a statute, the meaning or intention of the law should be gathered from its words, its objects, scope and end—the things which led to its adoption. This statute is directed clearly against pictures tending to corrupt public morals, and both the spirit and letter of the statute seem to require that it be interpreted to mean that where the picture as a whole is substantially a picture of crime, it is within the statute; otherwise not. In other words, where the whole picture or play is a series of crime, or crime is the essential scene or atmosphere, that is the general theme of the picture is one of crime, as for instance, pictures of thugs with revolvers slugging the police, etc., the picture is of the class prohibited; but the mere fact that incidental to the development of a scenario or playlet, a crime is perpetrated does not ipse facto render the playlet a picture of crime within the meaning of the statute."

The Court then described the various scenes of the films in the case, which pictured the events leading up to the murder of the famous New York detective, Petrosino, and then concluded:

"Upon these particular pictures, the Court thinks upon all counts they come within the statutes, in accordance with the rules of interpretation the Court has here laid down; that it is a picture of a series of crimes; that the whole atmosphere of the picture is the atmosphere of a society plotting blackmail and murder; that the culmination of the picture shows the criminals or a part of them triumphant and eluding the police, and that practically the whole picture is substantially a picture of crime, notwithstanding that that crime is adduced for the purpose of showing a police officer endeavoring unsuccessfully to apprehend the perpetrators of it.

"Insofar as this particular film under consideration is concerned, the Court is of the opinion that it comes within the statute, and therefore finds the defendant guilty."

Film manufacturers should pay strict attention to this construing of the Ohio statute, so as to prevent conflict and consequent loss.

The Satex Film Company.

The Satex Film Company was incorporated under the laws of Arizona about a month ago. The incorporators are Ed. Besserer, president; Lee Costley, vice-president; H. M. Armstrong secretary treasurer, and C. Pyle, managing director.

With the exception of Mr. Pyle, all the officials are residents of Austin, Tex., being substantial business men of that city. Mr. Besserer also owns several picture theaters in Austin. Mr. Pyle is well known in Chicago film circles, having filled several important positions in leading exchanges. He was dramatic stage manager for a number of years before entering the film business, and his experience will be valuable in his work as managing director.

Miss Martha Russell (in private life Mrs. Chas. C. Pyle), will be leading lady of the Satex stock company. She is a woman of brilliant attainments, being an accomplished actress and photoplayer as well as a successful lecturer. The other members of the company have been carefully selected.

The studio and plant, which are now completed, are located in Austin, and operations will begin Jan. 27. It is the intention to release one reel each week, confined to dramas, with feature subjects at intervals.

It is not known at the present time what affiliations will be made by the Satex people to market their product, but Mr. Pyle left this city for New York on Sunday, Jan. 5, to effect arrangements, if possible.

The Moving Picture as an Art.

The Rev. Dr. Eugene Rodman Shippen, pastor of the First Unitarian church, Detroit, Mich., is quoted by a paper of that city, in connection with his opinion of a certain motion picture, as follows:

"The truth was borne in upon me, as I saw the picture, that what appeals to the eye alone has a vastly different effect than that which appeals to both eye and ear. I can imagine a stage production, where the mind follows brilliant dialogue, in which the actions shown in the pictures might not be objectionable to me. But the eye alone is a crude avenue to the mind. That is why, in my opinion, the moving picture is not a high form of art. It has an appeal for the uneducated mind, and for children, but has very little for the educated and cultured. There are, of course, films that are instructive, such as scenes in foreign lands, which may be of considerable service."

I wonder if Dr. Shippen has viewed any of the great dramas which have been filmed by our leading manufacturers. If so, he would be obliged to confess that their appeal is distinctly to the "educated and cultured," and that the uneducated mind fails to grasp the full meaning of eloquent gesture or of expressive facial change. How does a great painting appeal to the most enlightened of us? Is it not through the "crude avenue" of the eye alone?

The works of the great masters stir an educated man to the very soul, give wings to his imagination and reveal beauties that are hidden to the uneducated and uncultured mind. And all this is accomplished through the "crude avenue" of the eye alone. With the best ears in the world and bereft of sight, the most cultured man would stand before the greatest painting in benighted unappreciation.

The moving picture, it seems to me, is even a higher form of art than the great painting, in the sense that it shows life in action. It reveals the varying changes of manner and expression which accompany changing emotions, and life as it is lived. This, it would appear, is a higher form of art than that which furnishes us a composite picture of life, no matter how masterly. Dr. Shippen is requested to take a course in the presentation of our best pictures. I am sure he will change his opinion.

Chicago Film Brevities.

G. M. Anderson, secretary of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., and manager of the Western stock company, arrived in the city last week. He will remain for about two weeks.

The Essanay Film Mfg. Co., has started in on the production of their Daily Screen Service, which will be devoted to weekly happenings in and around Chicago. These films will be of varying lengths, according to the number of important happenings, and will be released every Monday. It is expected that St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Toledo, Milwaukee and Minneapolis, will also be included in the Daily Screen Service. C. A. Luperti, a cameraman with 15 years' experience and two and one-half years with Essanay's Eastern Company, will take the pictures. The Daily Screen Service has a special office in Room 605, Hearst Building. Fred Warner is manager.

Tournament of Roses at Pasadena Brings Out Picture Folk—The Mormon Picture—A Novel Celebration—News Notes.

THE activity of the motion picture people of Southern California was by far the most noticeable feature of the annual Tournament of Roses held at Pasadena, a suburb of this city, on New Year's Day.

One might have thought that this year's repetition of the world famous flower show which has been given by the city of Pasadena every New Year's Day for twenty-four consecutive years was a motion picture affair. Entries made by the various producing companies occupied nearly three-quarters of a mile of the five-mile floral parade.

Along the line of march in nearly every block a motion picture camera was located. Several of the companies had prepared for the event by obtaining photoplays calling for certain phases of the rose festival and when at two or three places along the line of march special scenes and incidents were staged before the camera the crowds lost all interest in the passing floral floats while they watched the motion picture actors and actresses with eager curiosity.

The two "Famous Detectives" of the Keystone company, Mack Sennett and Fred Mace went a-sleuthing in the parade as patrons of the motion picture theaters will soon discover on the screens. In their familiar make-up they rode in the Keystone decorated car—which, by the way, took second prize and a silver cup—and surveyed the crowds with ludicrous solemnity. Four scenes were photographed, which may have been considered rather a clever idea by Sennett but not by the poor cameraman who had to pack his heavy camera on his back after each scene, run several blocks ahead of the automobile and get set up for the next scene.

James Young Deer, of the Pathe West Coast studio at Edendale, entered a representative float called "Indian Life—Past and Present." One end of the float showed a smartly dressed college graduated Indian. On the other end was a teepee with an aged squaw sitting before it. In front of her stood an Indian hunter in full costume, who had just laid before her the body of a dead deer. At his side was a live wolf which he had trained to hunt. The three Indians who rode on the float are members of the Pathe company. Behind the float rode a cavalcade of Indians and cowboys in costume, also from the Pathe studio. One of the cameramen from the Pathe studio was on the job all day.

Ralph Radnor Earle, representing the Pathe Weekly, came on from New York with a camera to photograph the event for the Weekly. The Gaumont Weekly also had a man on the job and the Thanhouser company was represented by its chief photographer Carl L. Gregory, who took news pictures as well as scenes. The supposition is that Gregory's news pictures are intended for the new Mutual weekly.

The Universal company contributed Indians, soldiers and cowboys to the parade. Thanhouser had an automobile entered and the Kay-Bee and Broncho companies also were represented.

The floral parade is invariably the chief event of the forenoon, and in the afternoon chariot races are run at Tournament park and there is a program of typical Western sports. This time the motion picture people volunteered their services and gave the city more than half the afternoon's entertainment.

The Kay-Bee company sent more than 100 Sioux Indians, men women and children, from its Santa Monica ranch. They gave demonstrations of Indian life, such as making camp, breaking camp, going on the march, a number of tribal dances and various games. Miller Bros., 101 Ranch contributed rough riders, lariat tossers and broncho busters who gave exhibitions of many kinds. One of the most novel and most amusing events of the day was a race between an elephant and two camels all from the Selig Wild Animal Farm. The elephant, to everyone's surprise, won the race. One of the camels gave an exhibition of fancy bucking which would have shamed a broncho, and lost his rider, after which he ambled toward home with a company of cow punchers in hot pursuit.

The afternoon's program was observed not only by about 75,000 persons but by at least eight motion picture cameras as well, so it is a fair estimate that several million people will see glimpses of the event within a few weeks.

The Mormon Picture.

The final scenes of the five reel production "100 Years of Mormonism," which is soon to be issued by the Utah Moving Picture Co., of this city were completed at the company's studio at Hauser station, near this city, last week. Before it is finally released it must, under the terms of a contract with the Mormon church, be passed upon and approved by officials of the church. Prof. Young, of the University of Utah, is already in Los Angeles to witness the studio run of the film, and other Utah censors are on their way. The motion picture people agreed that the film record of the rise of the religion should be complete and accurate to the smallest detail and the church officials in return agreed to place at the disposal of the company all church archives and other records which it desired and also to assist the undertaking in every way. The original contract was made with the Ellay Company of Salt Lake City, but that company found the expense of producing the picture under the rigid terms of the contract so great that its capital of $50,000 was nearly used up before the picture was three fifths finished. The Utah Moving Picture Co., was then formed with a capitalization of $100,000 to take over the contract from the Ellay Company and finish the work.

A tremendous amount of data had to be worked over before the story was in shape for motion picture purpose. Nell Shipman, a Los Angeles photoplay writer, was engaged to arrange the data and prepare the working scenario. It is reported that her fee for the work was $2,500 which, if it is true, probably establishes a new scale for work of this kind, and a scale which will delight photoplay writers everywhere. Altogether 9,000 feet of completed film has been made, but 4,000 feet of this will be sacrificed for it is proposed to hold the production down to 5,000 feet. The effect of this condensation will undoubtedly be to give more action and consequently more interest to the picture as a whole, for naturally the poorest features will be the ones eliminated.

The scenes which were photographed last week included the massacre of Huan Hill, the wrecking of the jail, and the shooting of Joseph Smith, at Carthage, Mo.

Six hundred extra people were used in the mob scene and the burning of the jail. While it was going on someone turned in a fire alarm and sent the engines to the plant.

Offers for territorial and state rights have been pouring in ever since the original announcement was made in The Moving Picture World, but no rights have as yet been sold. The company will hold everything for the present and will exploit the feature with their own companies, especially in the United States. Already representation has been obtained abroad in St. Petersburg, London, Rome, Sydney and Buenos Ayres.

Novel New Year's Celebration.

All the motion picture producing companies in Southern California collaborated in the production of a full reel comedy which was made at Playa Del Rey, near Santa Monica, the night of December 31. The title was "Off With the Old, On With the New." Thomas H. Ince, of the Kay-Bee company, directed the scenes all of which were staged in the Auditorium. He also paid the bills. When the actors and others from the various studios arrived they found the following notices on the callboard:

"Everybody Indians.

"Dissolve in at 9 p. m., Dec. 31, 1912. To project the old year out and the new year in.

"Unmarried men with a camera eye bring their own ingenues.

"Our developer guaranteed to overcome all static.

"All 'jags' must be developed at 12 o'clock.

"No one allowed in the dark room but married couples.

"Those with negative legs bring a tripod."

The working script of the scenario was as follows:

"Scene 1—Split Reel. (Cut back to beer.)

"Scene 2—The Rewind. (Switch to sandwiches.)

"Scene 3—Big Figures. (Flash of more booze.)

"Scene 4—The Sideline Bump. (Visions in the corner).

"Scene 5—The Background Waddle. (Close up on the punch bowl).

"Scene 6—Quick Action. (Focus on highballs).

"Scene 7—Put It Over. (Panoram to soft drinks).

"Scene 8—Everybody Rag That Can. (Double exposure of seltzer).

"Still Picture. Dissolve out at daylight."

Despite the alcoholic suggestions in the scenario, which were included for reasons of humor rather than historical accuracy, the dance turned out to be a particularly sober, decent and thoroughly enjoyable social affair.

Increasing Kalem Product.

George Melford, the Kalem producer at Glendale, has doubled his output of reels temporarily. The reason for this is that California is the one ideal locality in the world for manufacturing motion pictures. Only about half of the manufacturers have discovered this. When they all learn it, which is only a matter of time, Southern California will be turning out all the motion pictures eight months in the year.

Melford is working extra time because the Eastern Kalem company is located where it is. Snow, rain, muggy days and other prohibitive conditions have interfered with the operations of the Eastern company for the time being. We have no such conditions here and consequently the Glendale company was able to undertake to furnish extra releases from this end until the weather becomes fit for human life in the East.

Melford has just sent East a two reel production called "The Redemption," a title which probably will be changed before it is released, because another film of the same name is extant. The story is about a philosopher who declares that the power of love and kindness is strong enough to reclaim the most errant and incorrigible person. He is challenged to prove his theory by a practical demonstration and, accepting the challenge, succeeds.

News Notes.

Two of the Thanhouser company's famous directors have arrived at the studio which the company has just opened in this city and are now at work. One is Francis Powell and the other L. J. Henderson. That the Thanhouser company is now located here permanently is indicated by the fact that preparations are being made to equip the studio with a complete dark room plant including facilities for making large numbers of positive prints. Within two months, it is announced, the studio will be equipped to manufacture all its own releases. Henderson is now making pictures under the Thanhouser brand, but Powell has begun work on a series which will be released under a new name not yet announced. There are still two companies at work in New Rochelle, but it is expected that it is only a question of time before the headquarters will be transferred to the Pacific coast.

"The Photoplayers," now that the club has chosen a permanent name and completed its incorporation, is preparing to make its first bow before the public with a ball in Shrine Auditorium, the largest dancing floor in Southern California, the night of St. Valentine's Day, February 14. By unanimous vote taken at the last meeting it was decided that it shall be a full dress affair. Even Arthur Mackley, who wanted to go made up as the sheriff, finally voted for the low cut front. The negotiations for a permanent home for the organization, on a scale fitting its dignity and resources, are still in progress, with the prospect that a lease will be signed within the next two weeks.

How many people know that the victory of Luther McCarthy in the ring at Los Angeles New Year's Day, when he defeated Al Palzer and was declared the heavyweight champion of the world, shed luster upon the motion picture industry from two directions? McCarty is a protegé of P. C. Hartigan, director of the Kalem company at Santa Monica. Hartigan has backed him and encouraged him, press agented him and nursed and coddled him since the days when he was altogether unknown. He owes a great deal to Hartigan and concedes it. For another thing McCarthy himself is a motion picture actor, not a very celebrated one, it is true, but he has appeared in the pictures a number of times, likes the work and shows considerable fitness for it. Hartigan, by the way, feels very gloomy about "The Photoplayers." He fears the organization will not last long. While he disproves of the practice of fining members twenty-five cents when they come late to meetings, he declares that his pessimistic predictions are in no way due to the fact that he was the first victim.

Los Angeles now claims to have the largest motion picture theater in the world showing a program of exclusively first run pictures and one weekly feature all for five-cents. The theater itself is not a new one, merely the policy. It is the Grand theater at First and Main streets which was sold January 1, by W. H. Clune to Claude E. Halsell, who immediately announced the new policy. The Grand heretofore has been a licensed house, but Halsell will use independent pictures. For many years the house was the home of legitimate drama. Clune took it over about six months ago and turned it into a motion picture theater. It seats about 1,500 persons and has two balconies. Halsell, the new owner, is a veteran in the exhibiting line. He built and opened the Bijou theater in this city which he later sold and recently has been operating the Gem, which he still holds. He has announced that he will pay especial attention to the music in connection with the films.

Mozart's Grand Avenue theater has been playing the four reel production of "Pilgrim's Progress" this week and, notwithstanding that holiday business was light among the motion picture theaters generally, has been drawing big crowds all week. The management announces that it has arranged for a series of Wagnerian opera film productions and will feature them with Wagner's music. "Siegfried" is to be the first of the series.

Stanley H. Twist, advertising manager for the Chicago office of the Selig Polyscope, has been here on business connected with the Edendale studio. Someone heard a report that Stanley is an orator and dragged him to a meeting of The Photoplayers where he was pushed to his feet and told to "go on and speak." For once the press agent's advance dope was true.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

KANSAS CITY, MO., is in the throes of a censorship agitation. Fifty women members of the Athenaeum, a local organization, recently visited fifty picture shows, and out of the entire number of programs observed picked out only six which they classified as "bad." Five of these were produced by makers independent of the four regular associations of manufacturers, the last was a two-reel subject of a licensed manufacturer. The chairman of the committee in making her report let drop one grain of real wisdom. "In censoring the picture shows," she said, "we should appreciate that there should be no discrimination. If they are to be censored, the same treatment should be accorded to all forms of amusement." In a public address the local chief of police asserts that the city is in need of censorship, but insists that the work should be done by the board of public welfare, not by the police.

As a result of the agitation the assistant city counsellor drafted an ordinance which has been introduced in the city council. It vests control of the pictures in the board of public welfare through one censor. The women of the Athenaeum, who started the agitation, insist that there shall be five on the board of censors, and that their organization shall have one of the number. It looks as if the women will be disappointed, as the sentiment of the local lawmakers seems to favor one paid censor. The ordinance provides for free permits for pictures that are approved. Appeal to the entire board may be taken from the decision of the censor. Also, permits may be revoked at any time.

Additional details as to the pictures to be made by the Pilot Films Corporation, under the guidance of George A. Magie, state that particular attention will be paid to adaptations of works of classical and modern fiction. The first release will be a single reel reproduction of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's "The Two Glasses." Mr. Magie has instituted a novel arrangement of lights, making use of a traveling or trolley scheme, the better to secure fine details. Mr. Magie will not employ a regular stock company. While he will have a leading man and a leading woman, it is designed to make the type fit the character to be portrayed. Two pictures have been finished.

Ramo, one of the new brands of the Film Supply, intends to produce single reel dramas and split comedies. Ray Physioc, who has had much experience in the laboratory end of the film business, will have the company in charge and probably will do some directing. The company will leave for Florida in a few days, there to work until the season permits of its return North. It is expected that work will be started immediately on a studio in this vicinity, to be ready when the company gets back.

The Kalem headquarters in New York City received a cable dispatch from London, stating that at the production of "From the Manger to the Cross" at the Royal Albert Hall on the evening of Sunday, January 5, there were present Queen Amelie of Portugal, the Princess Henry of Battenberg and the Duke and Duchess of Wellington.

Walter Rosenberg of the Savoy theater, in Thirty-fourth street, announces the opening, for January 13, of the Park theater, Columbus Circle, at Fifty-ninth street, formerly the Majestic, with a programme of four pictures, two first runs and two second runs. The house, which is finely appointed and containing 1,800 seats, will be open from 9 o'clock in the morning until midnight. Vitagraph's three-reel feature "The Little Minister," will be shown on the day of its release. There will be an orchestra of twenty pieces. Picture lovers are to be congratulated on this material addition to the few houses where first runs are to be seen.

H. A. Fitzjarrel, of Baltimore, president of the Consolidated Film Supply Company, having offices also in Atlanta, Dallas, and New Orleans, who met with a severe accident about ten weeks ago, has fully recovered. Following a short visit to New York he sailed for Jacksonville, there to spend a vacation.

Mrs. Bronson Howard, on her recent return from Europe, expressed to the Kalem management her anxiety to see the three-reel reproduction which the Kalem company is making of "Shenandoah," the famous play written by her late husband. It is said that the picture is not quite finished. The Kalem players have received material assistance in the making of the picture from local authorities in the territory in which the story is laid. The president of the Board of Trade of Winchester, Va., did everything in his power to help the Kalem director, and when it was impossible to secure the exact spot desired suggested others where the topography and other essentials were identical.

The trustees of the town of Biggs, in Northern California, are making an interesting experiment in moving picture entertainment. Through appointive officials they are conducting a show, charging 10 and 15 cents, displaying specially selected films of educational character chiefly and designed principally for women and children. It is said that the plan will be adopted in two adjoining towns, with dramatic playlets supplementing the picture programme. The intention is to devote any surplus money to the school supply funds.

Among these is "From the Manger to the Cross" for Georgia and Florida, which will be put on in all of the Montgomery houses. Mr. Buchanan returned home on Tuesday, January 7.

CINES AND ECLIPSE NOTES.

Three first-class releases are to be marketed by George Kleine for the week ending January 18, 1913. The program indicates quality as well as variety, for it consists of two splendid dramas and a split reel made up of two excellent comedies.

For the Tuesday Cines, "A Fishermaiden's Heart" is a drama of intense heart-interest, describing the wooing and winning of Stella, the belle of a little fisher-village near the sea. She is one of those girls who appears impervious to the calls of love and laughs her way through life, careless of the lovemaking of the young swains. It is interesting to follow the change of heart which is brought about slowly but surely when she meets the right man. He is forced to arouse her jealousy by pretending to make love to another in order to finally win her, but he is clever enough to allow matters to proceed only so far, before taking advantage of the situation and gaining her consent to marry him.

The reel is completed by a beautiful travelogue subject entitled "The Velino River and Falls," which are situated in central Italy. The film shows us many picturesque views of the river as it wends its way between the grassy banks and finally plunges over the beautiful falls.

"Two Men and a Girl" is billed for the Wednesday Eclipse. It describes a curious adventure in the lives of three young people. It all starts with two young men falling violently in love with a charming actress and one becoming extremely jealous of the other during the struggle for her favor. The series of mistakes which takes place upon the night of the dinner party are quite startling, but are extremely plausible and form a fascinating story. The film will do credit to any program.

For the Saturday Cines, "Taming the Spooks" describes the adventures of two bogus professors of spiritualism, who, with the assistance of a confederate, give a public seance. The two rogues are extremely clever and manage to make a success of their entertainment, until they attempt the trick of having a table move mysteriously out of the room propelled by a string tied to one of the legs and pulled by the confederate out in the hallway. Everything goes well, until the confederate gets into an altercation with a stranger on the stairway and is precipitated into the street, followed by the table and the astonished company. The rapid action and clever acting in the film will provoke the heartiest laughter among the audience.

"The Absent-Minded Lover" is the other comedy on the reel and is also a "side-splitter." The story deals with a young fellow who is very susceptible to the charms of the fair sex and is involved in a great many love affairs at the same time. He unfortunately is extremely absent-minded and mixes up a number of his letters to the various ladies of his affection which causes a great deal of trouble and calls down upon him the wrath of everyone. Exhibitors should not fail to book this capital comedy reel.

LINCOLN J. CARTER TO PRODUCE FOR UNIVERSAL.

Exclusive rights to fifteen of the best and most famous melodramas written by Lincoln J. Carter, the novelist, have been purchased by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and will be produced in motion pictures. The productions will be under the direct supervision of Mr. Carter, who not only will write the scenarios for the various plays, but will also direct the several companies producing them.

Extreme care was exercised in selecting the fifteen famous stories for dramatization in pictures. None but those which will meet with the requirements of the National Board of Censors, and the public demand for "drama without crime" will be used. The list embodies many of the stories upon which is founded the reputation of Mr. Carter as one of the leading dramatists of the twentieth century.

Work of producing the fifteen stories will be started immediately. Preparations of the dramas in scenario form already is under way, and within two or three weeks the finished pictures will be submitted by the studios. In view of the fact that extreme care will be manifested in producing the plays, but one at a time will be staged, to enable Mr. Carter to personally supervise the work.

Included in the list of dramas to which the exclusive motion picture rights have been secured by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and from which selections will be made, are: "The Fast Mail," "Bedford's Hope," "The Tornado," "The Defaulter," "Under the Dome," "In the Heart of Chicago," "The Flaming Arrow," "Down Mobile," "Remember the Maine," "Chattanooga," "The Eleventh Hour," "The Indian's Secret," "Alaska," "The Darkest Hour," "Two Little Waifs," "The Madman" and "The Girl Rangers." Mr. Carter was co-author of the latter drama.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E SINN

WE see many programs for heavy dramas in Music for the Picture, and appreciate them, writes a contributor, but very few programs for comedies. Why don't more of these appear? I am sending the program I played for the Vitagraph's "Four Days a Widow," and the reason I send it is because every musical number I have listed fits into the scene perfectly. Of course I played all these from memory, which is almost necessary on account of the quick changes. (Quite necessary in my opinion, Ed.)

The picture business is on a steady rise here in the West, and the wise managers are realizing that to make the pictures "go" they must have musicians who can play the pictures. Our house here (The Majestic), will be enlarged in January from 450 seating capacity to 1,000; that's going some for a town of 15,000, isn't it? (Here follows the suggestions for music to picture.)

"Four Days a Widow."

1. "So Long Mary" until Helen reads note, then:
2. "Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," then "Lonesome" until title: "In Springdale."
3. "Merry Widow Waltz."
4. "Summertime" till title: "In Chicago."
5. "Dear Delightful Women" (from "Balkan Princess"). "Automobile Honeymoon."
6. "Stein Song" (Bullards) till "Roses."
7. "Who Were You With Tonight?" until Jim drinks water, then:
8. "How Dry I Am" then back to "Who Were You With Tonight?"
9. "Home Sweet Home" in march time until "At Party."
10. "Beautiful Lady" (from "The Pink Lady") until Marjory tells Helen, husband has arrived.
11. Agitato until Marjory's exit, then
12. "Beautiful Lady."
13. "I Want To Marry You" (from "The Earl and the Girl") then quick to:
14. "I Got Rings On My Fingers."
15. Burlesque "Love Me and the World Is Mine."
16. Agitato (As Jim pleads with Marjory) then:
17. "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now?" (from "Prince of Tonight")
18. "There's No Girl Like Your Old Girl" until close.

Hoping these suggestions may be of some help, I am yours,

THOMAS BRUCE, Pianist and Organist,
Majestic Theater, North Yakima, Wash.

Many thanks, friend Bruce. Your program looks like a "catchy" one, and I have no doubt will be of value to many of our readers. I could have wished you would have given "stopping" cues—that is, cues for changing the music in each of the numbers, but after seeing the picture there should be no difficulty in fitting your excellent program to it.

"Reincarnation of Karma."

I had the pleasure of viewing the "Reincarnation of Karma" (Vitagraph), and here append some suggestions for accompanying music:

1. "Egyptian Love Dance" (by Pryor) until title: "E'en 'Neath the Splendor of the Eastern Sky."

First Reel.

2. (Incantation) First part of "Sultan's Dream" (by Bendix) until "Great Buddah Save Me," etc.
3. Isis (Greek intermezzo), play rather slowly until "A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread," etc.
4. "Vision of Salome" (by J. Bodewalt Lampe) until "Snake Thou Art and Snake Thou Shalt Become."
5. Agitato until close of reel.

Second Reel.

1. Any novelette or intermezzo until he begins smoking pipe.
2. First part "Sultan's Dream" until he awakes.
3. Back to No. 1 (or any novelette) until "In India Leslie Becomes Engaged."
4. "In the Soudan" (Oriental music) until musicians exit.
5. Novelette until change of scene.
6. "Imam" until "The Ancient Temple."
7. "Star of India" (by Bratton) until "They Are Shown Qunitraee the Snake."
8. Mysterious until snake changes to woman.
9. First part of "Sultan's Dream" until "If You Would Break the Curse, Give Her This Amulet."
10. Isis (Greek intermezzo) until she puts amulet on neck; then slow down—ritard and diminish for 8 bars.
11. Agitato until he lays her on the table.
12. First part "Sultan's Dream," start pp and increase; two scenes.
13. Very pathetic until end of picture.

For the Incantation (No. 2, first reel) the introduction to "Faust" will be appropriate. Play through two scenes; then first part of "Sultan's Dream."

LOUISE LESTER—"CALAMITY ANNE."

Here is an excellent likeness of Miss Louise Lester, rapidly becoming famous among picture fans in the role of "Calamity Anne." There goes with her a burro, "Woodrow," much loved by the various members of the American Film Mfg. Co's. Santa Barbara studio, who is doing much to make Miss Lester the most famous comedienne in pictures as well as himself the most famous jackass known to cinematography.

Louise Lester.

The "Calamity Anne" series was originated by Director Allan Dwan and is vastly popular already despite the fact that "Calamity Anne" has the long familiarity with work figured in only three productions thus far. The various fortunes of "Calamity," hovering between dire poverty and soaring to blinding heights of financial affluence, are followed in serial form.

Miss Louise Lester has had many years of stage experience prior to her connection with the "Flying A," both in stock and traveling shows and which has made possible for her wonderful interpretation of "Calamity Anne," a hanger-on of mining camps, quick with a gun, fond of a pipe, a Satan with her tongue and temper, but beneath it all a warm and human heart and innate sense of fairness.

It is a more difficult role for a woman to interpret. It is comparatively easy to show this creature of the camps, clad in short riding skirt, boots, wide sombrero hat, sporting a handy six-shooter, in the more laughable guise; but to do so would destroy the real character of "Calamity Anne," for "Calamity Anne" is a woman, subject to the foibles and vanities of woman, and possessed of a woman's heart, a strong, sympathetic nature hid beneath a rough exterior. It requires a genuine artist to portray a rough woman of the camps who can make you laugh good naturedly one moment and bring the quick tears of sympathy the next. Miss Lester does this in "Calamity Anne" productions.

The foremost living author of Germany, Dr. Paul Lindau, called the Nestor of modern Germany literature, has prepared his best-known drama, "The Other Man," for presentation on the silent stage. Dr. Lindau is the artistic director of all the royal playhouses in the city of Berlin. The leading part in the drama will be played by one of the most famous of living German actors, Albert Bassermann. The films will be ready for exhibition within two months. The German press regards the news as most important and gratifying to lovers of the motion picture everywhere.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Prints Its Own.

THE U-Kum Theater, Toronto, sends in a sheaf of programs and George D. Perry writes:

> I enclose copies of some advertising I have been using to good advantage of late. I believe this house has the unique distinction of being the only house in Canada, if not in America, that issues a daily program from its own print shop. I distribute in our immediate locality 1,500 to 2,500 daily, and it has had a surprising effect on business during the dull season.
> While this is possible with me on account of having my own plant, the expense to exhibitors who are not so situated would be considerable. However, during the winter months with rinks, parties, etc., in full swing it is necessary to make a bid for business.

These programs are of two sizes, 3½ by 7½ and 3¾ by 9¾. They are on good quality paper and well printed, one or two are printed on both sides, but most of them are printed only on one. They are well set and here the combination of manager and printer shows up well. There is a proper balance, a weighing of type values that is not to be seen in 95 per cent. of the matter that comes to our desk. The type faces are clean cut, easily read and well proportioned. The lines that should stand out are thrown up in heavy type and the lesser matter is kept down. About the only comment we can make is that in some of the programs the musical selections are too close to the titles of the pictures, which holds down the value of the more prominent. In most of the programs this is not done, the selections being kept down in italics or a light face.

How About You?

There are lots of exhibitors who might use a press with profit. We have an eighteen dollar press with about fifty dollars worth of type that has repaid several times its cost in the past few years merely on the money saved on letter heads, not to mention the convenience of being able to run off a form with twenty or thirty impressions. In most small towns it is better to go to the local paper to get the work done because this carries press notices, but many locality theaters could put in a press with profit. We would like to hear from other exhibitors who can dispute Mr. Perry's suggestion that he is the only manager with his own plant.

One beauty of doing things yourself is that you get the matter out on time. Several of the film makers have a press for leaders and other rush copy because they can get the card for a leader printed in less than an hour where a printing office might require several days to get around to the job.

We take it that Mr. Perry is also a printer. He's a good one, for we seldom see better work.

The Star Starts a Fight.

There have been doings in Portland where the People's Amusement Company holds forth. Melvin G. Winstock booked The Star of Bethlehem and invited the ministers to an advance showing of the subject. Instead of coming to see what it might be, one of the local ministers reared right up and damned everything between the screen and the box office. That gave Winstock an elegant chance to say what he thought, so good a chance that he could have afforded to hire some minister to do just that thing. More liberal ministers accepted the invitation and there was a goodly showing, but meantime there was an opportunity to put up a plea for pictures in general in the news columns under a heading that caused the story to be read by many not directly interested in the pictures. This narrow bigotry no longer reacts on the pictures the way it would have done a few years ago and the People's Amusement Company had all the best of it.

More Postcards.

Some weeks ago there was made mention of a post card scheme, the cards being handled by the Exhiibtors' Advertising and Specialty Company. Then only the licensed players were announced, but now the list has been increased by the addition of the independent leaders and others of the licensed side and the Kraus Manufacturing Company announces that more are under way. They also report large sales of the special cards for The Star of Bethlehem. Easter is early this year and the Star should be in demand until after March. They are in the same finish as the post cards and portrait posters.

Real Goods.

Real pigskin cigar envelopes were sent out by the London office of the Selig Company for Christmas. Of course the diamond star appears on the front, but apart from a brief advertisement the case is as elegant as could be desired by a man of fashion. To further show that he is "on the job," E. H. Montagu sends a copy of the London News in which it is announced that to the writers of the first five hundred letters explaining why they like Selig films will be awarded a Selig puzzle. Each is to carry the name and address of the theater attended and we imagine that English exhibitors will presently receive several tons of letters from the Selig office proving that they should use every Selig released.

B. Nichols, of the M. P. Sales Agency, sends the same issue marked to show the B. & C. Company on its way to Jamaica just like an American globe-trotting organization. Other advertising from Mr. Nichols gives the information that The Chronicles of Don Q., a singularly interesting series of stories appearing in Pearson's some time ago, have been filmed. It is a pity we shall not see them over here. Perhaps we shall later, for Mr. Nichols has an American hustle about him.

Just As We Said.

When we said that the Tokio cigarette coupon scheme was more or less of a trap for small boys it was argued that most states prohibit children under sixteen from purchasing tobacco and that in any event the scheme appealed to men and women who might be induced to visit the theaters for the first time and so become regulars. Here's what actually happened at the box office of one of the Philadelphia theaters. Two small boys present coupons. One has ten, the other but nine. The ticket seller notes the deception and turns them back. The would-be swindler fishes in his pocket for a nickel but his slightly older companion checks him.

"Don't be a fool. Buy a pack of cigs with the nickel. Then you'll have the ten coupons and we'll have the smokes, besides."

It is a bit of business that in slightly varied form is being repeated all over the country and yet the apologists for the scheme contend that the coupons will not interest small boys, because they cannot obtain the cigarettes.

The United Cigar Stores in New York are pretty decent about selling to those under age, but there are older boys, would-be men of seventeen and eighteen, who will purchase the packs for a commission of two cigarettes from the box.

Wall Knew Best.

Possibly you remember S. E. Wall, of West Jefferson, Ohio. He's the man who ran a street fair single handed when the rest of the populace left him in the lurch. Here's a characteristic letter:

> Believing that a great many exhibitors would break away from vaudeville if they thought they dared, it might interest them to know how the "dare" worked in my case. You will see by the card that I am enclosing that I had a vote on the question, whether or not they wanted to pay 10c to hear an orchestra of 4 pieces—they most emphatically did not—at least that was the way they voted on it—well I did not make known the result of the vote but put the orchestra in, but switched it from Tuesday to Saturday and cut out the usual act of vaudeville that I had been running on Saturday and put on another reel of pictures, making 4 reels and the orchestra for 10c. That was four weeks ago and the orchestra has made a decided hit; a number of my best patrons expressing themselves as being greatly pleased with the change and I have not heard of one complaint about the vaudeville being discontinued; which fact only goes to show that the patrons really did not know themselves whether they wanted the orchestra or vaudeville at 10c. (understand me small towns can't afford both), but since they have heard the orchestra they have "lost their taste" for vaudeville and I am certainly glad they have.

In case you want to try the scheme here is a copy of the vote.

> Would you be willing to pay 10c to hear an orchestra of four pieces play the pictures each Tuesday night?
> You will confer a favor by writing "yes" or "no" at the bottom of this card.

Mr. Wall is a manager. He knew that no one but himself knew how the vote went, so he went ahead and gave them music instead of vaudeville. The supposition was that this was what had been voted for, so it was accepted as the thing and when tried it made better than vaudeville.

Try it yourself and see how it works. Try it two or three weeks, to give it a chance to get noised around that the vaudeville has been dropped and see the change in the character of your audience as the better class of people drop in.

In this connection we are glad to note that the Criterion theater, Rutherford, N. J., gave up vaudeville, put it back, then hustled back to the straight show again, and now Carey Wilson is booking up everything in the way of a Licensed special that he can lay his hands on. It's a lot cheaper than vaudeville and yet gives greater satisfaction.

Uses Postcards.

L. E. Barger, of the Motion Picture theater, Geneva, N. Y., uses postcards of the players for his advertising, printing on the back the announcement for the week. Where the card is not used for mailing it would be better without the postcard block and if Mr. Barger or any other manager is interested we can tell where the cards may be had without printing on the back, leaving the full surface for the weekly program or other advertising. The idea of the scheme is a good one for the cards are preserved where almost any other form of advertising would not be kept. Mr. Barger speaks of other novelties he will send if we are interested. We are. We are always interested in good idas.

Another Prize Contest.

The Fresno theater, Fresno, California, has been runing a prize scheme in connection with the Fresno Herald, the prizes being given ostensibly by the paper. Fifty prizes are given ranging from a pass for two for one year and five dollars to a pass for one for two weeks. In return for the pass prizes the theater gets two pages printed in two colors, one biack and green for Kerry Gow and the other in red and black for Kings of the Forest. The scheme is this:

> Take a peek, either today or tomorrow, at the lions and tigers in "The Kings of the Forest" and then get out your pencils, pads and paper and draw one of the lions that you will have seen. Also write a short story of 100 words about lions, how and where they live, etc.
> Be sure to hand in the drawings and stories at the Fresno Photo-Theater on or before Saturday, December 14, 8 p. m.
> (Note: It is preferable that you make your drawing from the "Kings of the Forest" lions, but, in case you cannot come to the theater, you may draw a picture of any lion, and any story that you like.)

You'll always find some live paper ready to come in with you in an exchange of space for a circulation scheme, and even if you cannot afford to pay for your advertising you can get displays if you will work it adroitly. The Fresno got two full pages and made mighty good use of the space because those Kehrleins know how to lay out their ads to the best advantage.

Only chldren under thirteen may compete and the advertising is directed to them, but it is safe to say that their elders heard all about the scheme and the wonderful animal picture at the Fresno, and so they went along to give the children a chance to win the prize—and to see the pictures themselves.

It Moves.

Anything that moves is more than double as valuable as advertising, and we are indebted to William Wright, of the Kalem company, for a hint as to a scheme worked by H. E. Ellison of the Colonial theater, Denver. Mr. Ellison knows the value of movement and the moving trademark on the Kalem titles gave him the idea of putting a motor behind his banner when a Kalem was featured and revolving the trade mark about a hundred revolutions per minute. For Kerry Gow he is going to elaborate on this by having the forge scene. Red lights will be used for the forge fire and the motor will have a trip that will cause the cut-out arm of the smith to hammer on the anvil.

Of course it costs a little for current, but a small motor uses very little and the movement will hold people who would pass a straight banner a dozen times a day and never see it. There used to be a store in town that had a crowd about its windows from morning until night six days a week and all through the use of an electric fan and some live ideas. The time has gone when the mere use of paper represented the height of attainmnt in the advertising line. Get your motor and put it to work. Anyone can rig the Kalem trade mark so that it will revolve. A few modifications will ring the Lubin bell, flap the Vitagraph or American wings, let the Pathe rooster nod its head or work some special effect evolved from a one sheet. Try it and let's hear what you have done.

Two Cards.

The Empress Theater, Gordon, Neb., discusses intelligently the question of small town advertising. Its manager writes:

> The Advertising department of the "World" is the part of the journal that strikes me best, although the other parts are very good. But never yet have I seen advertising that can be used to advantage in small towns such as this; that is, towns under one thousand. Now here I find that hand bills are of not much value. They pass; but results are not what they should be. And in plain talk, IT GETS OLD. I have learned a great deal through the columns of your journal, and feel as I owe it a debt, if my methods of advertising have helped me. And I know there are lots of exhibitors that would advertise in small towns; but the cost is too much for the results. I am enclosing you only two copies of advertising put out by me last week. Sample No. 1 is mailed by placing in an envelope and stamped, some of them are placed in stores, windows, etc. Sample No. 2 was mailed in post card style. I find that this gives me good results.
> Although you may say in such small towns it would not be necessary to advertise, I have found out that although everyone knows there is a picture show every night, you have to remind them of it ever so often; and that is what I am doing. In order to help me through the future, I wish you would "pass judgment" upon my humble efforts. But first and last, let me say that these simple little "stunts" have packed the house to the brim.

We think that newspaper advertising is meant in the opening paragraph.

Advertise Always.

Most assuredly the small town theater must advertise. In fact, the smaller the town the greater the need of advertising. The people know that there is a theater in town but they must be jogged all the time to be induced to come. In the city the manager can depend upon a certain amount of transient trade to help out his regular patronage, but in the small town he must make regulars of half the place if he would show to a profit. He must coax the man who comes once a week to come twice, he must get the bi-weekly visitor to come nightly, and he must do it through advertising, first to get the people and then to keep the interest up.

Card number two is so effective that we are sorry we could not get it to the other managers before Christmas. It was mailed to get to the addresses on Thanksgiving morning and it reads:

WILL YOU
Appreciate the efforts of your wife on that dinner today?
THEN TRY
To show it by taking her to
THE MATINEE
At The Empress, Thursday, Nov. 28, 2:45 P. M.
Change of Program in the Evening.

It is a plain but clear piece of printing and it has the "punch," the business-getting quality. The second is an invitation to see Vanity Fair. It is set in the old fashioned diamond shape in Old English, the type that of all others is an abomination to the eyesight especially when it is such a small letter as this.

Back in the dark ages of typography Old English was supposed to be the last word in elegance because most copper plates were cut in that face. Some rural printing offices still cling to the tradition, but the live printers have switched to something that can be read without involving a subsequent visit to the occulist and this printer has played up the fact that it is "scintillating with flashes of Satire comedy and deep grasps (!) of Pathos" in type half as large again as the title of the subject. "Deep grasps of Pathos" may be intensely interesting but we would go to jail for the murder of a printer if we were handed a job like that. The advertisement is well worded and would have pulled more business if it could have been more easily read. The answer is that the house was packed anyhow, but we do not think that it was brought through the advertisement. For invitation forms copperplate gothic or engraver's shaded is a lot better and more up to date. The Empress management has the right idea, but the editorial boss won't let us tell what we think of that printer.

Getting the Interest.

In the Cleveland Leader appears a new stunt in the way of a guessing contest. Scenes from five photoplays and pictures of Miss Alice Joyce, Miss Turner and King Baggot appear in a layout. There are quite a number of theaters in the league and the scenes are from plays to be seen in those theaters the current week. Identification qualified for participation in a distribution of prizes as this extract explains:

> Here is an easy one, folks:
> You do not need to be a real "picture fan" to win a book of six free tickets, good at any league theater, this week. Certainly you can identify one of the five scenes from photoplays shown above, or can tell the name of one of the popular players whose picture appears here. Even if you go to the theaters only occasionally you have seen one or more of these actors. Go to the picture theaters this week and you will see them, and one or more of the scenes pictured here. You have until Friday to send in your answer to the puzzle. The Sunday Leader will give away 200 books, each containing six admission tickets good for any league theater in the city at any performance during next week to those who send in the best answers. Remember, you do not have to answer all the picture puzzles. By having a single one right you may become a winner of one of these free ticket books. Send in your answer by Friday and the books will be sent to winners by first mail Monday. If there are more than 200 correct answers, awards will be made with regard for the neatness of the answers submitted. Incorrect answers do not count against any correct answer you may write. Fill in the blank or write your answers in letter or on post card and send to Photoplay Editor Leader. The Leader wants all the picturegoers in Cleveland to participate in this interesting contest.

This is not unlike Mr. Trigger's scheme save that it has the collaboration of one of the leading papers and offers subjects on exhibition instead of back numbers. You may be able to get the local paper interested in trying a modification of the idea.

In passing the Leader has in Ralph P. Stoddard an editor who can write intelligently upon picture topics.

Some Tallygrams.

Readers of the Motion Picture Story Magazine are familiar with "Flossie C. P.," of the Inquiry Department. Her naive comments and her thirst for information have made her almost internationally famous. She's a clever little picture fan out in Los Angeles and the other day she broke into the Tallygram, the house program of Tally's Broadway Theater. We reproduce the comment and that of the week following.

> We received a letter last week signed, "Flossie," and stating that "Flossie and the Crowd" regular patrons of this theater were tired of the educational and scenic pictures and would much rather see more story pictures and fewer Pathe Weeklies and the like.
> Now, we like Frank Criticism. It gives us an opportunity to make improvements in the show that might not occur to us otherwise, and we hope that MORE OF OUR PATRONS WILL WRITE to us and give their opinions on the subject. We like the Topical and Scenic films ourselves but then we don't pay to see the show, and you, who do pay, may look at it differently. Let's hear from you and we'll publish the results.
> Address, Editor THE TALLYGRAM.
> FLOSSIE—Write again. We like your letters.
> We have received lots of letters from our patrons but none so far have agreed with "Flossie" in disliking the scenic and educational films.
> "Picture Fan" says he would rather see one good travel or scenic picture than a dozen of the tom-fool pictures that are so often shown. He adds that if we keep on just as we have, we will please the majority of our patrons very well. Thanks, Picture Fan, for "them kind woids." It seems that I'm not the only one to brag on Tally's show.

We are glad to see the theater stand up for the scenics. It is a pity that this appreciation of their value is not more general. Lots of houses will send back to the exchange a first run scenic and take instead a riant commercial play. The people who like scenics are not the sort who complain when they are not run. They just stay away. Youngsters like Flossie who have "crushes" on the players kick for plays, but there are others who like the scenics and the good industrials and the man who keeps his program clear of them is not properly catering to his clientele. Do not stop because the few object. Please all comers.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Do Not Send Scripts.

WILL readers of this department please note that The Moving Picture World is not in the market for scripts and does not offer criticism? Scripts sent in for sale or criticism are returned unread—if postage accompanies the same.

Wants Scripts.

Karl R. Coolidge, of Keystone, writes:

> Just a line this time. I would appreciate the insertion of a notice in your photoplaywright page to the effect that we are really in need of good comedy scripts. We want snappy, clever stories—something out of the general rut—and not the mechanical, made-to-order stuff. Not buying any sleuth stories at present. I give all stories received careful consideration, and endeavor to return those unavailable on the same day as received. Would particularly emphasize the fact that we want the synopsis only. We expect our contributors to be courteous enough to enclose stamped and self-addressed envelopes.
> Will be glad at any time to cast any of our pictures for you. With the best regards of the season.

Will Use Names.

Those who write for the Lubin company will in future find their names on their filmed pictures, save when a story is completely done over from a faulty script, and even then the writer will be given credit for the idea where there is enough of the idea left. Ira D. Lowery, the Lubin general manager, has been considering the move for some time and has swung into the "use" column, and having done so will do it with his usual completeness and use names on all subjects.

Several times we have been urged to start a crusade in favor of the use of names on all scripts, but we have held back because we think that the time will not be long before all companies do adopt the scheme, and it better to wait with patience than to force the idea. We rather expected such a move from the Lubin people because they have kept well to the front in other matters. Mr. Lowery is always ready to pay top prices for material that is worth it, and he backs up his photoplay editor in a manner that makes Mr. McCloskey's work doubly effective.

Glad Tidings.

Joe Brandt advises us that they have a "really" photoplay department at the Universal. The department has been systematized under the direction of Mr. Goodall, and things will be run on a business basis. They have been trying to shape things up ever since the move to the Mecca building.

Listen to Mr. Brandt. "We are out for quality, and if we can get it we will pay the right price for it."

The Universal script room has turned so many triple somersaults that writers have become wary, but it listens like the dawn of a new day. There is no reason why the Universal should not pay $50 and $75, and we think that Mr. Brandt appreciates that fact as well as we do. Try them out.

From outside the office we have evidence that they are reducing chaos to order, though many scripts have been lost in the process. If you can't get the old script back, copy the carbon, tell them you have done so and try again there or elsewhere.

Fixing Over.

We've been fixing over a couple of old scripts lately. They did not wholly please us when we sent them out, but we could do no better at the time, so we shipped them and they came back after many days.

We confess that we were a little surprised to find out how much easier it was to fix them up three or four months after they had been written than just after they had come off the typewriter.

Originally they had been written with certain well defined ideas in mind. The next day or the next week they were revised with that same general idea in mind and they followed the same course. Three months later we had purged our mind of any set formula for that story, and so, taking only the main idea, we could write an entirely different chain of circumstances.

Instead of trying to rewrite a story the week after or as soon as it gets back from the first port of call, give your attention to another story and permit the first one to get completely out of mind. Then start in to fix up and you'll probably be surprised yourself to find out how elastic the idea is. You can twist and turn it like a rubber band where before the incidents were like a steel rod, harsh and inflexible.

And by the same token, dig down in the box and bring out the old-timers. They may not be good, but they may be willing to be made good, now that you are no longer tied to the original development.

For the Sake of Peace.

For the sake of peace in the family we print this letter from William H. Kitchell. The funny part is that Mr. Kitchell really means it. At the time the deed was done he wrote us about it and wanted a statement made then. Mr. McCloskey, on the other hand, regarded it merely as part of the day's work, but for the sake of peace here goes. Mr. Kitchell writes:

In "Comments on the Films" I find my name mentioned in an extremely favorable review as the author of a recent Lubin comedy-drama entitled "The Good for Nothing.' May I make a correction?

As it was a clean, live story that took with a "punch" with the various photoplay critics, I willingly admit inventing the title and the original scenario. This I mailed to Lawrence S. McCloskey, the Lubin editor, who returned it to me with many valuable suggestions for the revision of the script. These were so many and practical that when I finished the "revised edition" there was little left of the original plot, save the title and the MS. cover. This being the result, the authorship should have been credited outright to the genial editor from Lubinville. Why it was not is as far beyond me as Jupiter. As he is of a retiring disposition—of a type most abnormal in editors and photoplay men—I hate to drag him into the 400-volt d. c. light of publicity, but I believe in giving a good man his due.

I am particularly anxious to make the correction because it is a novel experience for a photoplay writer to see his name at the top of a film criticism. Several of mine that have been given especial mention have been announced as written by the studio director or editor. In most cases, I was more than satisfied with the substitution, as the director who can "put over" a photoplay to the approval of the author is as rare as a wart on an onion. In this instance I was credited with a script that didn't belong to me; which makes my renunciation the more regrettable. Anyhow, the "Good For Nothing" should be credited to Mr. McCloskey.

Short Scenes.

The other day we suggested that the action stayed too long in one place. "But," objected the writer, "there is something happening every second." That was very true, but it was happening too long without a change of location, and we showed that by switching back and forth between the previous scene and this there could be created eight short scenes telling the action of the two long ones, but telling it in more snappy fashion because these two scenes were done in action that was not of necessity consecutive.

Sometimes in a serious play it is necessary to play one scene in one hundred and fifty or two hundred feet, but in comedy the more rapid the alternation of scenes, so that the action be held consecutive and consistent, the better. No comedy should run twenty scenes to the thousand feet. It should run forty scenes to that length, and it would be better in thirty scenes and only five hundred feet.

With the Famous Players.

This is B. P. Schulberg, of the Famous Players Company. "Bennie" Schulberg was formerly a newspaper man, but was coaxed over to the film business, when Rex needed a photoplay editor. When Rex went into the Universal combination and lost its home rule, Imp moved into the studio and Schulberg became an Imp, but the departure of Mr. Porter for the Famous Players resulted in Schulberg following him up to the Times Building. Our interest in the Schulberg person is purely academic at present as he does not buy scripts, the company producing only dramatic successes with the original stars in the leading roles.

B. P. Schulberg.

Second Time Around.

Did you ever stop to consider that a man might try to sell you a pair of shoes to-day and fail and make a sale in three or six months? It's the same way with photoplays. A friend of ours had a script. It was a rather discouraging sort of thing in the way it kept coming back, and at last it had the moth balls tied to it. There were only about four markets at best and they had all turned it down.

The other day we suggested that if he sent it to one or these four markets he might be pleasantly surprised. The answer rather suggested that the advice had been complied with that our feelings might not be hurt. He all but said he had wasted eight cents worth of stamps and two envelopes because he rather liked us.

Then we got another letter telling about the check and how much better it looked than the useless script. There never had been anything the matter with the script except that the market was overstocked with that sort of stuff. Then the stock was exhausted and the company that once had rejected the script was in the market for that sort and was glad to buy it. Watch your market and you'll find that there is a second time on earth for most of the stuff that is good, but watch the market closely.

Branching Out.

The December Photoplay Author announces the addition of C. B. Hoadley to its staff. "Pop" will write a series of twelve articles on photoplay. The same issue carries the advertisement that Mr. Hoadley will read and criticize scripts for a dollar each. As he announces in his advertisement, he has assisted hundreds of writers in the past and thinks it about time that he got some return for what to now has been a self-imposed labor. We don't see any reason why he should not make a charge for his advice, and we do not know anyone better qualified to perform this service than Mr. Hoadley, who has had long experience both as writer and editor. He has written hundreds of plays that have been produced, has purchased hundreds of others and knows every wrinkle of the making, for he has been connected with several of the leading companies in the business and is now editor and writer for the Powers brand of the Universal. And the better part is that whatever he does he does squarely and earnestly. Here's luck to him.

Remember.

Just because there is some snow on the ground now and then and the steam heat sizzles through the pipes, do not forget that summer is coming along presently. If you have a script that must be played in the open, write it now and put it away to be sent out along about May. Do it now while it is fresh in your mind, but do not send it out until there is a chance that you can make a sale. There is no fun in paying for scripts now and letting them lie until June. Hold on to them yourself until May, then send them out.

"Going Up."

George A. Posner, of Los Angeles, sends a clipping from a local paper in which it develops that in the intervals of writing plays he runs an elevator in a Los Angeles hotel, having graduated into that job from the bell hop's bench. We hope that this does not come to the ears of the correspondence schools or they'll flood the Hotel Reporter with advertisements, using George as the horrible example.

If you can write good plays it doesn't matter whether you are a bell hop or a banker, but not many bellboys and few bankers score success in the writing line. For every Posner there are dozens of failures, but any man who can write really new plots in novel fashion can get ahead.

The Proper Spirit.

F. C. Rebstock, in explaining why he likes this department says, "I refer mainly to the articles by the fellows that have landed some of their work for it helps the novice to keep on the move. No matter how fast the rejections come in, he feels that if some other fellow has put one over he can, too."

That's the right way to feel about it. If the other fellow can get over you can if you try and write the sort of stuff he must have written instead of sitting back in your chair and wailing about pull, and influence and all that sort of stuff.

In the majority of the studios the only pull is good work and novel ideas. The man who is foisted on the studio through influence doesn't last long enough to kick about. The fellow that sticks must make good, and the fellow who makes good regularly is pretty certain to stick whether he gets with a studio or free lances.

A rejection slip is not a cheerful thing to consider, but if you only could realize it, the rejection slip merely means that much more of your apprenticeship complete. The successful author of to-day with a contract or a guarantee is merely the novice of a few years ago. It was through his rejection slips that he learned to write what was wanted in the way it was wanted and lots of the rejections were more helpful than the acceptances.

Keep plugging and you'll land. Keep kicking and the kicks will prove boomerangs.

Who Shall Decide?

"Who shall decide when doctor's disagree?"

On the one hand we have directors who want a synopsis and no plotted action. On the other there are producers who want the action but no synopsis.

Three weeks ago a director declared to us that the average photoplaywriter spent so much time on the action that he lost sight of the plot. Now comes an equally clever stage manager who advances his belief that the story should be told so fully and completely in the action that no synopsis is necessary. We rather like his reason. He declares that the director is just as apt to supply from memory as the author. In other words, the director, having read the script, sees the story in the action, supplying the missing parts from his memory precisely as does the author who writes his synopsis first and amplifies it into a continuity of action afterward. If he has only the plot of action, the story must appear in that plotted action or not at all. Then, working from that plot it follows that the action, scene by scene, is complete in itself. The director supplies the gaps from memory in reading the play, but he does not fill in these gaps in the making of the disjointed scenes and the result is an incomplete photoplay.

The logical way is to get the idea well placed mentally and then write it in action as it plays. Write the synopsis from that action. If this is done the 250-word synopsis does not bother and the story is all where is should be, in the plotted action. We do not see that an author gives time to the action to the detriment of the idea since the idea should suggest the action. The real photoplay is a story in action and whether the thought or the action be written first it does not matter. The main point is to get it down right. Since the photoplay is a story written in action, it is better to write it in action and then condense for the synopsis.

If your idea is "something about a dog saving a little girl," it is not a complete idea but merely a germ. Wait until you have each scene thought out or at least an idea of the run of scenes. Then when you write, the labor of putting in the scenes will not interfere with the development of the plot nor the elaboration of the plot confuse the planning of the scenes. The point of development to be aimed at is that condition of mental training wherein the idea falls naturally into proper scenes without conscious effort. This leads automatically to the well developed script in which the scenes follow each other logically and smoothly and not as a series of disjointed incidents.

This generally comes only through training and experience, but it will surely come if you have it in you to write a play. Work to that end and you can suit either style of director or any other that may happen to develop, but remember that it is work and work alone that will do it.

Miss Gauntier Wants.

Miss Gene Gauntier writes from 737 Tallyrand Avenue, Jacksonville, Fla.: "Will you please announce through your column that the Gene Gauntier Feature Players Company is in the market for three-reel subjects of any kind that may be taken in Florida? We have rivers, ocean, lumber camp, turpentine forests and sawmills close at hand, and the stories may be either modern or of the Civil War period. None but unusually strong multiple reel scenarios with thrilling situations and strong plots will be considered, and the remuneration will be as good as the stories. Mr. Olcott joins me in wishing you a happy and prosperous New Year."

Inquiries

NOTE—Replies cannot be sent by mail. State name of character. Do not ask for "leads" or "that man." Addresses cannot be given here, but a list of studio addresses will be sent for a stamped and self-addressed envelope. Only questions of general interest will be answered. Replies cannot be repeated.

J. N.—L. A. Carhart advises J. N. that the "magazine" given with the "New York Sunday World" of December 22, carries a short biography of Miss Mary Pickford, as well as her portrait. This is probably what was asked for. Mr. Carhart should find the information he asks in a more recent issue than his letter.

ORIENT—We do not "get" that Broncho Billy. You are correct as to the Lubin.

H. E. W.—Tony O'Sullivan, a man, now with Biograph, was the Bedelia of the Reliance "Bedelia" series.

E. F. M.—Do not ask for "leads" please, but call the characters by name. In "Brutality" the leads were Walter C. Miller and Miss Mae Marsh. In "A Cry for Help" the leads seem to be Mr. Miller and Miss Clair McDowell. See below.

A. J. N.—We do not place Miss Young with any company at present. August True was the girl in Eclair's "The Girl from the Country." Lionel Barrymore was the tramp in "A Cry for Help." Miss Sweet does not appear regularly. We do not know yet who replaced Miss Trunelle and Mr. Prior in Majestic. Ed. Dillon and Miss Peggy Reid were the husband and wife in "She is a Pippin."

G. F. G.—You're letting us off easy. Miss Gardner played in many pictures for the Vitagraph. Then she headed her own company. That fact did not prevent the Vitagraph from releasing pictures already made. They may release some more, for that matter, if they happen to have them. Owen Moore is with Victor.

W. R.—Lionel Barrymore was the minister in "The New York Hat."

F. E. C.—Miss Dorothy Gish was the girl in "My Hero." We believe that she is now with "A Good Little Devil" company, though her sister remains with the Biograph.

ROSEBUD—It is not possible at present to obtain Universal casts.

J. S.—In "Blood Will Tell" the elder Fairfax was Barney Sherry, the younger was W. B. Myers.

BETSEY—"Blind Love" has been announced. Read the back numbers. We have no record of the Vitagraph title you give. Miss Florence Barker, on leaving Biograph, went abroad to the Pathe company, and returned to play with the Powers company. We do not deal with the marriages of players, but Buster Johnson is the son of one of the Lubin cameramen. We have lost trace of Miss Gladys Field.

MRS. W. S. McP.—Turn to the Universal advertisement for the address.

D. E. B.—Miss Mary Pickford and Edwin August were the Biograph players for whom you ask. Jack, in "The Indian Mutiny," was James Morrison. You can obtain recent back numbers of the publishers.

CURLS—See above for your reply to the Biograph question. Lux films are made in France. We have no personal opinion of the films of any maker—at least not for publication. This is the inquiry, not the critical, department.

MISS H.—The poor boy in "The Ladder of Life" was Harry Benham. We have not heard that Miss Sweet has left the Biograph.

ISABEL—Pathe made "The Gambler's Reformation" and the "Spendthrift's Reform," but not a "Gambler's Reform." In the former George Gebhart was the leading man. In the latter, Paul Pantzer was the lead. Please be exact, as frequently titles are nearly or quite duplicated.

W. R. S.—Kinemacolor pictures may be projected through an ordinary projection machine, but in that case they give only black and white pictures. A special attachment may be had whereby the color screens are operated. This may be attached to some forms of the regular machines, and will then give colored pictures when the film is run through at the rate of 32 pictures a second, or double the regular speed. "Code" means that the word following may be used in place of the more lengthy title in telegraphing or cabling orders. The idea is to make one word take the place of several and save tolls. We have not run such an article as your third question suggests. Perhaps the "Scientific American" can give you the information. They have had several articles along those lines, and probably can supply the dates.

Rules and Regulations.

BY courtesy of Mr. N. W. Reed, Inspecting Engineer, Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pacific, San Francisco, Cal., I am in receipt of a booklet containing the specifications for installation of moving picture machines, Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pacific. I have carefully looked over this book, which contains matter equal to three pages of The Moving Picture World, and have concluded to publish almost the whole, with comments. But let me say that this is not done with, primarily, any thought of fault finding, but simply to point out such mistakes as have been made. I wish, before taking up the text matter, to compliment the compilers of the rules on the fact that they have gotten away from the idiotic idea of limiting the width of an operating room observation port to four inches, and its height to twelve inches. I would like, in this connection, to call the undivided attention of the various authorities to an idea of my own, in the shape of a sliding port, which will be set forth fully in the new handbook.

Specifications for Installation of Moving Picture Machines.

> (1) Operating Room: Machine must be placed in an enclosure or house made of suitable fireproof material; must be properly ventilated, properly lighted and large enough for operator to walk freely on either side of or back of machine. All openings into this operating room must be arranged so as to be entirely closed by doors or shutters constructed of the same or equally good fire-resisting material as the rest of the enclosure. Doors or covers must be arranged so as to be held normally closed by spring hinges or equivalent devices. The operating room must not be used for the storage of anything not used in connection with the operation of the machine. Rectifiers, motor generators or other similar devices, must not be located in the operating room. Shelves for rewind and tools must be not larger than ten inches by forty inches and there must be not more than one shelf for each machine.
> A—Size: All operating rooms to be at least 6 ft. 6 in. high, with floor space to vary according to the number of machines in them, as follows:
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | One picture machine | 7 x 8 feet |
> | One picture machine and one stereopticon | 9 x 8 feet |
> | Two picture machines | 10 x 8 feet |
> | Two picture machines and one stereopticon | 12 x 8 feet |
> B.—Openings: There shall be not more than two openings per machine in the operating room, one for the operator's view and one for the machine. Opening for machine shall be 8 inches high and 12 inches long. Operator's view window shall be 10 inches wide and 12 inches high.
> C.—Automatic Shutters: All openings shall be provided with sheet-iron shutters which slide freely in metal grooves. The shutters shall be made of iron 1-16 inch thick and be 10 x 14 inches for machine openings and 12 x 14 inches for operator's window, thus overlapping the openings one inch on all sides. The grooves in which the shutter slides shall be at least 24 inches long and be made of iron 1-16 inch in thickness. Shutters must be held open by the use of a fine combustible cord so arranged that the shutters may easily be released by hand. Shutters may be arranged to slide horizontally if a strong spiral spring or weight suspended by a metallic chain is attached in such a manner as to close the shutter quickly in case of a fire within the operating room.
> D.—Ventilation: Vent pipes should be placed over each machine and be not less than twelve inches in diameter, and must extend through walls or roof to the outside of building. When pipes extend through concealed places, or between floor joists, they must be made of double thickness, with one inch air space between the two pipes. Joints in pipes to be lock seamed. If the operating room is placed against an outside brick wall of the building a large opening may be made through the wall for ventilation, which need not be equipped with self-closing shutter, providing there is no combustible material on the front of the building.

Regarding the first clause: If the operating room is properly constructed there is no reason why it should not be located in the usual place. By "properly constructed," I mean having walls of concrete, hollow tile or brick, ample vent flues, and the shutters which will automatically close within two or three seconds of the starting of a fire, there is no reason why the operating room should not be installed in the usual place near the entrance, since, in that case, there would be no flame, smoke or anything else coming from the operating room, no matter how fierce the fire might be inside.

Clause 1, Operating Room: The term "suitable fireproof material," were it not dealt with further on, would be altogether too indefinite, since it leaves to the discretion of possibly some minor official the decision as to what would or would not be "suitable." "Must be properly ventilated" is a provision I like to see. In this clause it is ordered that the shutters covering the openings must be constructed of the same or equally good fire-resisting material with the rest of the enclosure; but in clause C this is directly contradicted, because a direct specification is made that all shutters shall be 1-16 inch iron, and of such size so as to overlap the openings by one inch. It is ordered that rectifiers, motor generators, or other similar devices must not be located in the operating room, which is wrong from any and every point of view. The operating room is exactly where such devices ought to be located, and there is absolutely no good reason why they should not be placed there. The Pacific Board is decidedly wrong in this. If the board thinks there is danger of fire through accidental contact of film with such devices let them require a wire or perforated metal guard. We are told that shelves for rewind and tools must not be larger than ten by forty inches, and that there must not be more than one shelf for each machine. This, I presume is designed to prevent the overcrowding of operating rooms. From that point of view, is a very good rule. Clause A is excellent, and complies with the usual accepted custom, except that, as it stands, one could be prevented from having a room larger than the requirement set forth. Of course it is not to be supposed that any official would be idiotic enough to take that kind of a stand, but the rule, instead of setting forth a minimum, sets forth an absolute requirement, and that is wrong. Clause B is the one I spoke of in the beginning and I again wish to compliment the Pacific Underwriters for not following the insane idea of an observation port four inches wide. Ten inches in width is all right, though twelve would be a little better where one has a large picture and a short throw. Nevertheless, ten inches will do very nicely. Twelve inches, however, is not sufficient in height. It should be twenty-four inches, covered with a sliding shutter in which is an opening as set forth in the coming Handbook. The first paragraph in clause C is not made subject of criticism, though of late I have been inclined to favor asbestos millboard shutters, by reason of the fact that they drop with less noise. The second clause, however, is very weak in that it does not make any provision for a single master cord, holding all shutters, the same to be brought down over the machine openings and film box where it will burn in two instantly when a fire starts, nor does it make provision for soaking this cord in inflammable wax, or inserting a strip of film in its length, which would instantly burn in two. This also will be set forth fully and in detail in the new Handbook. Clause D cannot be criticised where there is more than one machine. However, I see no reason for requiring two, three or perhaps four vent pipes, where one of ample size would serve exactly the same purpose, and serve it, it seems to me, just as well. The chief weakness of this clause lies in the fact that with only one machine there would be but one twelve-inch vent pipe. Now a burning film in a one-machine room will make just as much smoke and flame as it would were there two machines and two vent pipes, and one twelve-inch pipe is not sufficient to carry off the smoke and flame fast enough so that neither will show around the crevices of the shutters, thus alarming the audience. Another weak point lies in the fact that the pipe is not required to be made double throughout its entire length. Supposing the ceiling of the operating room is four feet below the ceiling of the auditorium, and that this single metal pipe gets red hot for that distance, how long would the sight of that red hot pipe take to stampede an audience? The one vital thing our lawmakers and other authorities seem to overlook, is the fact that fire prevention rules should be based primarily on preventing the audience from becoming alarmed, since that is where the danger lies. Property loss should be a secondary consideration.

From British Columbia.

Penticton, B. C., Canada, writes:

> Have noticed the dearth of news from Canada; also your remark that, "As soon as the boys got busy and sent it in it would appear." I will therefore help out with my mite. I started operating a year ago last October and, after several hard experiences, am now able to put up a pretty fair picture and everything is always ready for the run. The Moving Picture World and your handbook have been of inestimable value to me, located as I am in this far off corner of the world. When I received the handbook I went over my machine to see how it would stand the test. I didn't have many changes to make, thanks probably to luck. But the setting of the carbons! What a difference it did make in the light! I want the new handbook just as quick as it is off the press. Have noticed some articles dealing with isolated plants, one of which we have here. The engine is made by the International Harvester Company. It is an 8-h.p., fly-wheel governor engine, belted to a 5 kw. generator made by the Canadian General Electric Company; a 110 volt d. c. machine. We use about two and a half gallons (presumably gasoline. Ed.) per run of two and a half to three hours, the average ammeter load being about 32 amperes, though it varies up as high as fifty for short periods. I cannot give a very definite statement of the number of lamps burning, as we light other places as well as the theater. Gasoline costs us thirty-two cents per gallon in steel drums of ninety gallons. Some price for gasoline, but we are in the extreme West. This outfit has been running continuously every night, except Sundays, for sixteen months, and only one night in all that time we didn't show on account of the plant not being in good condition. That ought to remove any doubt as to gasoline engines being reliable. I give it very careful attention, and find that it pays to do so. The projection light is excellent and has no noticeable variation, but there is > a slight fluctuation up and down in the incandescents. We are moving into a new house in a few weeks. What size condensers would be advisable for a 94-foot throw and a 13-foot picture, an Edison Model B machine? Is that picture large enough? The auditorium will be 29 feet wide by 100 feet deep. Renewed the tension springs on my gate recently, and one has slightly more pressure than the other. Will this affect the projection? I have noticed with some reels, but not all, a sort of an up and down movement on the side of the picture corresponding to the weakest spring. Speaking of fans, I used to have one turned directly against my back, and before long was troubled with very bad pains in the back. I didn't know the cause until the weather got cooler and I didn't use the fan so much, whereupon the trouble disappeared.

Yes, Penticton, it certainly pays to give an engine, a dynamo, or any other piece of machinery, very careful, painstaking, intelligent care and attention, and the regularity of performance of your outfit speaks well for your work. If your ammeter only shows 32 amperes you surely cannot be running very many incandescent lamps, since you would hardly use less than eighteen or twenty at the arc, and each 16 c. p. incandescent requires approximately one-half ampere. You should use two 7½ condensers for a 13-foot picture at 94 feet, but with a hall of that depth and width, I think I would prefer a 15-foot picture, provided you can use sufficient current to illuminate a picture that large. In order to do this I would suggest that instead of using ordinary plaster or cloth curtain you use one of the patent screens. One of the patent screen manufacturers is prepared to supply his coating to be spread on a plaster screen, and this is what I would get, if I were in your place. The plaster should not be finished smooth, though. The finishing coat should be thoroughly stippled or roughened with a coarse brush, while it is wet and soft, and after which the finish may be applied. As to the weak tension spring, stick your screwdriver under the spring and, while pulling outward, run it up and down a few times, thus bowing the spring outward sufficiently to provide equal tension with its mate. You should keep a couple of extra tension springs on hand; in fact, all small parts of that kind which are likely to break or wear out should be kept in stock.

An Invention.

Mr. C. E. Wright, Louisville, Ky., has invented a new moving picture projector, concerning which he writes as follows:

> My machine will project a rock steady picture, using a film which has not been perforated. It gives a longer exposure, more light and less flicker or jump than any of the present machines. The shutter is not as wide as those in present use, and trips ⅛ of a revolution. The machine is simple and will not be expensive to make or repair. Please advise to the best manner of proceeding to procure capital to manufacture and place on the market.

The first and most essential procedure, friend Wright, will be to demonstrate the practicability of your mechanism when it comes right down to practical projection of moving pictures. There have been a number of gripper movement machines invented, and some of them work fairly well, too, but the trouble has always been that there is a certain amount of slippage which, so far, has proven to be unavoidable with this type of actuating movement—hence the picture simply will not remain in frame. If you can demonstrate, beyond any question of a doubt, that your machine possesses advantages over the present type of machine, and is entirely practical for every day use, then you will have no trouble in securing capital. In fact, those to whom you would have to demonstrate this proposition would themselves take care of that end of the matter, and do it quickly. From your letter, I am led to suppose your shutter oscillates, and if this is so, I would myself have to be shown that it would work in a satisfactory manner as compared to the revolving shutter. If your machine is protected by patent, you might ship a model mechanism to me, if you care to do so. I can then tell you what I think of it, and whether it is worth presenting to the powers that be.

Oildag.

On page 1079, December 14th issue, Carlsbad, New Mexico, spoke of mixing "oildag" with his oil, claiming an advantage was thus gained. He now sends a circular which sets forth the fact that oildag is a new lubricant, consisting of deflocculated graphite diffused in oil. The circular recites that: "Graphite in the deflocculated form renders possible the use of this valuable solid lubricant with full assurance that vastly superior results will be obtained and the cost of operation materially reduced, as one gallon of oildag will do the work of at least three gallons of oil." "Deflocculated" graphite seems to be graphite in an exceedingly fine form. It might be worth a trial. We extend to Brother Patterson our thanks for contributing the information.

Organizing Unions.

The operators of a Southern town are desirous of organizing a local of the I. A. T. S. E., and ask to whom they should apply. For the information of all, I will say that: (1) Mr. Lee M. Hart, General Secretary and Treasurer of the I. A. T. S. E., Suite 63, 39 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill., is the person to whom to apply. (2) The minimum number of moving picture machine operators to secure an auxiliary charter must be seven, and they must depend upon operating for a livelihood, and must have had more than one year's experience in strictly moving picture theatres. (3) Full and direct local charter is granted to fifteen or more qualified applicants and costs $50.00. Auxiliary branch charter of less than fifteen members, but not less than seven, $25.00. (4) Names and sizes of the theaters in the city must be given. (5) Name, age, experience and position of each applicant must be given. These are, in general, the requirements. Further details will be supplied upon application to Brother Hart, who will send the necessary blanks. Let it be understood that to secure anything other than an auxiliary charter there must be fifteen or more applicants. Seven applicants can get an auxiliary charter.

Prohibit Union Slide.

By request of the I. A. T. S. E. Local Union, No. 249, moving picture machine operators, Dallas, Texas, I publish the following from the Dallas Dispatch, December 12th:

> The Dixie Theater, of this city, stopped the flashing of the union slide on the screen to-day. The emblem is that of the moving picture operator's union, and is to indicate that union men are employed in the house. The Dixie and Lyric were the only ones using the slide, and the action to-day is believed to be the result of the demand made by the moving picture theatre proprietors at a meeting held yesterday. Union men in Dallas were giving the Dixie and Lyric shows the preference.

We would respectfully call attention of the Dallas managers to the fact that, to be consistent in their attitude, they should now use a slide containing the announcement, "This house does not employ a union operator." We would call their attention to the fact that those who buy tickets of admission to their theatres are the ones who are supporting them and their theatres, and if they wish to know whether or not the operator is a union man they have the right to demand and receive that particular piece of information. Evidently, too, they wish to know this fact, else the showing of the slide would have no effect whatever. It is not the intention of this department to take part in such controversies, except to point out the right and the wrong of the matter. If the Dixie and Lyric theaters desire to, or are willing to show the union sign, it certainly cannot be said to be right from any point of view to coerce them into refusing to do so.

More Condenser Dope.

Wm. Lorence, New York City, says he has a guaranteed receipt for stopping the overflow of mail regarding condenser breakage, as follows:

> Immerse the condensers in a pot filled with cold water, to which a large amount of common salt has been added. Boil the condensers in this mixture thoroughly, then let them cool off slowly. Any glass subjected to this kind of treatment will resist sudden change in temperature. To clean objective and condensing lenses, rub well with hot, sharp vinegar; then rinse in luke-warm water and they will be thoroughly clean.

Now, why in the name of Heaven, will boiling condenser lenses in salt brine have any effect one way or the other? Certainly the salt cannot penetrate the glass and change its nature or its composition. Immersing condensers in cold water, boiling them and allowing them to cool off slowly, has been suggested in this department long ago, though its efficacy is open to question. I cannot see that the adding of salt would have any effect one way or the other. As to the vinegar stunt, I see no reason why it should not do the work, and it is passed along for consideration.

Lamp Rheostat.

Mr. A. W. Ballenger, York, Nebr., inquires:

> Is it possible to wire a lamp or lamps of any kind or number in series with the arc, so as to utilize the current now wasted by the rheostat for production of light? That is to say, could lamps be made to take the place of a rheostat and not consume any more energy than the rheostat wastes? My current is 220 volt, d.c., through rheostat, ⅝ cored carbons above and below; Power's Six machine, 70 foot throw, two 7½ condensers. Could I use a storage battery system with satisfaction? Am having an argument in regard to same. An electrician is trying to convince me that I could run my lamp with storage batteries cheaper than I can pay seven and a half cents per k.w., d.c. using 220. What is your opinion? What would be the smallest voltage and amperage proper to use, projecting a 12 foot picture, throw about 70 feet d.c.? Can a person use less than 110 volts d.c. satisfactorily? If so, I think I can use a motor generator set cheaper than I can run on this 220 stuff, using a rheostat. I am anxiously awaiting the new hand-book for which I sent money order some time ago.

It is possible to use a large number of incandescent lamps wired in multiple, and the multiple wired in series, with the arc lamp. I will not go into details on this matter, in the department, as it has already been explained and illustrated, and for the further reason that the light from these lamps would not be satisfactory, because it would continually fluctuate and would be shut off every time the arc was shut off. I would not advise that kind of scheme. If you still want details, send $1.00, and I will send sketch and explanation by mail. I would advise you to use a ⅝ cored carbon above and a ½ inch solid projection carbon below. On page 123 of the new hand-book you will see how to figure your waste in the rheostat. On 220 it is enormous, as compared to the amount of energy actually used. Yes, you could use a storage battery. I believe it would be a good deal cheaper in operation than using 220 though rheostats, but you would have to have a good many batteries, since the voltage would have to be raised to 60 and the amperage delivered ought not to be less than sufficient to supply .2 of an ampere of current per square foot of picture. A 12 foot picture has 96 square feet of surface, each square foot of surface should not have less than .2 of an ampere, d.c., therefore 20 amperes, d.c. generator capacity would be sufficient. A 70 volt generator is ideal for projection purposes, and a 60 volt one will do nicely. It seems to me your best plan would be to purchase either the D. C. Economizer put out by Mr. Hallberg, or the Ft. Wayne Electric Works. Both of these devices have given excellent satisfaction, but you should secure, when purchasing, an iron clad guarantee as to performance. The manufacturers of these economizers claim an efficiency from 80 to 85%. I think this is probably a little high, but certainly when using 220 volt current the saving as compared to rheostat would be very large.

A Cleaning Scheme.

Mr. J. T. May, Bartlesville, Okla., suggests a new way of cleaning a machine. He fills a gasoline blow torch and sprays gasoline on the machine. Of course you all know that after pumping up a gasoline torch it will spray gasoline quite forcibly. He says by this plan he can clean the mechanism far easier than is possible with a rag; but it is a good idea to strain the gasoline through chamois skin to take out the water and small particles of dirt.

Film Cleaner.

Elmhurst, L. I., sends in sketches and description of a film cleaner he has devised. I could not from the description and sketches, quite follow through the whole plan of construction. Moreover, as the film simply seems to pass over three revolving rollers, the device didn't appeal to me as practical. If the cotton-flannel covered rollers were stationary it would remove considerable dirt, but why use stationary rollers when a flat piece of cloth is just as effective? Unless the rollers were stationary, it would have no effect whatever one way or the other.

Machine Trouble.

New York City submits the following:

> Recently I put a new intermittent sprocket in my Power's Six, and when I run fast I have a moving or jumping picture, though it is steady when run slowly. After cleaning my machine, I have a grinding noise apparently emanating from the toggle idler gear. It is particularly bad when the framing carriage is about center. It will keep up a day or so, then die out. When I have the grinding noise, it is accompanied by a sort of tinkling sound, which I think is from the governor.

If your film is steady when running slow, and jumps when running fast, it would indicate insufficient tension, the remedy for which is to tighten screw 734, figure 115, page 272 of the new handbook. As to the grinding noise, that is more difficult, and inasmuch as you are located in New York City, I would suggest that you take the machine to the factory for adjustment. You might, however, first make sure that connecting bar 682, figure 121, of the new hand-book, is held snugly in casting 684, by set-screws 744. To tighten this bar first loosen screws 745, then tighten set screws 744, until the framing lever just barely begins to work hard, after which, re-tighten screws 745. If, after tightening screws 745, the framing lever works too hard, then you will have to loosen them again, and slack off a little on 744. However, I repeat that thte better plan would be to take the machine to the factory. If it is less than a year old, the repair will cost you nothing. A tinkling sound is sometimes caused by intermittent sprocket-teeth striking edge of apron.

Some Questions.

Cincinnati, O., propounds the following:

> (a) What is electricity? (b) What is meant by equivalent focus? (c) Had an argument the other day. Can you settle it? I say the geneva is the star, while the other fellow insists that the geneva is where the star and cam meet.

(a) Cannot be answered. Nobody knows. It is that property peculiar to a wire attached to a running dynamo battery, or other source of electrical energy, not present in any other wire. (b) Equivalent focus is the distance from a point half way between the two factors of a lens to the screen, when the lens is held at a distance from the screen, at which some distant object is sharply focused. (See page 357, of the new handbook). (c) The star and cam is generally spoken of as the geneva movement, but the star itself is, properly speaking, the geneva.

Fine Operating Room.

Mr. George A. Bleich, mgr. and owner of the Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Ky., sends in photographs of his new operating room, and writes as follows:

> Some months ago, I boasted to you about the operating room I purposed having in this house. I, therefore, want you to see it, and judge whether or not I have made good. The construction is Johns-Manville asbestos board. The equipment consists of two Simplex machines and a Westinghouse motor generator set. Your special attention is called to the neatness and cleanliness of the room. Notice the wash basin, provided so that the operator has no excuse for greasy hands. Ventilators over machines are eighteen inches in diameter and lead out through the roof. Photo does not show the tool rack or the metal box in which the films are kept. I believe my theatre and operating room is a step in advance, and I credit the Projection Department in particular, and the Moving Picture World as a whole, in aiding me to plan and devise the house as it now is.

The room is indeed excellent in the appointments and its neatness. It is so nice in fact that I wish its walls were of hollow tile, concrete or brick, since I consider those materials as being superior to asbestos for the construction of operating rooms. I would suggest, Brother Bleich, the installation of gravity drop wall shutters and the controlling of them and the ventilator shutters, as directed in the new hand-book, which would make the room truly fire-proof in every sense of the wood. Brother Bleich also sent views of the exterior and interior of the house. I was particularly pleased with the exterior. It presents a solid, substantial, dignified and a beautiful appeareance. The interior is also worthy of commendation.

Trading Stamps.

Pittsburgh, Pa., propounds the following:

> Will you please tell me, in next week's issue, where I may buy or rent an S. & H. moving picture camera?

Inasmuch as I never heard of this particular brand of camera, nor had anyone in the Moving Picture World office, I submitted the query to the head camera man of a leading producer. His reply was: "That fellow is not looking for a camera; it is green trading stamps he wants. Refer him to Sperry and Hutchinson," after which he informed me that he knew of no such camera.

Flicker Trouble.

Williston, N. S., comes in with the flicker trouble as follows:

> Am operating two theaters here and am having some trouble with flickering pictures in the smaller one. Project a 12-foot picture at 50 feet, with Power's Six. Have tried the three wing shutter which came with the machine, and three different styles of home-made two wing shutters, and am using a two wing shutter, and now, while this is an improvement on the three wing style, the picture is far from perfect. The shutter is set correctly as we have no travel ghost either up or down, and it is set as close to the front of the lens as possible. My operator suggests that we get a half size lens instead of the quarter size, and states this will reduce the flicker, as it is possible, with the half size lens, to set the shutter closer to the lens than with the quarter size. Am using a white curtain coated with alabastine. The current is 220 a.c. and is very steady for alternating. Would like to have an expression of your opinion on the half size lens. Perhaps, also if you can suggest a remedy for the flicker, I would certainly appreciate it.

Something here we do not understand. If the two wing shutter is producing less flicker than the Power's three wing, then the trouble does not lie in the shutter; that is a cinch. Are you sure the a.c. in this house is not very low cycle, say 25 or 35? I am inclined to believe that is exactly what is the matter. Run at normal speed, Power's three-wing shutter should give no flicker whatever with that kind of a screen. The substitution of a half size lens would make the flicker worse, if anything, as you would have to have a shutter with a wider blade for that kind of a lens. Unless your current is low cycle, and the flicker is due to that cause, I will have to pass the matter up to our readers for their consideration, as I myself see no other possible reason for any such condition.

Water-Cooled Lenses.

Mr. A. E. Kirk, Galveston, Texas, contributes the following interesting data concerning water-cooled condensers:

> In the December 7th issue of the World, a "large manufacturer" and yourself asked for information relative to water-cooled type of condensing lens. If you will allow me, I would like to submit my mite of information. There are really two devices of this kind. In one the absorbent principle of the liquid serves the two-fold purpose of cooling the lenses and absorbing heat from the projected beam of light. In the other merely the absorption of heat from the light beam is all that is attempted. In the first kind the two condensing lenses form the two water tight sides of a cell, or tank, which is closed tight all around, except for an opening at the top and bottom to which is attached a rubber tube for carrying the cooling liquid, by syphonage, from an elevated vessel holding a quantity of the liquid in reserve. The liquid enters the cell at the top, flows down between the two lenses and out of the bottom hole to a bucket or other receptacle, from which the top tank can be refilled as occasion demands. Water in which alum has been dissolved is generally used as a heat absorbent, plain water not being so efficient. As the lenses are held tightly against gaskets to prevent leaking, it might be thought they are liable to great danger of cracking, due to unequal expansion incident to the heat from the arc, but as the cooling liquid prevents this very thing the lenses never become hot at all. in the other form of cooling arrangement the lenses are arranged as usual, except that they carry a glass tank in front, in which is placed the alum solution which absorbs the heat from the beam of light as it leaves the condensers. Means must be provided for replenishing the liquid, as it becomes heated, with fresh, cold solution. An alum cell placed between the condenser and the film is the most effectual safeguard against the film catching fire, but naturally from the bother an ordinary operator would have with its maintenance may be explained its present lack of use on moving picture machines. These devices are still used, though, in medical laboratories, etc., for preventing the heat from destroying small, delicate organisms used in microscopic projection. In an early form of Lumiere's apparatus the actual condenser was a spherical flask filled with water in which was suspended a small piece of carbon to collect any gases caused by the heating of the water. As a postcript, I am reminded of an operator who, being caught in a small country town, while on the road with one condenser broken beyond recall, used an old fashioned baby's milk bottle filled with water as a substitute, claims he got pretty fair results, considering the pinch.

The data is of interest, though I do not believe your reason for the non-adoption of this scheme is the correct one. The tank in front of the condenser, which was known as the "alum cell," was discarded for the reason that it absorbed too much light; at least, that was always my understanding of the matter. The same thing would obtain were the liquid placed between the condensing lenses; or at least we would suppose it would. I am informed that an Englishman has procured a patent in England on a plan for removing the heat from the light ray by means of an air blast blown through it between the cooling plate and the aperture. He has also, I am told, applied for patents in this country. Whether the scheme will come into general use or not remains to be seen. If the milk bottle was of the right shape, it would, of course, condense the light after a fashion, and I should imagine the results would be pretty raw at the best. Many thanks, Brother Kirk, for the information contained in your letter.

Bugs Again.

New York City comes back with the following:

> Many thanks for your prompt reply to my "bug" question; but I did not mean the sprocket indentations. What I referred to occurs particularly in the Essanay film. They seem to have printed some sort of bug in their films several times. It happened in one drama. Just in an exciting climax, when every one in the audience was supposed to be quite sad, a letter showed up on the screen to the effect that somebody's heart was broken, and down walked Mr. Bug, just like a paid actor, promenaded around all over the letter, rubbed his back with his legs just like a locust and walked off again just as the letter ended. The people roared with laughter. Kindly put this question up to the brother artists.

You are at liberty to search me. If anyone else has encountered Mr. Bug let him stand forth and be heard. I have had no intimation that my good friends Spoor and Anderson, of the Essanay, had gone bugs, and I really do not believe they have or that their films have either. Let us have more light on this question.

Union Closed?

Chicago sends in a sketch of some scheme of his in use in the operating room. I cannot, however, quite follow the idea, therefore cannot use it until it is explained better. He also propounds the following inquiry:

> Can anyone tell me why Chicago operators's union No. 2 is closed until August, 1913? I have tried to get in since I received my license last summer. Was only able to get an application blank in October. Was instructed to get it signed and after four trips, each time being told a different story, I was informed that I must produce an operator who had known me for a year and who had been a member of local union No. 2 for a year. I went back the next day (first November meeting), and was told to come again as there was a meeting being held. I did go back next day and was informed that the union was closed until August, 1913.

If this is true, is strikes the editor it is very much up to Local No. 2 to explain. With all due respect to Local Union No. 2, I can tell them that this is no way to do business—of course if the brother's complaint is correct. If, for any reason, he is not eligible to membership, or if for any reason the union does not desire to accept more members at present, then he should at least have been told so, and not played with in any such way as described. I have no patience with this kind of business. A union is supposed to be founded on justice and to base its very existence in brotherhood, therefore its first aim and object should be to deal justly, both with its members and with those outside. Understand, I am not objecting to Local No 2 refusing to accept the applicant into membership. I do not know anything about that. It is the method I protest against. Furthermore, if Local Union No. 2, or any other union, purposes to refuse new members for any considerable period, that fact should, in justice to all concerned, be given publicity, and the only way it can be given adequate publicity is through this department. There is no law compelling Local Union No. 2 to take any action of this kind, but if they are doing business along the right lines they would give such a matter publicity as a matter of ordinary decency and justice.

A Promising Idea.

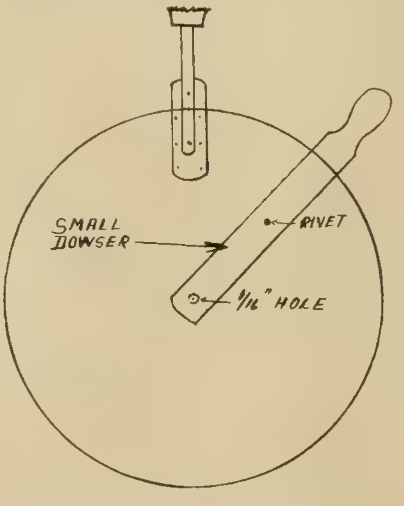
Mr. Chet Todd, Omaha, Nebr., contributes the following idea which certainly looks as thought it might have very distinct value. He describes it as follows:

> Here is a little stunt I figured out, and which has been a great deal of help to me, and I think will be to many of the other brothers. It can be used on any machine having a dowser in front of the condensers and an outside revolving shutter. Drill a 1/16-inch hole in the dowser at the exact center of the condensers, and on the large dowser rivet a small one as per sketch, so that it may be moved to cover and uncover the small hole at will. With the small hole uncovered you have a reproduction of the arc on the fire shutter, which shows you just what shape your crater is burning and how to place the spot without opening the dowser; also by opening the small dowser, having one of the revolving shutter flicker blades in front of the lens, you can frame the picture, by raising the fire shutter, by means of the small picture, which will be projected on the blade of the shutter. This small beam of light is great, also, to set the shutter, should it go wrong. With the fire shutter open turn the flywheel very slowly, and by the little shutter you can tell exactly when the film starts to move and when it stops. I have set my shutter this way many times, and never yet had to change it. There is no noticeable heat in this light beam, and I have held it on the film for twenty minutes. I have a couple of other ideas which I will submit for your approval if you think this one worth while.



Yes, I most decidedly think this one is worth while, friend Todd, and thank you for its submission. Will be glad to hear from you again. The only question in my mind is as to the picture projected on the shutter blade. I am under the impression there would be no picture projected, but simply a blur of light, though I do not make this as a positive statement because the fact of the light coming through a 1/16-inch orifice might make a difference, though I do not see why it should. I can see that the dowser should stop so as to bring the hole precisely in line with arc and center of aperture every time. But the dowser stop ought to fix that all right, if the hole be drilled exactly right in the first place.

Tail Pieces in Split Reels.

In response to my suggestion, a large number of exhibitors have sent post cards and letters, favoring, and some of them very emphatically favoring, the tail pieces between the subjects on split reels. One Kentucky exhibitor in voting thus remarks:

> Why do the manufacturers, when mailing special matter, posters, etc., use long mailing tubes? I have yet to receive one that has not been broken in two in transit, and its contents, of course, ruined.

The mailing tube matter is respectfully referred to the manufacturers who are thus offending. As regards the tail pieces, while a great many affirmative votes have been received on that proposition, still not enough to make the matter impressive with the manufacturers. If there had been say from 3,000 to 5,000 post cards sent in, I could no doubt have gotten these tail pieces inserted in split reels, but with anything less the sentiment in its favor would not be impressive enough to move the powers that be.

"THE RUNNING AWAY OF DORIS" (Edison), Jan. 3.—A good story that will hardly seem convincing to the average spectator in America; for it is so thoroughly English that it won't be wholly understood. It was made here and seems to be a story of New York; but while we think it possible in any precedence ridden aristocracy, we don't believe it probable in any democracy. It is very skillfully told in scenes that are always clear as to their meaning and seemed to hold the attention of the audience. The acting is very natural. The characters didn't seem real to us. It is a fine picture; but we don't dare call it a big offering.

"THE TREACHEROUS SHOT" (Kalem), Jan. 3.—A love story of before the war and it seems to us that we have never seen a more apparently truthful picture of that comfortable, unpretentious, slave-holding aristocracy of rural Dixie. One of its scenes that will surely attract attention pictures a chase of two runaway slaves. The heroine (and this incident goes very well in a love story of the time and place) has slipped out of her home to visit the lover whom her father dislikes with reason and, with her darkie mammy, is crossing the fields. The chase is approaching. She has coal black on her face and the lover thinks that she is a mulatto. His treatment of her quite disgusts her with him and opens the way for the man whom her father likes. This incident is handled in a very competent way; it is made clear and most effective. Marian Cooper plays the Southern girl; Guy Coombs the adventurer who wants to get her money and who fires the treacherous shot which nearly kills her true lover, played by Hall Clements. The girl's father is played by Henry Hallem. A very good offering.

"WHY TIGHTWAD TIPS" (Kalem), Dec. 30.—He has the same reason that the rest of us have, and like some other people there was a time when he even thought that it was not necessary to tip; but gets an education from waiters, barbers, hall boys, etc. John E. Brennan plays "Tightwad" and is supported by Otto Lederer as a waiter, the Kalem big-mouthed darkie and others. The audience seemed to enjoy it.

"THE PEACE OFFERING" (Kalem), Dec. 30.—An idea doesn't need to be new; that behind this picture has been used many times, yet the audience undoubtedly got much amusement out of it. Perhaps this was due to this: it is well made and the players are able to handle such a situation cleverly and breezily. Ruth Roland plays the wife who has had a quarrel with her husband, played by Marshall Neilan, and who receives a box of flowers intended for the sweetheart of his friend, John Brennan. She misunderstands the meaning of the note and it causes trouble till it is explained.

"THE BRAVERY OF DORA" (Lubin), Dec. 31.—A picture with many good things, but lacking in significance. It tells a tale of the time when presumably victorious Mexicans invaded the United States or else when khaki-clad soldiers were marauding on the other side of the border. This is one of the most convincing things about it, for the story, as shown, seems unusually crude. But it has good qualities—Edna Payne makes a very acceptable heroine for such a story. Earl Metcalf and P. J. Phillips support her. There are many people in the cast and in one scene a company of Mexicans besiege a squad of soldiers in a hut, with much firing of guns.

"YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK" (Edison), Jan. 1.—A picture opening with an inspiring glimpse of the big trees of California. It seems to us the best chosen picture of them that we have ever seen and is followed by many extremely interesting views of the rocks and waters of Yellowstone Park, with a marvelous picture of Mirror Lake. The photography is better than some of the Edison pictures of late and the offering was to us a most decided treat.

"HOW THEY GOT THE VOTE" (Edison), Jan. 1.—A story set in London and giving views of the Bank, London Bridge, Trafalgar Square, etc. It is a comedy made funny by some of the players and by the magic of eccentric camera work which shows how all London is held up, literally, with every man one foot up in the air, until the prime minister consents to giving woman the vote. It is laughable and makes good entertainment.

"THE MISSION OF A BULLET" (Kalem), Jan. 1.—The mission of the bullet was to show two one-time friends, who are fighting in the desert for a bag of bread, that the rock beside them has the precious metal which they came out into the desert to find. The reason of their falling out had been lack of success and jealousy on account of a girl left back in the settlement. When they make themselves rich, they both go back together and find her just married to another man. It has little freshness except what the players give to it by their individuality; but it is well put together and makes a very fair offering. Ruth Roland plays the girl, with Marshall Neilan and Gavin Young as the two men.

"THE COWBOY AND THE BABY" (Pathe), Jan. 1.—An acceptable comedy love story with a tender-hearted cowboy left on a train with a baby. Its mother gets off to buy some milk for it and a sandwich for herself; but is neglected by the waitress so long that she is left by the train. She is a widow on the way to her brother's, owner of the ranch where the cowboy works, so the baby is taken to its uncle's. In time the woman finds it; and later there is a wedding. It made much laughter and was liked by the audience. Paul Panzer plays the cowboy.

"A ROUGH RIDE WITH NITROGLYCERINE" (Selig), Dec. 31.—Another big dramatic picture by William Duncan. It is in the same class as his "The Dynamiters," of not long ago, but much more thrilling, because the suspense depends on a larger number of elements and is longer sustained. The explosion of the wagon load of nitroglycerine seems the real thing; one of the best scenes of this kind that we have noticed. We are led to expect the catastrophy early in the story. The hero, who is foreman of the oil well and fiance of the owner's daughter, is driving a team and wagon with nitroglycerine boxes in it and is being followed by a gang of agitators who have stolen horses from before a saloon. Following the agitators, but a good way behind, are the owners of the horses in a wagon they have commandiered. The heroine has been warned of the predicament of the foreman and is galloping with all her speed to get to him by a short cut through the country. The fast galloping of the four groups intensifies the suspense to a very high pitch. William Duncan himself plays the foreman, with Myrtle Steadman as the girl, and with Lester Cunio, Charles E. Reaves and Rex de Roselli in the cast which very ably supports the situation. It is a most desirable offering.

"LAUGHING BILLY" (Eclipse), Jan. 1.—An amusingly acted farce in which a clown who has just been told a funny story tries to tell it to every one he meets, but not even his wife will listen. It is not substantial.

"A FOUR-FOOTED CUPID" (Eclipse), Jan. 1.—A little love story gracefully acted by two young people who are pleasing in themselves. Its chief interest is the seeming intelligence of a very well trained dog who sees to it that letters the young people have written to each other get mailed despite the fact that both, on second thought, have decided not to make up their quarrel. It makes a pleasing, pretty offering that will be liked, but hardly remembered for long.

"LOVE HATH WROUGHT A MIRACLE" (Vitagraph), Jan. 1.—Mrs. Breuil has used a very good idea in this picture which, at its climax, brings out the healing power of a great emotion; but it is not one that is easy to make effective in cinematography and in this picture it is acted with (for a Vitagraph offering) startling amateurishness. The player who takes the leading part and on whom the whole picture necessarily depends, is unknown to us; we have never seen him before in any picture, but he certainly fails in this. James Young produced it and Clara K. Young and Rose Graham have parts.

"CASEY AT THE BAT" (Vitagraph), Jan. 1.—James Young has written and produced a farce about the well-known Casey who was counted a wonderful batsman, but who strikes out and loses the game. Harry T. Morey plays this over-confident Casey and wins many a laugh by his facial expression both before and after his downfall. Norma Talmage takes the part of the girl who loves him, but turns from him in his misfortune to the policeman played by Harry Northrup. Kate Price is the girl's mother. A very fair offering that will lighten the program and amuse.

"THREE FRIENDS" (Biograph), Jan. 2.—The good things that are in this picture are not very well built together, so it fails to get over with the power or to create the suspense that we usually find in offerings by this maker. The chief reason why it fails is because the meaning of the scene where the workman strikes his foreman is not at all clear. He is fired, can get no other work, becomes despondent and makes a suicide pact with his wife to "go out" together which is quite possible, but is so horrible that we don't want to believe and resist it. After the climax, someone in the audience laughed at it. There is some good acting in it and some fine moments.

"THE MINER'S REQUEST" (Essanay), Jan. 2.—A very interesting Western picture. The dying miner requests that Leonie marry Tom, his trusted helper. This the girl promises and the wedding takes place; but the attraction of another character who has come to the mine is too strong and she consents to run away with him. She finds in time that he is a thief. There is a very well done land-slide in which the miner is caught and mortally hurt; but the quality of the picture comes more from the love story which is much more convincingly acted than usual—in fact, true love is not very often seen in photoplay acting. The leading woman is new to us, but she knows how to play such situations as this finely. It makes a pleasing little picture that will be liked we have no doubt.

"JOHN ARTHUR'S TRUST" (Lubin), Jan. 2.—By the addition of one new character, the whole aspect of an often-used situation has been not only changed, but made intensely interesting. If it had been well acted by all those in important roles—as well by the grafting governess and by the fortune hunting nobleman as by the homely lawyer and the heiress of whose fortune he has charge—it would have been a big offering; for the situation has much more substance and is more easily believable than any of this kind that we remember. Just as it is it will be closely followed for its story and counted a fine picture by the majority who are not critical. Arthur Johnson plays the lawyer, a queer character, a kind of "man from home." Lottie Briscoe is as usual in roles of this kind. Howard Mitchell does not seem at his best as the count. Mrs. Daly plays the governess, and Charles Brandt, the lawyer's clerk. The scenes are clearly thought out and freshly interesting and the action is carried along smoothly and quite clearly.

"GREATER WEALTH" (Selig), Jan. 2.—It seemed to us that the audience was divided on this picture, some thinking it good and others not liking it so well. There is reason for both views. Its object is to create a feeling of patriotism and love for the Stars and Stripes as the flag of equal opportunity. Whether or not it is, and how much it is so depends on one's personal viewpoint and there lies the picture's weakness. It contrasts the home life of a rich man with that of a poor man. In both homes there is sickness; but the poor man's child recovers, while the rich man's dies and he besides has a drunken son to trouble him. The poor man is an employee of the rich man and is discharged to lessen expenses. In the end he attempts to murder the employer, but is persuaded to look at his wrongs in a different light. There are some very beautiful pictures, especially of the two rooms where the little girls are sick and these pleased some very much. Twice in the course of the story the flag is insulted, once by a labor agitator and once by the man with murder in his heart, and this displeased two who sat directly behind us. We didn't get much pleasure from it because it is quite plainly insincere. Lanier Bartlett, the author, has done better work; but much credit is due Colin Campbell for the skillful way he has directed it. Thomas Santschi plays the leading role as the poor man, while Hobart Bosworth plays the rich man. Bessie Eyton, with little "Baby" Wade, plays the poor man's wife and the mother; these two made some of the loveliest scenes in it. Those who played the laborers, Frank Clark, Edward James and others deserve credit, as does Fred Huntly as the doctor. Camille Astor makes a natural nurse and Wheeler Oakman does well as the wayward son of the rich man.

"THE FLAG OF FREEDOM" (Kalem), January 4.—A Revolutionary love story with George Washington and Betsy Ross (whom we see making the flag), among the characters. Hazel Neason, as the daughter of a Tory, plays one of the best and most natural characterizations that we remember in all the stories of this kind that we have seen. Tom Moore plays opposite to her a Colonial captain, her lover, whom the Tory father greatly dislikes but who, with the help of Betsy Ross and the Commander-in-Chief, marries her notwithstanding. There are no battle scenes or ball scenes (why do most producers think such necessary in Revolutionary stories?). But the love drama is developed simply and naturally for its own sake and pleases much. The glimpses of Colonial rooms and furnishings are lovely; they make many of the scenes delightful pictures. Though it is not a great picture, it surely is a very acceptable offering. Alice Joyce is a pretty, if not very convincing Betsy Ross; Logan Paul makes a very good George Washington, but there is a picture of Benjamin Franklin in it that is even better. George Robinson plays the Tory, father of the heroine, and Stewart Holmes plays a British officer.

"THE GIRL OF THE MOUNTAINS" (Selig), December 11.—A picture made to feature a sensational ride down a flume on the floating timber. This ride of hero and heroine is by the way of escape from a self-constituted posse that is bent on hanging the young man, a doctor. The villain of the story has accused him of murdering an old miser, the heroine's father in order to cover his own theft of the miser's gold. The scenario is by Lanier Bartlet and was produced by Henry McRae. Betty Heart plays the girl; Herbert Rawlinson, the doctor; Hobart Bosworth, the villain, and Frank Clark, the miser. Also in the cast are Anna Hernandez and Al. E. Garcia. The ride down the flume is interesting to see and the story is clear. The photography is fair.

"ROMEO AND JULIET" (Pathe), January 3.—Here are beautiful illustrations of Shakespeare's tragic story that are gracefully, rather than powerfully, acted. The backgrounds are fine and with the furniture, costumes and all that is usually grouped under "staging," are very commendable. It was put on or seems to have been put on in a magnificent palace and is one of the prettiest pictures we have seen in some time. Both reels are full of poetry.

"THE FRAME UP" (Pathe), January 2.—A Western story with such good things as are usually found in Westerns now-a-days—big, out-door scenes, a stage coach in the distance, some good riding and such. These come from the producer's art, for so far as we can see, the writer has provided nothing truly new and nothing powerfully convincing. That it pleased some small boys greatly is sure. They took especial delight in "Princess Red Wing," who rides bare-back. George Gebhardt plays Red Wing's Indian husband.

"THE REDMAN'S BURDEN" (Edison), January 4.—A story fabricated for the Edison company now in the West and to make a special plea for the down-trodden redman. Special pleas are often weak from the fact that they are apt to set forth what this does, a half-truth. The government takes mighty good care of many of its Indian wards. In this picture, an Indian and his squaw are brutally treated and driven almost to distraction (his house is burned down wantonly and his gun is apparantly legally stolen); yet he returns good for evil, bringing the persecuter who has suffered as accident and is in danger from a burning forest to a safe place. The squaw dies from burns. Laura Sawyer plays the squaw remarkably well as does Benjamin Wilson her brave. Charles Sutton, Jessie McAlister, James Gordon and others have parts. It is very poorly photographed, except for one or two scenes.

"BETWEEN TWO GIRLS" (C. G. P. C.), January 3.—A little romantic farce with our old friend "Whiffles" as an undecided lover. He loses both of two pretty girls because he can not decide which he wants. It is acted farcically to make laughter, but it has some very pretty scenes and enough human interest to go even without the farce. It will make an acceptable lightener for a program and will be suitable for all kinds of audiences.

"SAND HOPPERS" (C. G. P. C.), January 3.—On the same reel is this nature film showing us the sand hopper, a little creature that all who frequent the beach are familiar with. It is short, but interests. We might point out in passing that such animals hardly belong under the heading of "oceanography"—zoology would be the correct sub-title for a picture of them.

"WHEN SOUL MEETS SOUL" (Essanay), January 3.—A dream-story which takes an old professor back to the time when, in ancient Egypt, he was a king and great warrior and loved a woman whom it seems he treated coldly, though in the picture we don't see just why, for it isn't as clear as it might have been. Francis X. Bushman plays both the professor, whom he caricatures somewhat, and the Egyptian. Dolores Cassinelli plays the princess. Fred Wolf has a short role as assistant to the professor. There seem to be only four different backgrounds, but these, while amply suggestive of temples and palaces in Egypt, are plainly artificial, studio sets. There is some foolishness in the picture's business that detracts from its effect; but it has an interesting atmosphere and is a fair offering.

"LOVE THROUGH A LENS" (Essanay), December 27.—A good love story, very pleasantly acted by John Steppling and Mildred Weston. It has some lovely scenes which are well photographed and most effective; but it has a very unconvincing ending. Taken as a whole, it stands up very well; for such defects as it has will not take much from the pleasure a spectator will find in the good parts of it, though they surely will destroy its effect as a whole. In other words the audience will probably be thankful for the half-loaf. E. H. Calvert does good work in his characterization of the superintendent engineer who fires Steppling whom he finds making love to his daughter, Mildred. The backgrounds are interesting, being some big engineering work.

"SEEING IS BELIEVING" (Essanay), January 1.—E. H. Calvert does fine work as a blind man in this comedy-drama. It may seem to some that the antics of the clerks in the office of the millionaire were overdrawn or exaggerated, but there will be many who will be inclined to take issue with these. It is a good release.

"THE ANGEL OF THE DESERT" (Vitagraph-), January 6.—A somewhat lurid tragedy of the desert. It isn't a gripping story in any strong way and at its climax there's an angel vision scene that doesn't get over to the spectator—visions mar more pictures than they make. Yet we must commend the acting which is very natural and commend too the idea behind the picture (written by Grace A. Pierce), which furnishes a big fresh ending, full of tragic significance. It shows the forlorn wife of a scoundrel gambler following out into Death Valley a man who had honorably tried to shield her from things that no honest man could witness without protest. The brutal miners of the village had forced him to cross to the other side. When the woman gets to him with water he dies and she pours the canteen out upon the sand. Anne Schaefer plays the woman; J. A. McGuire, her husband, and George Stanley, the man. Rollin S. Sturgeon produced it.

"THE TELEPHONE GIRL AND THE LADY" (Biograph), January 6.—Another Biograph burglar story of which we surely have seen many. Of course Biograph handles these things well and while this is not quite up to its best, it is pretty tense. When the telephone girl has succeeded in getting a policeman, her sweetheart, to go to the lady's help and the burglar is caught making off with the gems, there's a tussle that is about as realistic as could be. There is some good humor, plenty of good acting and some very interesting scenes. It makes a good release.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 2" (January 6).—Every item this week is of great interest and several glimpses of the Balkan War are included. The first item shows us Admiral Dewey on his seventy-fifth birthday. The audience seemed unanimous in its hearty applause. It is interesting to watch the different receptions that our great national figures get as they appear on the screen. There is often what may be called a hearty half-applause; but Dewey is the same to us all. This perhaps in spite of the fact that editorial writers in this democratic age are apt to belittle every great action.

"THE LOVE TOKEN" (Lubin), January 4.—A rather commonplace story of the West in which there is nothing fresh or new and very little that is convincingly human. It is laid in the mining lands. Edgar Jones plays the hero's part, with Clara Williams in the opposite role. Bert King and Franklyn Hall play two desperadoes while James Daily plays the girl's father.

"A BIT OF BLUE RIBBON" (Vitagraph), January 4.—The chase story and the love story will never grow trite so long as the first is ridden fairly and the second is acted sincerely. The trouble nearly always is that the first is very seldom ridden with fair play and no faking and the second very seldom rings true. This picture is a combination of both. The Vitagraph Western players are competent and while in this instance, they lacked a first-class scenario, their acting has done much to redeem it. Mary Charleson and Robert Burns hold up the love story well. At the climax, the heroine rides against time and difficulties to save the hero from being unjustly lynched and then follows the chase of the villain, all of which is done in a sportsmanlike manner to please a fair-play loving audience and consequently is effective, in other words, dramatic. Charles Bennet and Anne Schaefer plays the girl's parents. "Eagle Eye" plays the desperate Mexican and does a fine fall. W. H. Durham wrote the script which R. S. Sturgeon has skilfully produced. It's a very fair, not a big offering.

"THE HEIRESS" (Essanay), Jan. 7.—A merry laugh-maker, in which the impecunious member of a club finds a note left carelessly on a table, inviting some of the boys up to the house to see the heiress. We know her to be a perfectly new baby girl. Billy sees a chance to get rich by marriage, and when he calls mistakes the maid for the "heiress," much to the amusement of his friends, and to us as well. It is a picture full of fresh and unexpected turns and made the house—a large one—roar with laughter. John Steppling plays Billy, but his great popularity and that smile he owns kept us from wholly liking to see him made "a goat." E. H. Calvert, Augustus Carney, William Bailey and "Billy Mason" play other members of the club. Eleanor Blanchard plays the maid, and Mildred Weston the trained nurse.

"COURAGEOUS BLOOD" (Lubin), Jan. 6.—A romantic picture of a very brave, gallant and bashful Mexican who falls in love with a rich American girl, and in the end dies to save her from marauders. It is different from other pictures, and if on no other count than its novel way of looking at things and its queer humor, is more interesting. It is more effectively made than the last three or four offerings by the company in which Romaine Fielding leads, and makes a very good, dependable number, with both suspense and laughter. The cast has some good players, but Romaine Fielding, who plays the lead, is the only one in an important role that does very good work. The photographs are of high quality. The audience liked the picture.

"IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND" (Edison), Jan. 6.—This special two-reel release illustrates the famous story by Charles Reade and makes a first-class offering. The story affords well-marked melodramatic incidents which lend themselves naturally to an effective picture which is exciting and full of suspense. It can safely be depended upon to hold an audience and is a true feature. It is well acted, smoothly told, clearly photographed and evenly produced. That it is an excellent illustration of a famous novel is the thing to advertise; the picture itself will do the rest.

"LOVE UNCONQUERABLE" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 6.—A picture in which Max Linder gives another of his delightfully exaggerated situations. As an ardent lover of a rich girl whose father doesn't want her to marry an artist, he follows even to the Alps, hiding in plain sight from distracted father and flirting with the girl. Some fine views of the Swiss hillsides in winter are included. It made the house shout right out with laughter. We couldn't help laughing, too.

"AN UNSULLIED SHIELD" (Edison), Jan. 7.—We suspect that the author of this unusual picture is an Englishman; his hero is a duke. The climax comes in a dream scene in which the duke, who is fast, needs money and has just forged his mother's name, thinks he sees his ancestors come down from pictures on the wall and remonstrate with him as an unworthy scion of his house. Three paintings free themselves from frames to show to him the glory of his heroic forebears and to make him disgusted with himself. That they succeed makes the offering pleasant, and in a measure encouraging. It's a good, fresh offering and will be liked as something different. Mark MacDermott plays the duke; Wadsworth Harris, his dying father; Mrs. Wallace Erskine, his mother; Harry Eyting, a money lender (a good sketch). Walter Edwin plays his warrior ancestor; Herbert Prior, his sea-fighting ancestor, and Augustus Phillips, his statesman ancestor. The author is Chas. J. Brabin.

"THE WINGS OF A MOTH" (Vitagraph), Jan. 7.—A picture of a love that a working girl (played by Florence Turner) is attracted by a man (played by Rogers Lytton) as a moth by a flame. Her mother (played by Mrs. Maurice) is worried about her girl's new acquaintance, and perhaps this puts her somewhat on her guard; at any rate, at the crucial moment she breaks away from him and, though burned, is not destroyed. Florence Turner carries the lead very well, though we don't think that she is strongest in just this kind of character; it isn't one that gives her much chance to reach the high strings on which she makes her best music. There is no deep emotion or poetry in it. This kind of offering pleases a certain kind of audience—an audience that doesn't like to be deeply stirred. This kind of picture, done with true sincerity, would be much more displeasing; it would be counted depressing. It will hardly give offense anywhere. It was artistically produced by Larry Trimble from a script by Frances Cook, and is a safe offering; may even be called big in some places.

Independent

"A MILLION DOLLARS" (Solax), January 8.—A little farce showing what would happen if every one were given a million dollars. There is quite a good deal of money being counted in it and little work done or service that can be noticed. A poor man dreams it and is cured by the dream of covetousness. Darwin Karr and Blanch Cornwall ably carry the story and are well supported by Lee Beggs and others. It is a very fair offering.

"TWO LITTLE DEVILS" (Itala), January 6.—A rough-play farce in which two terrible youngsters play practical jokes on uncle and aunty. It is preposterous enough to be amusing.

"KNOCK WOOD" (Itala), January 6.—On the same reel is this farce of the upset-and-tumble variety. There is much action of a kind, but little that is intelligible.

"TOM, DICK AND HARRY" (Punch), January 23.—Some thoroughly laughable nonsense springing mostly from the ridiculous make-up and actions of three of the wildest sleuths ever. It is a first-class fun-maker and program-lightener.

"THAT CATCHY RAGTIME DANCE" (Punch), January 23.—On the same reel is this farce showing the results of a turkey trot tune coming to a country village. The first two young people who are inoculated with the contagion get arrested, but soon everybody's doing it, even the judge and jury.

"CRAWFISH" (Eclair, Scientia), January 5.—Another of Eclair's natural history pictures that surely will be thankfully received. It is well photographed and has every quality that makes for success.

"WILLY, KING OF THE JANITORS" (Eclair, Paris), January 5.—On the same reel, this farce makes a good second to the nature picture that goes before it. There is no vulgarity in it, yet some rough play that is innocent and can not offend any sensible person. Willy is left in charge of the house by his mother who goes marketing. Willy oversteps the limits of his authority, does some outrageous things and earns a good licking from his much provoked mamma.

"THE BLACKMAILER" (Nestor), January 3.—There are one or two strong moments in this story, but as a whole, it can not truthfully be called strong. A young clerk, weakly instigated to forge a check to obtain needed funds so that he can take his sick sister to Arizona, goes away unsuspected while the only man who knows who committed the crime is accused and is sent to prison for it. He didn't dare accuse the other clerk, but after serving his term, blackmails him with a threat to show him up. Rather than rob his new employer, he confesses; a happy ending follows.

"A GIRL AT WAR" (Bison-101), January 4.—Maryland is the place in which this story of the Civil War is laid and the backgrounds, pretty oak woods and a grand mansion, give a feeling of naturalness to it that pleases. The story is full of action and affords some dramatic suspense. The heroine and her brother side with the South, but the hero, at the parting of the ways, casts in his lot with the old flag. The climax follows the coming of this Union officer as a spy to the Confederate lines, close to the girl's homestead. The brother meets him first and is wounded in a struggle. The girl then takes up the chase, captures her one-time sweetheart and brings him into camp where he is condemned to be shot, but in a very improbable scene manages to escape. A fair battle scene follows and at last there is a final happy closing scene. Virginia Forde makes an excellent heroine and the whole cast acts very fairly; but there is too much camera conscience for true naturalness. It is in two reels.

"THE STRANGER AT THE MOUNTAIN RANCH" (Frontier), January 8.—This photoplay brings a young man to a Western ranch which he himself has unknowingly inherited. There is a pretty shepherdess, with whom he falls in love and rescues from his designing uncle. We like the rugged snow scenes in contrast to the more familiar Western settings. Not an overly strong plot, but excellent photographically.

"AN ACCIDENTAL SERVANT" (Eclair), January 7.—The plot of this is familiar and has been done repeatedly in fiction and pictures. The young man masquerades as a servant to fool the girl, who of course discovers the deception in the end. But it is all done very prettily and makes an entertaining comedy of the polite society type. A launch party on the Hudson is one of the outdoor features.

"THE ROMANCE OF THE UTAH PIONEERS" (Bison), January 7.—In a structural way this two-reel offering is faulty, for the reason that the plot does not connect up properly. But it touches upon that splendidly dramatic subject of the Mormon immigrants, and there are pictures in it of rare fascination. These overbalance the plot weaknesses and place the film in first rank. In clear, sharp pictures is shown the fervent band drawing their handcarts across the plains to the new Zion. They pause frequently for prayer, and numerous scenes are memorable. There are three separate plot movements, two of which come together, but the Indian girl's motive in saving the Mormons is not apparent. The close of the picture, illustrating the way in which Watana teaches her lover to kiss in white fashion, was very clever.

"CUPID'S ASSISTANTS" (Nestor), January 6.—The hero and heroine return to their adjoining homes in the country. They are already in love, but when confronted with an agreement of ten years' standing between their fathers that they should marry, they do not understand who is meant, and accordingly rebel. A somewhat conventional plot, but the uniform lighting effects help to make it a pleasing production.

"ALMOST A HERO" (Powers), January 8.—A small boy's fondness for a pet sheep, which he hides under the bed, lends occasion for some good comedy. The men and girls who live in the ranchhouse are badly frightened and one of the former, by putting the animal out of the window, poses as a near-hero.

"AKRON, OHIO" (Powers), January 8.—This, on the same reel with above, gives views of Akron, a typical city of the Middle West. The pictures are confined largely to the business section.

"ABSINTHE" (Gem), January 7.—Showing the manner in which a young artist comes near to becoming permanently addicted to the insidious French drink. The terrible possibilities of its effect are powerfully pictured, but the girl model drags him back to the straight road again. The studio scenes are good and Miss Weston, as the model, is pleasing. A strong offering of its kind, with splendid photography.

"BAXTER'S BUSY DAY" (Powers), January 10.—A farcical offering, in which Baxter employs a shower bath attachment to get rid of office bores. When they sit down and attempt to take up his time, they are deluged with water. The climax, when Baxter himself is drenched, is amusing.

"SHE SLEPT THROUGH IT ALL" (Imp), January 1.—King Baggot, as Mr. Newlywed, goes out for an evening. He comes home intoxicated and retires in the wrong house. Two women, returning from a suffragette meeting, discover him and call the police. Newlywed escapes and goes home to his own bed safely. His wife sleeps through the whole performance and does not know of his night's adventures. A fairly amusing offering.

"GOLD AND DROSS" (Nestor), January 8.—A Western drama in which a miner strikes gold and rushes home, only to find that his wife has deserted and gone away with a man whom he befriended. The man, who is wanted by the police, is killed and the woman dies on the alkali plains. The story holds the interest. The manner in which the fugitive hides near the blast was well pictured.

"THE RETURN OF LADY LINDA" (Eclair), January 10.—A two-reel offering, brilliantly pictured and with good photographic effects throughout. The plot concerns the love of a beggar baron for a fair woman. She marries another, the wedding scene ten years later in which her son plays daily with the baron's fawn. The friendship is renewed and the baron kills the pet fawn to set his table for the duchess. The child dies and the baron and the duchess are married. In point of costumes, atmosphere, scenic effects and good acting, the picture is a notable one. A good offering.

"THE ACTRESS" (Rex), January 9.—An ingenious plot, which we believe has been done before, in which an actress wreaks out a hard revenge on a woman who offended her. The actress steals her husband's love, only to dismiss him when she finds she has succeeded. The plight of the woman is graphically shown. The man becomes a hopeless drunkard. The ending leaves an unpleasant feeling, even though it is convincing and perhaps true to life.

"HEARTS OF THE NORTHLAND" (Imp), January 9.—A strong story of the Northern woods in which the love affairs of two couples become badly entangled. The story as it progresses, both in the woods and in the few city scenes, is artistically handled. The ending, in which Pierre leaves the weak husband at the foot of the cliff, unable to pull himself up by the rope, gives some play for the imagination and thus avoids the commonplace shooting usually employed in revenge of this sort. A strong film.

"BYGONE DAYS" (Rex), January 12.—This interesting and worthy conception does not work out well because of the poor photography in the first part, created by static light rays. The scenes from Othello, Hamlet and Richelieu pass muster, but the mob scene from Julius Cæsar is badly executed. The introduction of Harry Mitchell, the oldest living actor on the American stage, who has played with Booth, Barrett, Irving and Mansfield, is interesting, but because of its poor mechanical features the film cannot be safely commended. With certain improvements we think it would prove successful.

"THE BALD HEADED CLUB" (Imp), January 11.—Not very strong comedy. The plot turns on a subject which has served many purposes—i. e., a man and a woman trying to conceal from each other the fact that much of their hair has departed.

"SOCIETY RACES AT PIPING ROCK" (Imp), January 11.—On the same reel as the foregoing are some interesting pictures of a recent society affair on Long Island.

"HEROIC HAROLD" (Crystal), January 12.—Broad comedy and slight.

"A NIGHT AT THE CLUB" (Crystal), January 12.—On the same reel is shown the trouble which befell the members of a card club when the wife of one of them got suspicious.

"THE SUSPECT" (Nestor), January 10.—Typical Western melodrama. The finish is marked by a stirring chase. There are fine out-door settings, excellently photographed.

"A SECRET OF THE SEA" (Milano), January 11.—Two reels which would have made a good single-reel melodrama. The story is of an intrigue in high finance and love. There are fine interiors. The picture will interest.

"THEIR ONLY CHILD" (Eclair), January —.—The sub-title on this film is "When He Wants A Dog He Wants A Dog." The picture is an innovation, a novelty, and is the first of a series. It is said the preceeding pictures will excel the initial production in mirth-provoking quality. If they equal it they will be sought by exhibitors. The pictures are hand-drawn and portray the adventures of a young pair of grown-ups and their "only." "Their only child" will make many laughs.

"THE LIE" (Victor), January 10.—Owen Moore and Fritzi Brunette have the leads in a good drama.

"AN APACHE FATHER'S VENGEANCE" (101-Bison), January 10.—An interesting feature of this picture is a sight of little Mona Darkfeather in a ball gown. A little later she is again arrayed in her customary Indian garb. So attired she does her famous vault to the back of a good-sized horse. The picture is notable for the usual Bison photography; it does not depend on this, however, for it is a good Western.

"THE COBBLER AND THE FINANCIER" (Eclair), January 12.—A portrayal of one of La Fontaine's fables. It is a comedy in colors—a fair release.

LILLY FREDRICKSEN.

One of the cleverest of children who are attracting attention in motion pictures is little Miss Lilly Fredricksen, who is known affectionately by her admirers as the "Great Northern Sunbeam." Lilly is only a tot, but she has enacted a great many important roles for the Great Northern Film Company and her ability as a child actress is unquestioned. She is regarded as the mascot of the studios in Copenhagen and goes about her work like an artiste who takes a sincere interest in her work. The "Great Northern Sunbeam" aspires to be a leading woman in after years and in all probability her ambition will be gratified.

The White Gloved Band.

A New Detective Story Thriller by Gaumont.

THE new Gaumont three reel, state rights picture, "The White Gloved Band," is a thrilling dramatic story of a detective who, in the course of trailing down a band of desperate criminals, falls in love with the beautiful woman who acts as its decoy. In quality the picture is like other average offerings released by the Gaumont Company. It has very interesting views of Parisian life, the slums, the lobster palaces and the big hotels; with one or two good exteriors. All the sets are carefully made and give a vivid illusion of reality, especially in the richly furnished hotel rooms. The acting is quite natural even down to such lesser figures as the guests at the fashionable reception and the drinkers at the dive where the band has its headquarters. It will rank with good entertaining offerings, not substantial so much as absorbingly interesting.

Roland Ladeaux, the famous detective, is directed to hunt down the "White Gloved Band" and sees an account of its depredations in a newspaper as he travels from Nice to Paris. As a trap he places a false advertisement in a paper to the effect that a rich Egyptian, Declerim Bey, is stopping at the hotel. This Bey is Ladeaux himself in disguise and it is not long before he meets the woman and other members of the band who suppose him easy prey. There's a scene in which the methods of these worthy gentlemen of light fingers are shown. We see how one pretty girl at a fashionable party becomes unconscious and wakes up without her gems and jewels.

Scene from "The White Gloved Band" (Gaumont).

There are a number of scenes set in Parisian cabarets, where the Apache dance and other interesting novelties are included in the festivities. That the detective falls in love with the girl, is made in the picture to seem as though it were going to be the cause of his failure, for by it he is left for a moment without protection and is captured and held for ransom as the rich foreigner. This capture is made in the girl's boudoir and her attempts to save him result in herself being chloroformed. When she has recovered she finds that he is held in the cellar of the den and manages to effect his release. She still thinks him what he appears, not what he is. He now has enough information to make the arrests and attempts to save her without letting her know enough of his plans to spoil them. She does suspect that something untoward is up and her message to the band, which the detective overhears by the way, is the next but final move in the toils that are being woven about the criminals. For she has directed that they meet and has given the counter sign that will open the door. Her idea is to warn them, but Ladeaux makes the arrest very conveniently, since they are all together. The girl too has to be arrested, but Ladeaux, who has discovered that there is good in her and who loves her, promises that he will effect her release later. Trusting in him, her lover, she submits.

The story is produced so as to be clear as need be, and seems to have been handled effectively as possible, there being a smooth leading up from smaller climaxes to big ones to the end. The photography is of high quality as is usual in Gaumont film and there is much beauty in some of the scenes.

"The Last Blockhouse" (Kalem).

IN this two-reel subject the Kalem Glendale studio shows us what it can do in the way of an Indian Western picture. Producer George Melford has used as a basis for a stirring melodrama an actual incident in the early history of the Far West. He has selected his backgrounds with great care; he has shown fine technical skill in placing his camera so that these backgrounds are revealed to us in all their grandeur; and excellent photography adds to the charm of the views of mountain and dale. There are many scenes of big fields—one of them reminding us of the effective setting of the attack on a wagon train in a previous Kalem picture, "The Frenzy of Firewater." The settlers have thrown their wagons into the form of a circle about the paling-inclosed blockhouse. The camera is placed on a hill so that the attack in the valley is shown in all its details.

One of the features of the play is the exploding of the powder magazine, which wrecks the building and carries annihilation to the defenders of the blockhouse. Of the scenes that stand out, one of the best is where the troop of cavalry rides out to find the Indians. Their route takes them along the ridge of a long hill; riding in single file the military figures are outlined against the skyline and form an effective picture. Another scene worthy of special mention is the duel with knives between the settler Jim and the half-breed Crow. It is stirring and not revolting; it is what men will call a "real scrap."

The cast is excellent. There is that soldier of fortune, General C. Rhys Pryce, veteran of the Boer war and officer under Madero in the late Mexican insurrection—if not in the latest one, at least in the one that succeeded up to the time this is written. General Pryce has the part of Captain Steele of the United States Cavalry. He has done previous work in pictures, but in this production he shows improvement in his appearance before the camera. He does not betray the consciousness that he did in his early characterization. Carlyle Blackwell has the role of Jim, a settler. He carries his part well. William H. West plays Jack, the other settler. This old veteran of the operatic stage as well as of the pictures has done no better screen work than he does here. Paul Hurst is most convincing as Crow, the half-breed; he has the bearing, the converted physiognomy, that make the part. Knute Rahmn gives us one of his well-known Indian portrayals as Pasac, a chief. Last, but by no means least, is the little woman who has the role of Dot, the wife of Jim—Marin Sais. There are two scenes in which she has an opportunity for the display of ability. They are particularly difficult ones—difficult in so far that it requires balanced judgment to avoid exaggeration. She has been seized by the half-breed and thrown into his tent. She is in his power. You feel the terror she displays only in her eyes. It is fine work.

The story of "The Last Blockhouse" is of a party of emigrants on the trail west. They have reached the final outpost and Captain Steele and his troop have bid them good-bye. Crow, a renegade half-breed, and his tribe try to make friends with the settlers. The head of the redmen is enamored with Dot. She very quickly gives him to understand that he is obnoxious to her. In retaliation the Indians are incited by Crow to attack the whites. The redmen set the blockhouse on fire. The flames reach the magazine and the blockhouse is destroyed. Some of the party have left the building before the explosion. Among these are Dot. She is seized and carried away by Crow.

Jack crawls out of the wreckage and goes to find Jim, who had ridden out into the forest to make a clearing. Jack finally manages to reach the husband of Dot, who immediately rides to the fort. The troops are assembled and go to find the redmen. Jim is with them. As the issue is joined he sees Crow put Dot on the back of a horse and try to escape. He pursues and overtakes them. There is a sharp combat. Jim is the victor.

MISTAKES OF MINISTERS RECORDED BY A MINISTER.

AT a recent meeting of an association of ministers in Portland, Ore., an invitation was presented by a local exhibitor, asking the presence of the ministers at a presentation of the Thanhouser picture entitled "The Star of Bethlehem." After considerable debate, it was decided to "thank the exhibitor for his kind invitation," and to further advise him that:—"Fearful lest their presence at even a religious exhibition might be taken as an endorsement of moving pictures, they must respectfully decline."

This action is certainly a surprise to this part of the country, where, only a short while ago, over a thousand ministers—and their wives, accepted the invitation of the Kalem Co., to witness a first view of "From the Manger to the Cross." It must therefore now be asked, which body of ministers were wrong? Judged by the standard of the Portland clergymen, the action of their New York brethren must have been very reprehensible; allowing the world to put such a construction upon their action as to make them appear guilty of the great crime of "endorsing moving pictures." While to the New York clergymen the action of their Portland brethren must seem narrow at least, if not somewhat self-righteous and intolerant.

It now becomes the lot of the writer to endeavor (while holding the balance true), in some measure at least, to find out the better of either one of these two worthy bodies of men; both actuated by the same principles. The first question to ask is: How widely known is the difference between a common moving picture show, with its sometimes more common setting, and an exhibition of high-class cinematography? The second question is, To what extent is it known that the cinematograph is the greatest educational power in the world to-day?

When this double knowledge becomes a part of the general knowledge of any man of average intelligence, it certainly ought not to seem difficult to decide any attitude toward any question of applied cinematography. Without doubt the action of the New York clergy was most commendable. They went with an unbiased mind to see what possibilities were forthcoming from the higher uses over the moving picture. As a result, while many suggestions were made concerning the pictures seen, and with differences of opinion as to the treatment of the subject; the first criticism has yet to be heard regarding the exhibition as a whole. On the contrary, this particular exhibition gave a most valuable impetus to the great value of the picture as an expositor and a teacher. This great opportunity the Portland ministers lost, indeed the question arises if they are not deserving of censure for so blindly approaching such an important occasion, as that which presented itself to them.

If the moving picture shows of Portland are not according to the high ideals of the local clergy, they were afforded a splendid opportunity of showing their contempt of the bad, by cordially welcoming and encouraging the good. The newspaper reports seem to indicate that the worthy clergymen of Portland are altogether opposed to moving pictures; if this is true, they would be worthy associates of the advisers of King Canute; it would be as easy to stem the tide of the ocean, as to endeavor to stem the tide of moving pictures which are now flooding the earth. They are here to stay, as every intelligent person knows; they are rapidly becoming a part of the educational system of the world; they are already installed in many churches, and every minister can use them to a thousand-fold greater advantage than he could the old stereopticon. The minister or ministers who stand in the way of them, will see such lack of wisdom become utter confusion, before many moons pass over them.

The Portland ministers have put themselves on record as being unable to handle a critical situation, in the crisis of the question which affects every young person within their reach. If clergymen will not encourage that which is good, who will? If clergymen will not be on the alert to seize any and every opportunity to advance the higher against the lower, let them not complain if the lower prevails. It is worthy of notice that there are a large number of clergymen who, seeing the good IN the moving picture, are doing all they can FOR the good of the picture. There is no better method to secure every occasion presenting itself for a general uplift of the moving picture than that adopted by the ministers of New York, and ruthlessly thrown aside by the ministers of Portland.

As a matter of history the church has always been slow to grasp timely opportunities, through the short-sightedness of some of its rulers; too often "the children of this world are wiser than the children of light," but there are those who hope, and venture to believe, that in these enlightened times, the great body of the ministry are at least trying within bounds of propriety, to be as wise as the "children of this world." The late General Booth proved the value of this policy, making it a settled principle of the great army which he so successfully headed.

The writer wishes modestly to lay claim to some definite experience in the question of the relations which should exist between ministers and the moving pictures, as a result he does not hesitate to declare, that where the minister handles the picture as an agency for good he gains a great victory, over those who stand at a distance and throw stones. May the attitude of the New York ministers be followed by others, and may the unwise action of the Portland ministers never be repeated. Let good men everywhere stand for good pictures for the good of the people.

THAT EDUCATIONAL NIGHT.

Would that every moving picture house had its "Educational night"; weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly, preferably at the shortest convenient periods. What an advance that would be all along the line; what an attraction to the better class of people; what a raising of the standard of exhibitions; what a value to the young people; what a demand for the support of all local educational authorities. How many exhibitors have thought over this matter seriously? Judging from the few reported instances, it would seem that they are few and far between. We have heard of successful "comic night," also "special feature nights," and such like "specials," but the educational seems sadly neglected. In a few instances where they have been tried they have proved greater house-fillers than any other attraction; it is this fact that makes their neglect appear less excusable.

It is universally acknowledged that it is as an educational power that the moving picture is going to make its greatest mark; that it is in its higher spheres as a helper to the human family that its future life and value will be tested; under these circumstances exhibitors are certainly not awake to their best interests when they ignore what is really a golden opportunity. Manufacturers tell us that they are satisfied that the higher grade pictures will be the pictures of the future; they also admit that there is an undeveloped power that will ultimately demand them, but, they say, there is no immediate call for them. This places the responsibility upon what is known in the commercial world as the "middleman," in this instance the exhibtor, for he stands between the maker and the public. By neglecting the educational picture the exhibitor is hindering a great public good, he is injuring his own cause, and for the time being halting the upward progress of cinematography.

The common excuse that an educational picture does not "take" in an ordinary exhibition is very acceptable, it is out of place; an ill-assorted program is one of the drawbacks to an evening's pleasure. "A time and a place for everything" is at this moment good advice; try a whole evening with educational pictures, the assortment is both large and good. More than this, these pictures have in many instances been so taken as to make them as entertaining as they are instructive, and the writer has been present on many occasions when people have voiced a preference for such an exhibition. Let no exhibitor dissent from this view, or give his opinion to the contrary, until he has the benefit of a proper experience behind him.

Another great consideration lies in the fact that the enemies of the moving picture are not all dead, neither are they all converted; an educational picture is above all possibility of cant, criticism, or opposition. On the contrary, it is a powerful agent for good under all possible circumstances, making a name for itself, its author, its exhibitor, and for the moving picture in general. The moving picture has behind it two classes of people: its friends and its admirers, and those to whom it is a source of income, or financial advantage. To all of these its best good is of paramount importance, its continuity, durability, service and satisfaction are essential; to secure all these, the educational features are surely first and foremost.

Many people have made a failure in some department or other of moving picture work, but it has yet to come to the writer's knowledge that educational cinematography was to blame; on the contrary, ignorance has been the rock on which many a venture has been wrecked. Blow a bugle blast for an advance all along the line, let the first martial order be "An Educational Night," rally the forces in battle array against all kinds of ignorant detractions from what is proving the master magnetism of the moving picture.

MOVING PICTURES IN WICHITA SCHOOLS.

Their Use Will Be Introduced Next Winter In At Least Three Schools of the Kansas City.

(From the Wichita Eagle.)

Wichita public schools are to lead the nation in adopting moving picture courses as planned by Thomas A. Edison and recently announced by him. At least five of Wichita's public schools will have motion picture courses, to be used in connection with regular class work, next winter.

Contracts for the construction of two new buildings, plans for which have been completed recently, were let by the board of education last night. Both of these new buildings will have auditoriums, and the auditoriums will be equipped with motion picture machines. Preliminary plans for the new Carlton school building contemplate the use of the moving picture machine.

Superintendent L. W. Mayberry, in connection with President Louis Gerteis, the architect, and others, have been contemplating the installation of the motion picture machines in the public schools for some time, but nothing was said about it publicly for fear that the details might not be arranged and the plans might fall through. It is now assured that, with the assistance of the extension department of the State university, the new method of teaching with the aid of the latest addition to educational work will be installed next fall in the high school, Louverture, College Hill, Fairmount and Carlton schools. These will be the only buildings provided with auditoriums, and therefore the only ones in which it will be possible to install the new machines.

Upon being questioned as to the reason for the auditoriums, which plans for the three new buildings contemplate, Superintendent Mayberry admitted that he will begin moving picture instruction in the public schools next fall.

"This has been a dream of mine for a couple of years," said Mr. Mayberry, "but I was not sure that it ever would be realized. But Mr. Edison has been dreaming, too, and working out his dreams in terms of material things, and working after a system. In an interview printed in one of the magazines of national circulation only two weeks ago. Mr. Edison unfolded his plan to revolutionize the system of education by introducing moving pictures into the teaching of practically every branch in school and college. We are going to be in the front rank in this general advance. Hereafter, all school buildings erected in Wichita will provide for the new factor in educational work. Fortunately, we have auditoriums in the high school and Louverture school already, although the motion picture was not thought of when those buildings were designed. Now come three fine new buildings, and every one of them, besides having all the other features common to the most advanced type of school buildings, will have provisions for motion picture education.

"It is truly a revolutionary, or rather evolutionary step in education, and we will not be behind. No city in the world has yet installed a system of moving picture education such as Wichita and some other cities will have next winter. A few experiments with the motion pictures have been made, or are being made, in a few of the more advanced cities of the East, but in none have the movies been adopted as a regular part of the curriculum. So, you see Wichita will not be far behind.

"Mr. Edison recently announced that he has invented a motion picture machine for school use which is cheap, safe and satisfactory. It can be bought for about $90 as soon as it is on the market. He has perfected a film which is as much ahead of the old style film, at least for our purposes, as three is better than one. The new film, which is non-inflammable and cannot cause objections on that score, is really three reels in one. It is so arranged that three series of pictures are printed on the one reel of film, and merely shifting a little lever on the machine puts on a different run of pictures. These films will be put out at a very reasonable cost."

The introduction of the new education into the Wichita public schools will cost very little. The extension department of the State university has agreed to furnish the films at a nominal rental. George Scott, traveling representative of the extension department, visited Mr. Mayberry recently. Wichita was the first city visited by him in the interest of the motion picture movement, and he was extremely gratified to learn that this city is ready to take hold of the new system at once.

Almost every subject taught in the grade and high schools will be taught. A portion of the recitation period will be set aside once or twice a week, or oftener, for the illustration of the work under consideration. Mr. Edison has representatives in almost every part of the world at the present time taking pictures for use in the public schools.

The new machines will throw upon the screen a picture eight feet square. There will be no flashing and jumping of the pictures, and no damage to the pupil's eyes, it is asserted.

NEW ENGLAND PICTURE PERSONALITIES.

Frank L. Browne.

It would be like searching for a needle in a haystack to find any New England exhibitors who don't know the subject of this sketch—Mr. Frank L. Browne, manager of the Star theater, Boston. Although he is but thirty-two years of age, Browne has been in the show business for twenty years, going on the stage at the age of twelve, when he was known as "the boy with the girl's voice." In 1895-6-7, Mr. Browne toured the country with Charles H. Hopper's, "Chimmie Fadden Company." In later years, he was associated with "Bennet and Moulton," "Dot Carroll," and other companies, and also was in vaudeville several seasons. He remained on the stage as a performer until he became assistant manager of the theater Comique, Boston's first really representative photoplay theater.

A year later, Browne became manager of the Pastime theater, Boston, which had just been erected, and remained there over two years. leaving to open and generally install a real system in the new Beacon theater, Boston, under a six months contract. After this, Mr. Browne became general manager of the Old South and New Washington theaters, of Boston. His next important move was to the Shawmut theater, the big, Roxbury, Mass., house. This theater, he managed until the owners decided to change the policy of the house. This not being in accordance with his ideas, Mr. Browne stepped out, for he felt certain the new policy would not be conducive to good results. Since leaving there, the house has reverted to its former policy, which surely is a compliment to Browne's good judgment and knowledge of local conditions. When it became known that he was in the market, a number of good propositions were made to him, but he finally decided to accept his present position, and, when this scribe interviewed the gentleman, he was wearing a happy smile, and remarked that he was content in knowing that he had a house to manage which is a "Star" in fact as well as in name.

Mr. Browne has always been identified with every movement calculated to advance the best interests of motography, and can truly be termed, a most worthy member of the trade. As to his ability, his record speaks for itself.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE first week of the new year brought out three interesting announcements in connection with the motion picture field. One was Mayor Gaynor's veto of the proposed ordinance that was rendered worthless by the tacking on of the censorship provision; the second was a successful test of Thomas A. Edison's latest contrivance for the production of talking motion pictures; and the third came in the nature of a report from Baltimore, Md., which, if verified, will place on record one of the most wonderful achievements in cinematographic experiments as applied to hospital work. It is claimed that at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, in that city, successful demonstrations have been made with an apparatus which is literally a motion picture machine by which physicians and relatives can watch the condition of patients, although they may be at the time many miles from the bedside of the afflicted. It is claimed the instrument telegraphs shadow pictures of the vital organs which may be studied simultaneously by hundreds of physicians in as many cities forming a circuit connected with the instrument. This announcement is one of the most weighty of recent years in confirming the declaration that cinematography is in its infancy despite its gigantic strides in recent years.

The announcement from the Edison institution is equally important, but of a somewhat different nature. Its importace has far greater scope so far as the general public is concerned. For years people have been asking why talking motion pictures have not been successfully produced and every once in a while some inventor, including the esteemed wizard of Orange, has come forward with a promise to produce them in the near future. It is claimed now that Mr. Edison has the goods in the form of a machine he calls the kinetophone and this is supplemented by the statement that the apparatus will soon be in operation in about a dozen theaters in New York and Brooklyn. Mr. Edison has been industriously working on the problem of synchronizing sounds and pictures for a long time and those who know him well say that when the talking motion picture becomes a fact he will be the first to launch it; but it is extremely doubtful that the great event will take place in the near future. This is confirmed by a statement credited to Mr. Edison to the effect that "in the next year or two it will be no unusual thing to present an entire play or opera as we now are able to produce a playlet or scenes from the big plays." This is taken as an intimation that the reporters who witnessed the recent tests are a little too enthusiastic over them and that the great inventor must devote more time to the development of the talking motion picture as the public will expect to see it produced.

* * *

One of the most prominent men in the motion picture field when shown the report from Orange said: "It will come, but not for some time. The reports of such successful tests are important now only in so far as they keep the public informed that the strides toward perfection are steady and eventually we will have attained the long desired goal. I think Mr. Edison will be the first in the field with the talking pictures, but I do not look for it within the next year. When it does come it will be preceded by a blare of trumpets that will make the people sit up and take notice. It will completely revolutionize the motion picture industry and eventually make the regular theatrical productions look like 'has beens.' The majority of theatrical managers now look upon motion pictures as a competitor that has come to stay and a great many of them have become investors in one or more branches of the business. One of the most prominent and influential managers in New York said the other day that he stood ready to let the pictures into any house he owns where existing contracts would not interfere. He stated frankly that motion pictures are growing steadily in popularity with a class of people who heretofore have been disposed to discount their importance as a factor in the field of entertainments and when the talking motion picture has positively passed the point of theory and become a practical proposition what is now known as the legitimate theatrical field will become almost a discard."

"That will be a severe blow to the members of the legitimate profession," remarked a bystander.

"Not necessarily," replied the manager. "It will affect just as many, if not more, of the people who are now appearing in the photoplays. I am inclined to think that they will be displaced in the motion picture studios by the regulars. Yes, I know that nearly all the picture producing companies now engage only professional people. From a pantomimic standpoint scores of people who worked on the stage for years without even attracting passing notice have become great favorites with the patrons of the picture houses. Now, as I understand it, one of the chief aims of the talking motion pictures will be to give the public an opportunity to both see and hear celebrated actors and those rising in the theatrical profession. To this end the perfection of the talking motion pictures must involve the reproduction of the voices so that they will be recognizable. This is second in importance only to the synchronizing of sounds and pictures. Motion picture actors and actresses will then become an entirely different class as compared with what they are to-day. They will be required to speak as well as act. Action will not be the sole test and those making up the supporting company will be obliged to handle their parts consistently with the leads. I fear many now playing in the studios will fall short of the mark and the regulars who have seen the photoplays gradually force them into the studios, or into minor positions on the regular staffs, or out of the profession altogether, will find a new field. It is my opinion that the advent of the talking motion pictures will be a great blessing to them."

All eyes are now turned towards the Aldermanic chamber. What will the Aldermen do with that vetoed ordinance? Many of the people interested fear that influences will be brought to bear to have the bill shelved. Certain interests still remain irrevocably opposed to giving the smaller motion picture exhibitors the benefit of increased seating capacity for their houses and it is charged that these interests were responsible for the censorship amendment, feeling secure that it would be declared unconstitutional and that the ordinance would be vetoed and sent back to await the pleasure of the Aldermen. That no action has been taken on it since the Mayor returned the bill is not surprising as the week just closed has been a holiday one. Awaiting action are a number of investors ready to take advantage of the ordinance the moment it is passed. In several known cases plans and specifications are prepared and ready for filing. One of the houses in view is to be erected in the Bronx. It will be the first picture house of its kind to be erceted in Greater New York. The intention is to have a theater of at least six hundred seating capacity on the main floor and the roof is to be so constructed that it may be used as an open-air theater in the summer time. The lower theater is to be so arranged that it may be used on summer nights when the weather will not permit open-air exhibitions. Electric elevators are to be installed to convey patrons to the roof. The enterprise is backed by a syndicate headed by a gentleman who has successfully operated picture houses of the small type in this city for several years. It is exhibitors of this class that the ordinance before the Board of Aldermen was intended to encourage and it is hoped the purpose will not be defeated. It has been stated that there are already plenty of large picture houses in the city and that the plea for increased seating capacity is being made chiefly by some of the smaller exhibitors who would conduct the larger places no better than they do their present holdings. This is not correct. The chief petitioners are men who have capital to invest in the kind of photoplay houses the people want. It is a certainty that at least seventy per cent. of the people who now conduct the small places will continue them under the old system. Conditions will not permit them to enlarge the places. Want of capital or space or a character of lease that will justify them in going to expense in enlarging the houses are among the stumbling blocks that are in the way of some small exhibitors. Many of these people have been the instruments of the faction that retarded the passage of the ordinance for a year and no doubt they will be used again to influence the powers that be to keep the six-hundred provision in indefinite suspension. The question has been so thoroughly thrashed out recently however, that there is good ground for the prediction that public opinion will force an early reconsideration of the ordinance and its final passage.

BRITISH NOTES.

THE vexed question of sacred films is still a very sore point here. This week the Bristol authorities have decided that sacred subjects should neither be exploited nor exhibited in a music hall or picture palace in case the feelings of the community be wounded by such an exhibition. In similar but stronger tone was the denunciation by the Rev. H. B. Chapman of the Kalem Company's film, "From Manger To Cross." But there are two sides to every question and on the whole as the clerical storm is subsiding I think we shall yet see the great Kalem feature in most picture theaters. Prebendary Carlile, the world famous leader of the Church Army, who utilizes the cinematograph in mission work, says: "I am personally in favor of any innocuous method of driving home the religious truths which unfortunately do not readily take a concrete hold upon people's minds. It seems to me that in so far as religious plays are permissible anything treating upon such lines the sacred themes of religion—providing this can be done with good taste and without any trace of vulgarity, and moreover, above all things in a truly devotional spirit—must tend to the betterment of mankind."

Mr. Arthur Percival Graves, a late government inspector of schools and the author of "Father O'Flynn," accords unstinted praise to the film under discussion. "The realistic scenes," he said, "from the New Testament history are profoundly affecting to me, and are, I am confident, calculated only to advance the cause of pure religion by their arresting beauty power, and pathos." Owing to the questionable suitability of the film it was not shown to the inmates of Wormwood Scrubs Prison as intended. The prisoners were not, though, deprived of their exhibition, a programme of scenic and travel subjects being substituted.

The Tariff Reform League has purchased a traveling cinematograph show and are touring country districts with German, American and Colonial films illustrating their own political arguments. This department is described as the most successful.

Trade matters in the metropolis do not present any new phases of striking importance this week. New theaters are continually opening up in the suburbs and every place of amusement on theatrical lines shows animated pictures. I have received notice this week that the New Gallery in Regent Street is shortly to be opened as a luxurious cinematograph house, restaurant and tea rooms. If ever a building figured in the history of London this edifice did and it is now four centuries ago since it was built as a stable. Later it grew into an inn and eventually into the New Art Gallery. Under its roof masterpieces by the leading artists of the country, Watts, Jones, and Tadema, have been exhibited. But this is not by any means London's only "big" show. The news that Mr. Oscar Hammerstein's costly and unsuccessful venture, the London Opera House, is to be converted into a glorified picture theater is now common property, and also at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, there is to be shown the "Miracle" films.

Following letter received this week from the secretary of the Incorporated Association of Kinematograph Manufacturers, Ltd., 62 Strand, London, W. C.:

December 23, 1912.

Dear Sirs: At a meeting of the Kinematograph Manufacturers' Association held last week, the question of the proposed International Kinematograph Exhibition was discussed, and Mr. E. Schofield, the secretary, attended to fully explain the scheme. After very careful consideration, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

> "That after due deliberation the Association of Kinematograph Manufacturers, Ltd., disapproves of the proposed International Kinematograph Exhibition (1913) and cannot permit the use of its name in any connection whatsoever with the said scheme propounded by Mr. E. Schofield. Yours faithfully,

A Franco-Russian firm of film producers has completed a series of reels showing the invasion of Russia by Napoleon I and the disastrous ending of the invasion with the burning of Moscow and the retreat of the Grand Army. The occasion was the hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Beresina. It is said that all of the famous historic paintings of Verestchagin have been used by the producers. The films are to be exhibited with the special approval of the Czar and the Russian government.

A remarkable novelty in motion pictures is reported from Vienna. The musical society Urania has arranged to exhibit biographical films of famous composers and have the pauses between the reels filled in with the best known efforts of such composers. The first evening was devoted to the illustration of the life of Haydn. The press of Vienna speaks in terms of high praise of the educational value of such exhibitions.

Dr. Juan B. Senorans, of the University of Buenos Aires, has just returned to Buenos Aires after an extended tour through Europe, where he visited the principal hospitals and witnessed numerous important operations. He holds the chair of Medicine and Biology in the University of Buenos Aires and has made a special study of the kinematograph as an aid to these branches of knowledge. He personally took a number of moving pictures of the most important operations and expects to show these to his pupils in the usual course of his lectures.

The Kinematographic Exhibition at Berlin, arranged by the local exhibitors, has been opened with great success. The city of Berlin made an appropriation in support of the exposition and offered two silver medals which are to be awarded by a committee of exhibitors.

During the past year France imported moving picture films from Italy, Germany, the United States, and Belgium to the value of little less than $4,000,000, as compared with $2,500,000 in 1911. The exports from France to the countries named amounted to the value of $2,000,000, an increase of half a million over the preceding year.

One of the most notable British releases in January will be "The Woman in White," a Society drama by the Gem Film Co. Most of the incidents are laid in the north country and as the story is an adaptation of Wilkie Collins' famous novel, I will not weary my readers with a detailed description here, suffice it to say that the exciting termination of the many intrigues is magnificently portrayed.

In Buenos Ayres there exists a society of friends of the motion pictures which calls itself "La Sociedad General Cinematografica de Buenos Aires." This body, which pursues no commercial objects, but exists only for the uplift of the motion picture, has recently published a most interesting manifesto in the press of the Argentine Republic, in which it says, among other things: "The future of kinematography lies not in so-called 'comics,' which show bad taste and appeal only to the lowest. The kinematograph of the future must travel the road of art and culture. The kinematograph must do more than gratify our curiosity; it must possess ennobling elements."

A SUGGESTION TO PRODUCERS OF MEXICAN PICTURES.

One of our subscribers in Texas wants to know why actors and actresses who appear as Mexicans in the films do not "make-up" a little as to face and hands. He says it is ridiculous to spectators in that part of the country where they are familiar with Mexicans to see Mexican heros and heroines appear with perfectly white hands and faces. This is another example of how careful our producers must be in regard to every little detail in picture production.

"LUCRETIA BORGIA" (Eclectic).

THERE is another new brand of film in town. Mr. K. W. Linn, who has established spacious quarters at 145 West Forty-fifth Street, where he is now showing "the cream of the European market selected for America," has chosen for his pictures the name of Eclectic Films. A WORLD man, during this week, has been permitted a look at his initial selections; if we may judge the coming releases by these two it is safe to say the American market will be bettered by the additions Mr. Linn will make to it. The pictures seen were "Lucretia Borgia" and "Mona Lisa." Both of these films are of two reels and are hand colored. In dramatic quality and in settings the pictures are unusual. For the latter there are centuries-old castles so that the fifteenth-century atmosphere is always present.

In "Lucretia Borgia" there is selected for portrayal one of the incidents in a career rich in historical memories. While there is a large and competent cast, it is the work of the woman who portrays Lucretia which stands out. She is an actress in the full maturity of her powers. Naturally charming, she is possessed of all the wiles and subtile persuasive manners that mark the experienced woman of the stage. There are many strong scenes which she dominates by the force of her personality. One of the best of these is where Maffio, learning that the woman with whom he has been in love is none other than a member of the family against which he has sworn vengeance, spurns Lucretia. Womanly pride battles with womanly love. One moment she is on the point of retaliation, the next her arms are about the neck of Maffio and she pleads with him for a reciprocation of the affection she bears him.

Lucretia learns that her brother, Cesare, Duke of Valentine, is about to invite to a banquet the heads of surrounding principalities, with the intention of forcing them to relinquish their titles. On a journey Lucretia comes across a young man sleeping by the roadside. From his pocket protrudes an invitation to her brother's banquet. Lucretia falls in love with the sleeping youth. Realizing that the young man is in danger she determines to save him. Following his arrest later, she disguises herself, secures admission to the prison, drugs the guards and aids Maffio to escape. Maffio returns home and vows vengeance upon all Borgias. Later Maffio meets Lucretia when she is being attacked by robbers. The woman wears a mask; Maffio is unaware that the woman he has saved is the same one who has saved him; neither has he knowledge that the friend in need who aided him is a member of the dreaded family. Lucretia invites Maffio to a ball she is to hold, but does not reveal her identity. At this function Maffio learns the truth and repudiates the woman. She pleads with him, but he shows her the significant "Death to the Borgias" cut in his arm.

To atone for his act in falling in love with the woman, Maffio desecrates a statue of the Borgias. He submits to arrest. Lucretia still tries to save him, and asks the Duke of Valentine to permit her to administer the punishment. The Duke smilingly consents. There is a strong scene in which Lucretia finally wins the love of Maffio and the young man agrees to accept her good offices in assisting him to escape. As Maffio descends a rope which Lucretia throws from a balcony the soldiers of the Duke shoot him. He falls to the ground dead. Lucretia mourns over the body of her lover.

"CHILD LABOR" (Majestic).

The great interest, by press and public, shown in the child labor conditions throughout the country, makes the Majestic release of Jan 14th, called "Child Labor," a picture demanding special attention.

That the subject is a large and an important one is admitted by our greatest statesmen and deepest thinkers. That it is a subject of general concern with a wonderful appeal to all classes is now a matter of record. The wide possibilities offered for strong dramatic situations and deep heart interest were taken advantage of to make a photoplay of unusual strength, and the clever acting of pretty little Runa Hodges, the four year old leading lady, surrounded by the Majestic Company's most popular players, makes "Child Labor" one of the best offerings of the season.

The story of the play reads like a page taken from the history of any small manufacturing town where children slave in the mills during the hours that they should be in school. Little "Runa," the factory owner's daughter, is raised in luxury, but her happy child's life is filled with sorrow when she happens to stray into the work rooms of her father's factory and see the little tots of her own age toiling through the long weary days. A severe illness brings on hours of delirium in which she raves about the poor children at their work. Her father's eyes are opened and the last scenes of this beautiful little heart-interest drama show the children, who have been freed from their bondage and put into kindergartens and schools established by their former employer, grouped around the bed of their little deliverer offering up a prayer of thanksgiving.

"THE LAIRD OF McGILLICUDDY" (Essanay).

The Essanay Film Manufacturing Company have released several screamingly funny comedies, but not as funny as "The Laird of McGillicuddy." This one is a scream from start to finish.

Ruth, a charming young coed, breaks her engagement with William Mason. She tells him she wants a titled husband with a fortune. Mason, with a gloomy countenance returns to his room at the frat house. There gathered are his chums, "Cal" Robbins, Wash Bryant and Sid Rathburn. Noticing the look of discontentment on the face of Mason, they ask the reason for it. Mason tells them. "Cal" looking out the window sees the milkman and motions for him to come up. Mason leaves the room. The milkman is persuaded and bribed to go to the ball that evening as the Laird of McGillicuddy. The editor of the college paper is given the information that the Laird of McGillicuddy would be present at the ball. Ruth, with a number of her girl friends, read the paper and prepare for the big festivities. That evening "Skinny" the milkman, in the costume of a Scotch Highland nobleman is presented to the ladies at the ball. He dances with Ruth, tears her dress, and disgraces himself generally. Mason, discovering his sweetheart's dress torn, pins it up for her. Admiring his gallant procedure she smiles at him. Finally, when the clock strikes twelve, the Laird of McGillicuddy transforming himself into "Skinny" the milkman, by pulling his false beard from his face, tells the group about him that it is about time he was starting on his milk route. Being thoroughly disgusted with royalty, pretty Ruth consents to be the charming bride of Mason.

Scene from "The Laird of McGillicuddy" (Essanay).

Augustus Carney, as the Laird of McGillicuddy, is the funniest thing ever seen in motion pictures. "Billy" Mason as the true lover of the fair Ruth is clever.

This production is booked for release January 23rd.

"THE TEST" (Great Northern).

In many respects this comedy is one of the most unique that has been presented for the consideration of the picture loving public. It is entirely original in conception and carries an amusing plot that is calculated to cause laughter in ripples from start to finish. Alexander Groot, a retired merchant, after a conference with his wife, makes a codicil to will to the effect that the fortune, which he has bequeathed to his son Cecil, is provisional upon the marriage of the latter with Lizzie Ford. Cecil is an army officer and never has met Miss Ford and in consequence he is inclined to resent the codicil to his father's will. His sister Emily had been a college chum of Miss Ford and it was during a visit to the university that Mr. Groot and his wife met the young woman and became attracted by her charm of manner. They then decided that she would be the proper sort of girl to become the wife of their son. Miss Ford, during the absence of Cecil, pays a visit to the Groot home and in a spirit of fun proposes that she play the role of maid to Emily, the young officer's sister. Upon the arrival of the latter he at once becomes smitten with the charms of the new maid and makes his affection evident at their every meeting. Miss Ford, as may well be imagined holds Cecil at arm's length and this simply fills him with all the more admiration for her womanly qualities. There are frequent meetings and protestations of love on the part of the young man, but the time arrives when the deception must cease. Miss Ford leaves the house unknown to her lover and makes a short railway journey. She has confided in Emily, however, and on the following day a telegram is received at the Groot home, announcing that Miss Ford is on her way to pay a visit. Cecil is not only downcast over the departure of the new maid, but inwardly angered over the proposed visit of his fiancee, a girl whom he supposes he has never met. Cecil is enjoying a horseback ride and arrives at his father's home at the same time that Miss Ford drives up in her landeau. There are greetings on the part of the parents and Emily, and then an introduction to Cecil. Imagine his delight and surprise when he finds that the supposed maid, to whom he breathed love, is none other than Lizzie Ford. The sequel may readily be imagined. The little comedy is splendidly staged and acted in the standard Great Northern method.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS FAVOR THE GRIFFIN BILL.

A special meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York was held on Wednesday, January 8th, in the Union Square Hotel to take up the proposed amendment to the penal code, providing for the admission of unaccompanied children to moving picture theaters. The officers of the organization, Mr. Trigger and Mr. Ascher, spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Tichenor commended speedy and vigorous action on the part of the organization and suggested the necessity of collecting funds to defray the expenses of agitation. The meeting was very well attended and thirty new members were received.

"THE FARMER'S DAUGHTER" (Essanay).

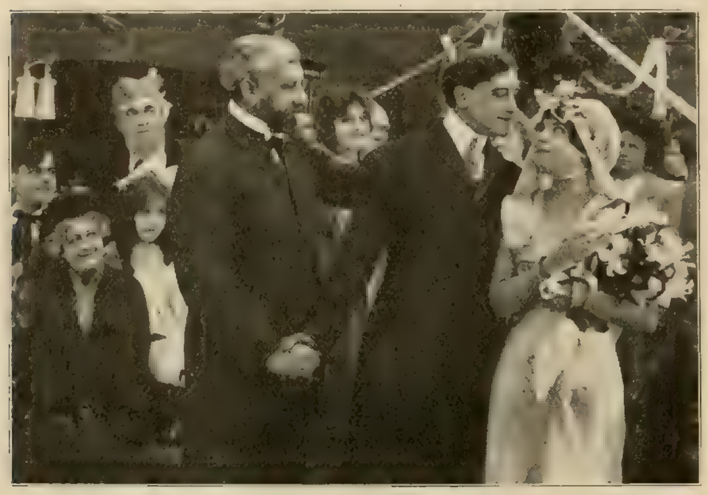
In "The Farmer's Daughter," a great theme is enacted in an exceptionally clever manner. Reginald Hoops, Jr., son of a wealthy financier, meets with an automobile accident. The car turns turtle and young Hoops is pinned beneath the wreckage. Farmers in the immediate vicinity go to the rescue. John Allen, a farmer, carries young Hoops to his home and sends for a doctor. Hoops is informed by the doctor that he must remain in the farmer's home until he has recovered. Nellie Allen, a beautiful type of the fair sex, and daughter of Farmer Allen, nurses Hoops back to his normal condition. Hoops becomes infatuated with Nellie and proposes to her. They elope, because it's considered more romantic. In the meantime, Mrs. DePuyster-Ives St. John, mother of Alice, the young debutant to whom Reginald has been engaged, prior to his meeting with the pretty farmer's daughter, issues engagement announcements. Reginald and his charming Nellie arrive in the city, and he takes her to a friend's home until he can persuade his father to consent to the marriage. Alice St. John calls on Reginald's father. Mr. Hoops asks Alice if she would marry his son if he were poor. She tells him most emphatically that she certainly would not. Mr. Hoops tears up the engagement announcement, and asks the lady to kindly leave his home. Mr. Allen wires to his wife telling her to come to town, that wedding cards have been issued. The family arrive and a quiet wedding takes place.



Scene from "The Farmer's Daughter" (Essanay).

Beverly Bayne distinguishes herself admirably as Nellie Allen. Francis X. Bushman plays the part of Reginald Hoops, Jr., well.

This production is booked for release Friday, January 24th.

MUTUAL EXCHANGE IN BUFFALO.

The Mutual Film Corporation, in response to the urgent requests of exhibitors of Western New York, has opened a branch exchange in Buffalo, the temporary quarters of which are located at 35 Niagara Street.

Exhibitors of Buffalo and vicinity quickly showed their appreciation of this and in four days after its opening, the exchange had ten customers. Several more are being added every day. The manager is Max Schachtel, formerly of the Lake Shore Film and Supply Company, and his assistant is M. Malaney, also of the Lake Shore. Both are well known in the film business.

The Mutual, of Buffalo, is now in a position to handle every grade of service and at the present rate of growth it will be one of the most favorable of all Mutual offices within a year. A complete line of supplies will be carried in connection with its films.

The exchange has secured more elaborate quarters to which it will move as soon as they are available to its use.

MUTUAL DECLARES A DIVIDEND.

Charles J. Hite, treasurer of the Film Exchange Corporation, which is the holding company of the Mutual Film Corporation, announces a dividend of 3½ per cent on the preferred stock of that company, payable January 14th to the stockholders of record. The Mutual Film Corporation now has thirty-two branches in various cities throughout the country.

GENE GAUNTIER PLAYERS AT WORK.

They Are Entertained Also by Old Jacksonville Friends—Fellow-guests With the Southern Kalem Company.

The Gene Gauntier Feature Film Company left New York on Saturday, December 21st, on the Clyde liner Huron, en route for Jacksonville, Fla., where they are now comfortably established at 737 Tallyrand Avenue, on the St. John's River. The company consists of Gene Gauntier, Sidney Olcott, Jack J. Clark, Arthur Donaldson, Robert Walker, John Vincent, Allen Farnam, Herbert Tracy, Helen Lynn, Florence Donaldson, Hermann Obrock (cameraman), Ross Fisher and William Bailey.

Two beautiful Southern homes whose grounds adjoin have been leased; stage, laboratory, make-up and costume buildings erected, and the first three-reel subject is well on its way to completion. As this is the fifth season Miss Gauntier and Mr. Olcott have been in Jacksonville, and the third for Mr. Clark and Mr. Farnam, they number hosts of friends among the townspeople, and the surrounding country is an open book to them. Mr. Farnum, by the way, is the scenic artist who is responsible for the magnificent interiors and studio sets in "From the Manger to the Cross," having accompanied Mr. Olcott on every transatlantic trip the O'Kalems and El Kalems have made. Mr. Donaldson is also an old friend to picture audiences, for he was a member of the second O'Kalem trip to Ireland, and will be well remembered for his fine impersontion of the Irish priests in "Rory O'More" and "Colleen Bawn." Herbert Tracy was also a member of Mr. Olcott's company in Ireland this past year, having joined them in Manchester, England, and returned to the United States with them. Mr. Obrock comes from Pathe and Gaumont, and is considered one of the finest cameramen in the business; Miss Lynn has held the position of leading woman for Pathe and Rex, and in appearance makes a splendid foil for Miss Gauntier. Altogether, Mr. Olcott and Miss Gauntier have surrounded themselves with an exceptionally strong company, and some brilliant work may be looked forward to. It was a meeting of the clans and a renewal of old friendship when, on Christmas day, the Southern Kalem Company and the newly formed Gene Gauntier Feature Players met at Oak Hall, the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hemmenway at Floral Bluff, Fla. The two companies are closely affiliated by bonds of friendship and years spent in companies together under Mr. Olcott's direction. Some forty sat down to the banquet board at which many of them have been every Christmas they have spent in Jacksonville for the past five years. There were toasts and speeches, expressions of good-will and affection, dancing, singing, music, monologues and merrymaking until the wee sma' hours. Southern hospitality is proverbial, but nowhere is it more manifest than when Oak Hall throws open its doors and Mr. and Mrs. Hemmenway welcome their friends the picture players.

Some of the guests present were: Gene Gauntier, Sidney Olcott, Kenean Buel, Jack J. Clark, Marion Cooper, Arthur Donaldson, Hal Clements, Robert G. Vignola, Henry Hallam, Helen Lynn, George Hollister, Alice Hollister, Marguerite Cortel, Mrs. Cortel, Allen Farnam, John Vincent, Robert Waker, Rerbert Tracy, Hermann Obrock, Mr. and Mrs. Kaywood, Mr. Nierpass, Mr. Peck, Mrs. Peck, Miss Holden and Mr. and Mrs. Hemmenway.

MILLIONAIRE PHILANTHROPISTS COMMEND ASSAILED FILM.

Recently a permanent New York newspaper in its "moving picture crusade" spoke in denunciation of a Thanhouser film entitled "The Other Half," which merely gave a true picture of conditions among the poor of New York. At a recent meeting of the Board of Managers of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, a report was made on the same film and approval unanimously passed on it. The managers are almost all of them in the millionaire class and undoubtedly there has never been so moneyed a class to give praise to a motion picture. They were:

Henry G. Barbey, George Blagden, Cornelius N. Bliss, Jr., George S. Brewster, Charles C. Burlington, B. Ogden Chisolm, R. Bayard Cutting, R. Fulton Cutting, Eugene Delano, Livingston Farrand, M. D., John Greenough, Frederic Trevor Hill, Franklin B. Kirkbride, Albert G. Milbank, Robert Shaw Minturn, Frederic P. Moore, Acosta Nicholas, Leonard E. Opdycke, Amos R. E. Pinchot, Percy R. Pyne, Harry Pelham Robbins, DeWitt Seligman, Jr., James Sheldon, T. Franklin Smith, M. D., Willard D. Straight, Philip Van Ingen, M. D., John Seeley Ward, Linsly R. Williams, M. D., Charles Wisner.

Some day the motion picture—especially the newspaper-assailed motion picture—is coming into its day. They say every dog has one!

DEATH OF L. G. COOVER.

It is with deep regret that the Moving Picture World announces the death of L. G. Coover, the well-known advertising man of the Eclair Company and of Union Features, which occurred on the morning of January 8. Mr. Coover was taken suddenly ill at his desk on the afternoon of January 4, and was taken home. His malady was at first diagnosed as peritonitis, but later the doctors decided it was appendicitis. Mr. Coover was taken to a hospital and immediately operated on, but he failed to rally from the shock.

Mr. Coover, who was only thirty years old, had made many friends among the men of the moving picture industry, where his peculiar ability and versatility were recognized. He had at his command a wide vocabulary and the knack of so phrasing his matter as to strike and hold the attention of a reader. Mr. Coover had written many scenarios, and it was known to his intimates that he had ambition to advance himself in this profession. That he had before him a bright career was the firm belief of those who knew him best, and his untimely end will be mourned not only by all of those associated with him in the Eclair office but also by a legion of other friends in the industry and out of it. He leaves a mother, whose home is in Los Angeles, Cal.

FROHMAN NAMES MORE STARS FOR PICTURES.

Miss Ethel Barrymore is the next of the prominent stars to figure as an actress in the moving picture theater, having signed a contract with the Famous Players Film Company of which Daniel Frohman is the managing director. Miss Barrymore is now finishing a four weeks vaudeville engagement in adjacent cities in J. M. Barrie's "Twelve Pound Look" and will appear in February in Mr. Frohman's picture studio on West 26th St. Miss Barrymore will appear in a play to be selected later, supported by a special company. Following Miss Barrymore, Mr. Frohman has arranged for Mrs. Fiske's appearance on the screen; Mrs. Langtry and afterwards, William A. Faversham and Julie Opp in "Julius Caesar." Mr. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda" will be exhibited in moving picture theaters next month. He will be followed by James O'Neill as "Dantes" in "Monte Cristo," a role he has played for twenty years. Other stars to appear later in their principal roles are Miss Viola Allen and Henry E. Dixey.

NEW LICENSED EXCHANGE PROJECT.

Offices have been opened in the Masonic Building, 23rd street and Sixth Avenue, New York, by the Kinetograph Company, the purpose of which is to operate exchanges throughout the United States and Canada, for the leasing of licensed pictures in competition with the General Film Company.

The officers of the new company are J. J. Kennedy, president; P. L. Waters, vice-president and treasurer, and Dwight MacDonald, secretary. Mr. Kennedy was formerly president of the General Film Company and Mr. Waters was general manager of the same company. Mr. MacDonald was manager of the Motion Picture Patents Company when that concern was first formed. An exchange license has been granted to the new company by the Patents Company, and large orders for pictures have already been placed with several licensed manufacturers. The Kinetograph Company will not manufacture pictures.

An entire floor of the Masonic building has been leased for the local branch of the Kinetograph Company and is now being fitted up in the most approved style. J. N. Naulty, once manager of the Waters exchange and then assistant manager to Mr. Waters in the General Film Co., is connected with the new enterprise.

MIRROR SCREEN INSTALLATIONS.

Recently Messrs. Schafer & Bender have installed in their new theater at 625 State Street, Schenectady, N. Y., a large mirror screen, which they purchased through Messrs. Frank and George Manning, the New York representatives of the Mirror Screen Company.

The Lewis Theater, at 5 Lewis Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., is another purchaser of the mirror screen through the same agents, and still another and larger mirror screen, 12 feet by 16 feet, has been installed at Ben Title's T. N. F. theater, at 16th Street and Newkirk Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. All of the above screens are of the fireproof variety.

NEW MUTUAL BRAND.

It is announced that a new brand of pictures to be called the "Royal" will shortly appear in the program of the Mutual Film Corporation. The makers of this brand are at present under cover, and the first announcement is given in their advertisement in this issue of the Moving Picture World. The Royal pictures will be made at the new studio, Fairview Place, Los Angeles.

NEWS FROM THE STUDIOS.

The Universal is perhaps the first company that has succeeded in successfully photographing a real sandstorm. This was done recently in J. F. Macdonald's production of "On Burning Sands." Realism could not well be carried further. The whole company worked cheerfully under the greatest difficulties, content that they were making history for the Universal. The camera had to be braced and held, and the actors had to think of their parts, and at the same time prevent themselves from being blinded. Only those who have been in a desert sandstorm can possibly know what it means. The sand searches out every nook and corner, and one's eyes and ears are soon full.

On Christmas Day the members of the Selig company summoned Mr. Stedman, the manager, and Mr. Duncan, the producer, to the office. When they appeared Mr. Cuneo, in behalf of the company, presented Mr. Stedman and Mr. Duncan each with a very hansome elk tooth. The teeth came from the elk that was killed some time ago in a picture produced by Mr. Stedman called "Between Love and the Law." In this production Mr. Duncan played the leading role. The elk was one of the largest killed in this part of the country for some years, and the teeth are unusually handsome, and as Mr. Stedman and Mr. Duncan are both Elks, the present was most appropriate and was much appreciated by the two Selig members.

Harry Cohen, of the Selig Polyscope Company, left Chicago New Year's night to take charge of the offices of the General Film Company, No. 7 Front Street, Toronto, Can.

One of the magazine writers on the Northwest is J. Edward Hungerford, of Walla Walla, Wash. He recently became associated with the scenario department of the Selig Polyscope Company.

Director Montgomery, of 101 Bison, has presented Mona Darkfeather with a complete new Indian outfit. It weighs twenty-five pounds and is a magnificent piece of work and a tribute to the ability of the Universal Indians' handicraft, for it was made in the Indian village. It is of buckskin and almost covered with bead work and weird paintings. Every design has special significance, as is the way with Indians. Mona is as proud as a peacock of her new outfit and she is a good judge, too, as is evinced by some of the beautiful work she has made herself.

Miss Beverly Bayne, of Essanay's eastern stock company, has been featured on the south side of Chicago at several of the leading photoplay houses the past two weeks. Miss Bayne's ability to portray comic and dramatic parts has won for her thousands of admirers.

Julius Frankenburg, the right bower of Oscar Eagle's office in the Selig polyscope plant, whose new psychological play, "His Dual Nature," is a remarkable study, last week married Marguerite Hemple, newly arrived from across the sea.

Rex de Rosselli, of the Selig Colorado studios, had the X-ray turned on him last week to determine the location of a piece of bone which was shattered from his hip some weeks ago. The bone being located, Mr. Rosselli went on the operating table and a deep incision was made and the fractured piece of bone removed. Mr. Rosselli was confined to his bed on Christmas, but is now on the high road to recovery.

Milton H. Fahrney's company at Universal City has been considerably strengthened by the addition of Belle Bennett, late of Lubin's, and Bob Leonard, of Selig's, two splendid exponents of the silent drama. With these two players, Jackie Saunders, Gertrude Claire, William Rhyno and Paul Machette, Mr. Fahrney has a most capable company. Jefferson Osborne too will soon be in the ranks again, as he will shortly leave the hospital, with nothing but the unpleasant memory of the fire to remind him of his long absence.

Sydney Ayres, the well known actor, is heading another Western Universal company. Mr. Ayres, who has had previous experience in the moving picture world with the Selig, Nestor and other companies, will act as director and play his own leads. Associated with him will be Betty Harte, who established such a splendid reputation with Selig; William Carroll, of the Biograph and Universal; and Charles Dudley, the well known Pacific Coast actor, who was recently with Mr. Fahrney's company. Mr. Ayres will put on Western double-reel features.

"THE ELUSIVE KISS" (Pathe).

Any person who has spent his or her honeymoon, or ever intends to spend one, will appreciate Pathe's "The Elusive Kiss," which will be released January 25th, a comedy dealing with the difficulties of Mr. and Mrs. Pawling, who sought the pleasures of kissing without the embarrassment of outside observation. The bashful Newlyweds give a reception immediately after the wedding ceremony and the guests proceed to enjoy the shyness of the happy couple, as guests will do on these occasions. Every time Charley and Gwendoline are posed for a kiss, a guest breaks in upon their solitude and the project has to be temporarily abandoned. The kiss is sweeter for its frequent postponement when they start upon their honeymoon trip. Gwendoline is aboard the rapidly moving train when she discovers that Charley has been left behind. Straightway she pulls the emergency cord upsetting everybody in the car. She detrains, and in tears, starts for home and Charley, picking her way carefully over the roadbed. A train rushes toward her and Gwendoline climbs a signal post in terror. As the train flies past, Charley, from a car window, sees his bride. He too, pulls the emergency cord and the train stops too suddenly for the passengers' comfort. The presence of the passengers prevents their enjoying the osculation even now. They borrow a hand-car to get back to the station. At a secluded spot they stop and are about to kiss when they see a train approaching from behind. They have a wild race to pump the hand-car to a siding but manage to throw the switch in time to avoid being wrecked, and after the train has passed and they are safe and alone, they capture "The Elusive Kiss."

Scene from "The Elusive Kiss" (Pathe).

NEWS OF WARNER'S FEATURES.

Jerome Abrams, who has had charge of the Boston office of Warner's Features, has gone to Atlanta, where he will assume charge of the office in that city, vice Mr. Bromberg, who has resigned to take the management of the Mutual Exchange in that city.

H. M. Warner, who has been situated in St. Louis, where he has had general supervision of all the Warner agencies, has removed his office to New York City, where he will also assist Mr. Warner in the general management. The St. Louis office will in future be under the management of S. L. Warner, who will, as a district manager, have charge of five offices in the Middle West.

M. Levinson, who has been in charge of the San Francisco office, has been appointed a district manager, the Portland (Oregon) office also being now under his supervision.

CLUNE GETS BIG KALEM FEATURE.

William H. Clune has purchased the state rights for California and Arizona for the Kalem's "From the Manger to the Cross" and has already begun making arrangements to book the production throughout both states. The price paid for the two states has not been publicly stated but it is said to be close to $10,000.

SIMPLEX MACHINES IN KEITH'S THEATER.

The R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company, 597 Washington Street, Boston, have just installed in Keith's Theatre, Portland, Maine, two Simplex moving picture machines. This will be one of the finest moving picture theaters in that part of the country and is a credit to the industry. Mr. Marson also reports many other sales of Simplex projectors throughout New England.

OUR "LITTLE MARY" MAKES A HIT.

Our "Little Mary" wins golden laurels from the critics for her acting in Belasco's production of "A Good Little Devil," in the role of Juliet, the blind child sweetheart of the little poet, presented at the Republic Theater, New York, January 8th. The New York World says: "As for the acting, perhaps the honors went to Mary Pickford—a remarkable 'find' for Mr. Belasco—who gave a lovely impersonation of the blind Juliet."

In the New York Times this is said: "Both in her more malicious and softer moods, Miss Mary Pickford not only looks the little Juliet to perfection—a beautiful picture child—but acts the role with abundant grace and feeling and real childish spirit, a quality which is most admirably conveyed. Also Miss Pickford's diction is so good that it suggests the 'movies' as a desirable place for some of our actors to improve their elocution."

Little Mary, by the way, is a former protege of Mr. Belasco, having appeared in his production of "The Warrens of Virginia," in 1907, in a juvenile part.

We who have been watching the silent drama are not a bit astonished that our "Little Mary" has taken everyone into camp in the poetic role given to her by Mr. Belasco. As for the elocution, that is of course a critic's way of increasing the value of his compliment, but there is something in it, even literally. As to the value of motion picture work in the way of a school of acting, ask any of our more competent players.

EXCHANGE MEN IN SESSION.

As we go to press the Independent Exchange Company, of which William Oldknow, of Atlanta, is president, is holding a convention at the Hotel Astor. The sessions are secret. There are present exchange men from all over the country. Among them are William Oldknow, A. S. Davis of Pittsburg, Frank Bailey of Boise, Idaho; Dick Ioland of Pittsburg. Meyer Silverman of Pittsburg and Julius Hopp of Chicago.

THE FILM AS A DETECTIVE.

Did you ever think of the motion picture as a detective in ferreting out dark secrets and giving them the light of publicity on the screen? Thanhouser shows how with "The Evidence of the Film," released Friday, January 10th. The story tells how a conscienceless broker changes a messenger boy's precious parcel, substituting a bundle of worthless paper for one of valuable bonds, with which the boy had been originally dispatched. The substitution, though, is made with the focus of a moving picture camera, unknown to the dishonest broker. Indeed, the messenger did not know of the nearby camera either, but his sister was an employee in the factory of a moving picture company, and at her work of inspecting film sees the broker's deed! The police have arrested her brother, when she summons them to the picture factory and flashes the tell-tale scene on the screen. The "picture show" rights all wrongs.

PUNCH COMPANY GOES TO "JAXVILLE."

"Punch" comedy company releasing a comedy split reel every Thursday leaves for Jacksonville, Fla., on Jan. 25th, via., the Steamship Iroquois.

Director Chas. Weston is in charge and takes with him Herbert Rice, Arthur Finn, Fred Saums, Lord Lilford, Virginia Westbrook, Alice Inward, and others not yet determined. Mr. Weston has made arrangements with the captain of the Iroquois to allow him to take several scenes during the voyage.

"THE SPECTRE BRIDEGROOM" (Eclair).

The Eclair Film Company will release on January 23, through the Universal program, a two-reel feature which, for artistic work, settings, groupings, costumes and atmosphere, is more than unusual. "The Spectre Bridegroom" is made in Eclair's best style, and in the cast are all of its star players. The picture is an adaptation of Washington Irving's story, and the location is placed in the United States and the period at the close of the American Revolution. An elaborate musical program has been prepared for the use of exhibitors in adequately presenting the film.

---

Charlie Weston holds the palm for producing the craziest picture ever presented—a Punch release called "Tom, Dick and Harry." The crowning "bug" incident in this "nutty" comedy is reached when the midget, Herbert Rice, discovers that he is being followed by a rat and disguises himself as a cat in order to make good his escape. During rehearsals one of the white rats ate an imitation diamond that was being used as a prop, and Charlie claims that even the rat's mind was affectetd by his crazy surroundings.

LOUISVILLE.

THERE is little to be said regarding the strike which is on in Louisville moving picture circles. The union operators have left their posts quietly, barring incidental happenings of an undesirable nature which arose when the trouble first developed, and both this contingent and the exhibitors are maintaining a dignified, conservative stand. Neither side evidences any disposition to capitulate. The employers say that they are willing to accept union labor without a murmur if certain concessions touching the employment of musicians are made them. The operators and musicians, who have allied forces, declare that this will never be done. This is the situation. The positions of all operators who have left active service have been filled with men from other cities, and no trouble between the strikers and their successors has been experienced, while every show has been given according to schedule and the day's business has not been embarrassed in the least. The exhibitors have handled the operators' strike in the manner in which they dealt with the walk-out of musicians three months ago, not the least trouble having been encountered in either instance.

A feature office for the Princess Amusement Company is the latest institution in the Louisville moving picture field. Arrangements between the local amusement interests and the Union Film Company, of New York City, have been completed and the Princess is now to distribute Union features through southern playhouses. The special department is in charge of Irvin Simon, who is widely known in amusement circles in the land of cotton. John Tippets, of New York, manager of the Union Film Company, paid a visit to Mr. Simon a few days ago and closed the deal. The long line of Princess successes in the moving picture field forecast a bright career for Union features in the showhouses of this section.

A. L. Ward, an expert union moving picture operator, who is on strike with his colleagues as the result of the disagreement in this city, has co-operated with C. F. Dunn, a photoplay musician, to organize a company of eight union theatrical employees who will prove that the unionist locked out of a position is fully able to take care of himself. The company has secured a couple of up-to-date machines and a number of good reels, with which it will tour Kentucky and neighboring states during the next three months, showing in town after town and staging a moving picture performance which will undoubtedly deliver the goods for the peripatetic exhibitors.

With a capitalization of $10,000, the Cosmopolitan Amusement Company, of Gary, Ind., was recently incorporated. The company will do business in one of the largest and most prosperous cities in the northern part of the Hoosier state. Its incorporators are as follows: Morris L. Wohl, Louis Friedman and Isador J. Siegfried.

M. A. Neff, of Cincinnati, O., president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and one of the best-known men in the national industry, recently returned to Cincinnati from a tour of Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Texas. While en tour Mr. Neff put the finishing touches upon some important work, the League now being established with chapters in thirty-two different states. The chief executive is in close touch with Attorney-General Hogan, of Columbus, O., relative to important legislation affecting moving picture shows which is in prospect in the Buckeye state.

Moving picture exhibitors in Dayton, O., the home of the cash register, are now combined to fight the annual license fee of $40 which the municipal authorities of Dayton are seeking to renew. The photoplay interests declare that the additional tax burden which they have borne is unreasonable and it is probable that a test case wil be carried through the courts for adjudication, as the exhibitors have co-operated in their stand and Mayor Phillips has placed the matter in the hands of City Solicitor Breene.

The Crystal Theater in Franklin, Ky., was recently leased, stock and barrel; by the Simpson County Bank in that city, for the purpose of affording a free 12-hour entertainment to every child under twelve years of age in Simpson county. The financial institution decided to show its appreciation of the favors of its patrons in that section and logically hit upon a day's free picture show at the Crystal as the most pleasing feature that could possibly be devised for the rising generation.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

PITTSBURGH.

TWO storerooms in the Rodgers building, in lower Federal Street, are to be remodeled into a moving picture theater, as the result of a lease closed here recently. Considerable money will be spent in building a new front on the property and in making the structure otherwise in a position to be utilized as a theater.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Pittsburgh Local No. 1, of Pennsylvania, have removed their headquarters from No. 233 Fifth Avenue to large and more commodious offices at No. 127 Fourth Avenue.

Christmas brightness was shed into the lives of orphans, cripples and deaf mutes of the city's philanthropic institutions last week when the little folks were the guests of the Bijou Dream theater at No. 6021 Penn Avenue, this city. Special cars were run by the trolley company to transport the children to and from the various institutions. A fine program was given all the week and the little tots thoroughly enjoyed the entertainment provided for them.

Because a moving picture man took pictures of the wreckage of the Baltimore & Ohio train at Roddy's Curve and also snapped pictures of coal trains running down the grade, several of the officials of the railroad company fear that the pictures may be used before a jury in a suit for damages to be brought by the passengers who were injured in the wreck. Probably the cameraman was a traveling representative of one of the weekly events films, and was merely taking the pictures to show to patrons of our picture theaters just where the wreck occurred.

D. L. MANLEY.

Gentlemen:
I have been operating Simplex Machine No. 133 for almost a year. It has given perfect satisfaction and we run thirteen hours per day. I spend less time to keep it in running order than any machine I have ever run, so when quitting time comes at night the operator goes home with the rest of them.

Member, Kansas City Moving Picture Operators' Union.

Gentlemen:
A machine of its ability will almost talk for itself. Simple as the name. Would not accept any other machine in my two houses. Easiest to set up; easiest to operate. The lamp is equal to the machine. The whole machine is built heavy and equal to that "All-day run." Anyone who knows anything about all of the makes of machines will say: "Put in a Simplex and the people will be safe from fire."

Romeo's departure leaves Juliet open to the demands of her father, who insists upon her immediate marriage to Tybalt. In terror she flees to the old Friar, who gives her a powerful sleeping potion, and on the day she is to marry Tybalt, her friends are horrified to see her fall into a deathlike swoon. She is interred in the vault of her ancestors, and Romeo, hearing of her death, returns home, enters the vault and after gazing upon the face of his beloved plunges a dagger into his heart. Juliet awakens to see him expiring, and in her agony seizes the same dagger, inflicts a death-wound, and expires beside her lover.

The accused warrior is ordered before the great chief "White Eagle," and the death sentence imposed: "He that kills a brother must die. Twelve moons hence his spirit shall join that of the dead warrior." Red Hawk's heart is filled with bitterness and he leaves his tribe to join the army of the pale faces. His bravery in surmounting indescribable difficulties to destroy a mountain bridge, thus checking the advance of the enemy, gains him the high regard of the army, but his happiness is short lived as he remembers the sentence and returns to his tribe to pay the debt of a red man's honor. With his beloved June Dew he is taken to the funeral pyre and their souls go forth to join the Happy Hunting Ground of the "Great Spirit."

THE LITTLE MINISTER (Jan. 13—Three Reels—Special).—PART ONE.—To start a little in advance of our story, Lord Rintoul, of the English nobility, finds a little Gypsy girl three years old, who had been deserted by her parents.

Fifteen years later, Gavin Dishart, the Little Minister, receives an appointment, his first, at Thrums, Scotland. This was made possible through the self-sacrifices of his widowed mother, to educate him for the ministry. The community of Thrums is made up of weavers, who work hard, have little and accomplish much. They are ultra-religious and look upon their pastor with such reverence that he is a little lower than the angels. While naturally intelligent, they are grounded in dogma and intolerance.

Just after the Little Minister takes charge of the "Auld Licht Kirk" and the Manse, the weavers resent a reduction, by the manufacturers, in their pay and a strike is declared. To protect themselves against the inevitable and unexpected arrival of the police and soldiers, they have sentinels stationed at the four approaches to the town.

Lord Rintoul has established a large country residence at Thrums. He holds himself aloof from the townspeople and he is looked upon as a great and mighty peer. The soldiers, whenever they come to Thrums on their incursions of suppression, always stop at his dwelling to consult him or pay their respects. They do not make this particular visit an exception and do not fail to acquaint him with their plans. The rioters are all gathered together in the square and the Lttle Minister implores them to disperse and peaceably go to their homes. While he is addressing them, a Gypsy girl mounts the steps from which he is speaking and cries out to the people to stand firm in declaring their rights, "The soldiers are on their way even now to arrest you." The Little Minister is appalled at her temerity and he denounces her as a shameless woman. This is the introduction of "The Little Minister" to "Babbie"; although he had seen her in the wood, when she appeared as a nymph-like vision of loveliness. Then the soldiers sweep into the square and drive the people before them as they scatter to the woods. Sanders Webster, the only support of Nannie, his sister, is arrested as a leader in the strike and Nannie is left alone in poverty. Captain Nalliwell, in charge of the soldiers, orders the Gypsy girl's arrest for inciting riot. The Little Minister, notwithstanding his denunciations, loves Babbie, despite himself, and to save her from arrest, he passes her through the outposts as his wife. He offers to escort her to her home, although she has always declared her home was the wood. She insists upon seeing him home, and when they arrive there, he bids her good-bye and enters the Manse. She seats herself on a settee in his garden and discovers lying on it, his Bible. She picks it up and writes across one of its pages, "I will never tell that you allowed me to be called Mrs. Dishart before witnesses, but is this not a Scotch Marriage? Babbie."

PART TWO.—The Little Minister proves himself to be a power in Thrums and he is beloved by the people. Through his preaching, Rob Dow, the village drunkard, takes the pledge and joins the church.

Babbie, who is known as the Gypsy, in Thrums, is known as "Lady Babbie" in the home of Lord Rintoul, by whom she has been educated as a lady, befitting one whom he intends to make his wife. He sets the day and announces it with a great reception; "Tomorrow, he is to wed his ward, Lady Babbie." Doctor McQueen calls at the Manse and tells the Little Minister that he is coming to take Nannie Webster to the poorhouse and asks him to accompany him in his sad errand. Gavin goes to Nannie's hut and as gently as possible, tells her they have come to take her away. The poor woman sees no alternative, but she hesitates and lingers in the home, which, however humble, is the dearest place on earth to her. At this moment, Babbie, the Gypsy girl, appears. She is indignant that Gavin and the Doctor should be engaged in such an errand. She provides Nannie with money and tells her that she shall stay, and she agrees to furnish through the Little Minister, a sufficient sum each week to keep her in comfort until her brother is released. They cannot credit such a proposition, but she arranges to meet Gavin in Caddam Wood the next day where she will deliver into his hands the first five pounds of Nannie's support. Regardless of the warnings of others, and the belief that the Gypsy has bewitched him, Gavin keeps his appointment and finds her awaiting him, perched in a tree. The astonished minister almost believes she has been making game of him in her promised provision for Nannie, but she soon convinces him to the contrary, when she places the money in his hand.

PART THREE.—The next day is Lord Rintoul's wedding day, and there is great preparation at the Hall. "Babbie" has purposely kept out of Gavin's way that he might not suffer on her account. They unexpectedly meet and he tells her that he will meet her at Nannie's that day. She implores him not to come, but he says, "I will be there." The farmers of Thrums suffer greatly from the prevailing drought. The elders of the Kirk call a Prayer Meeting for that night to pray for rain. The church is full to overflowing, but the Little Minister does not appear. He is at Nannie's with "Babbie." She pleads with him to give up his love for her, as she is unworthy of it and then she tells him what she has never told him before; that she is the ward of Lord Rintoul and must marry him that night. She also tells him how she overheard the soldiers' plans and warned the strikers. She hides nothing from him. Gavin asks her to go to Lord Rintoul and tell him that she does not love him, make an honest confession and throw herself upon his better judgment. She replies that Rintoul would not listen to her and if she returns to the Hall, Gavin will never see her again. Remembering that the Gypsies are at camp in the woods, Gavin proposes that they be married according to Gypsy rites.

They go to the camp and are married over the fire-irons, which is the marriage custom of the Gypsy race. They are watched by members of the Kirk and Lord Rintoul. The marriage has scarcely been performed when the lightning flashes and the thunder roars, the heavens are darkened and all is blackness. When again the lightning flashes upon the scene, Babbie has disappeared and Gavin at once decides that she has been kidnapped. This was a correct conclusion, for indeed she had been kidnapped by Rob Dow, who could never forgive her for having brought reproach upon the Little Minister. Gavin plunges into the wood to search for her and the rain descends, and the floods cover the earth. He wanders on and on, until he drops helpless, where he is found. At break of day, having recovered his senses, he insists upon going to Lord Rintoul's home for he feels sure that Babbie is there. He is advised not to venture out in the floods. He will not listen. As he reaches the cliff overlooking the river, which is running torrents, he meets a shepherd, who, in distress, cries that a man is caught in the torrent below. He has sent a messenger to the town to get help. Gavin discerns through the mist that the man is Lord Rintoul. He plunges down the cliff, into the water and to his rescue. Instead of one, two are now in danger, as they stand on the small piece of earth between them and death. The villagers have come; all hope has deserted them, when Rob Dow rushes down the cliff with a rope in his hand, swims through the whirlpool and passes the rope to Gavin, then sinks and is swept away. Willing hands, who have held tight to one end of the rope, pull hard and Gavin ties his end around himself and the helpless lord and they are drawn to the shore in safey. Wih cheers and happy hearts, the villagers proudly escort the Little Minister to the Manse, where he finds Babbie, with his mother, awaiting him. Lord Rintoul, whom Babbie did not marry, relinquishes all claim to her and she and the Little Minister shortly afterwards, have a real "Auld Licht Kirk" wedding, making them man and wife until death do them part.

Needless to say, that Lady Babbie, as mistress of the Manse, proves herself a true and Godly Minister's wife.

"WHAT A CHANGE OF CLOTHES DID" (Jan. 20).—Tired of the invitations and flattery of people who know that he is wealthy, John Mason decides to go away to some quiet country place to escape the demands of society. After locating where the fishing is good, he starts out to indulge his favorite sport. On the river's edge, waiting for the anticipated nibbles, he falls half asleep. An escaped convict from the nearby penitentiary, sneaks up behind him, knocks him senseless and then strips him of his clothes, leaving his convict garb in their place. John Mason, when he recovers consciousness, puts on the convict suit and makes his way to the nearest house, where he meets a very charming young lady, who lent him a suit of clothes, after he has explained his predicament. He finds her such a charming person, he falls in love with her, and while he is enjoying her company, the prison guards enter the house and at once recognize that he is not the escaped fugitive. He repeats his story to them and they withdraw.

Some months afterwards, when the young lady and John Mason are married, they receive words from her brother in South Africa, stating that he has found the man who really was guilty of the crime for which he was convicted. He also writes a full description of how he escaped from prison. In this way, John Mason and his wife, learn that the man who stole John's clothes, was her own brother. John is especially happy to think that he inadvertently assisted him, and through him, found such a charming little helpmate.

MA'S APRON STRINGS (Jan. 21).—When her son Ernie, had reached the age of 21, Ma Smith could not realize that he had attained his manhood or had any right to think for himself. He was their only child and the apple of her eye. She had kept him so entirely under her care and attention that he has almost lost the power of thinking for himself. In fact she has never given him that privilege. He is tied so tightly to her apron strings, the poor fellow can hardly get away from her. She will not let him stay out after eight o'clock at night, always takes him to prayer meeting and church festivals; and even then, is afraid some girl may steal him. Molly, the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bush comes to live with them and Ernie meets her at her grandfather's store where they become acquainted. This is the beginning of his breaking away from Ma's apron strings. He has a rival, but Molly rather favors Ernie, and one evening, accepts his escort home from prayer meeting, leaving his rival very much dejected. Ma Smith, when she is ready to leave the meeting house for home, looks for her boy. She cannot find him and becomes alarmed.

Hastening home and not finding him there, she arouses an alarm and starts out with a searching party. Pretty nigh on to midnight, she decides to inquire at the Bush's, if they have seen anything of Ernie. Here she learns that he has been spending the evening with Molly. Going into the parlor with Mrs. Bush, Ma and Pa Smith behold Ernie embracing Molly and making love to her.

Ma begins to wail when she thinks of her boy being under the influence of anybody else but herself. Pa is delighted and says, "By Heck, I am glad to see him acting like a man!" Stepping forward, Mrs. Bush looking on smilingly, blesses the two youngsters and rejoices in the awakening of his son's independence.

THE JOKE ON HOWLING WOLF (Jan. 22).—A bad Indian is an undesirable citizen among the cowpunches of the West. "Howling Wolf" is dubbed as "no good" by the boys and when he makes his appearance at the Red Dog Saloon, he is unceremoniously kicked out. He would have fared a worse fate if the sheriff had not interrupted the fun. The Indian, appreciating the sheriff's interference, follows him down the street and into his home. He prevails upon the sheriff to write him a "talking paper" as he calls it, giving him a testimonial of his good character. The sheriff, having little respect for him, humorously writes him out a recommendation.

Armed with the paper, Howling Wolf goes back to the saloon and demands drink. The bartender reads the credential, which says he is a good-for-nothing vagabond, and again he is promptly kicked into the street. He suspects the sheriff of playing a joke upon him and he swears revenge.

He returns to the sheriff's shack and finds him absent and the wife alone. Talking threateningly to himself, he goes on the sheriff's trail. He finds him near the edge of a precipice and stealing up behind him, strikes the sheriff senseless. Meanwhile, the sheriff's wife become alarmed when her husband does not return and remembering the mutterings of the Indian, goes in search of him. She finds him struck down and sees the Indian making his escape. The sheriff recovers and his wife tells him of his assailant. Jumping upon his horse, he pursues the Indian, and after a desperate chase, captures him and brings him into custody.

THE VOLUNTEER STRIKE BREAKERS (Jan. 23).—A strike among the hotel waiters is on. The papers are full of it. Chester Colton, and Harris Baldwin, young college chaps, read that waiters are needed in all the big hotels and restaurants. They apply for positions at Belfonte's restaurant. Harris secures a job as head-waiter and Chester is appointed as one of the regular staff. Harris's fiancee has an engagement with her chum to take dinner with her at the restaurant. They boys pay so much atten-

The Proof — We Cannot Exceed Demand

Every factory begins its year by estimating its output and hopes to exceed the estimate. Few do.

Every manufacturer endeavors to get ahead a few machines. We cannot. The orders come in so fast we can just "break even"—Orders vs. shipments.

Our orders have exceeded our estimate 20%.

Our force has worked overtime for three months to enable us to "hold our own."

Yes—As Usual—We Originated the Machine Switch-Board

Yes—It Is Being Copied—With Modifications —But on a Much Cheaper Scale

Our Quality Is Never Copied — Why?

Because if YOU are satisfied with something cheaper at the same price "who should worry?'

tion to the girls that they neglect the other patrons, who make a kick and complain to the proprietor, he happens in just as Harris's fiancee enters. The proprietor makes his way toward her and when Harris recognizes her, he rushes for her, pushes the boys out of the way, giving her a vigorous hug and a resounding kiss.

There is a general uproar and the proprietor threatens to discharge the boys on the spot. The girls cannot understand why Harris and Chester are engaged in so menial an occupation. They explain that it is all a lark, that they thought the experience might be novel, if not profitable. They decide, however, to quit and go with the girls.

Just as they are leaving the restaurant, the strikers on parade are just about entering to make protest to the proprietor about employing scabs. They recognize Harris and Chester as two of them. They mob them and the boys with the two girls beat a hasty retreat for a taxi in which they make good their escape; bearing the marks of their experience as volunteer strike breakers.

THE WIDOW'S MIGHT (Jan. 24).—By hard work and industry, Barney O'Hara accumulates enough money to be considered by his neighbors, a rich man. He is considered a catch by the widow McCarthy and she sets her cap for him. He is a little sawed-off, funny-looking man, but she sees nothing but his money. His brother Mike loves her, but she will have nothing to do with him. It is Barney, or no one. She becomes so insistent in trying to win Barney, he has no peace. He decides to escape her by going to America with Mike.

They are ready to leave when the widow appears and announces her intention of going with him. They fix up a little scheme whereby Barney is to make believe he is dead and bribe the doctor to pronounce him so.

An old-fashioned wake is held and at every opportunity, Mike helps his "dead" brother to a good swig of whiskey. Mike stumbles over Barney's plug hat, arousing his ire, and forgetting himself, he sits up and gives vent to his feelings. The mourners are so frightened, they leave the room. The widow, coming in, sees his feet moving, looks into his face and discovers the trick. She picks him up and carries him bodily out of the house, claiming him as her own personal property. Mike protests against the widow's right to take possession of his brother. The widow, who is well-built and thoroughly able to take care of herself, gives him to understand that might is right.

EVERYBODY'S DOING IT (Jan. 25).—No matter which way Albert Thompson turns, he finds everybody inoculated with the love germ. He is a confirmed old bachelor and very much disturbed when he finds the cook, the maid and his typewriter all making love to his chauffeur, the policeman and the clerk. A stroll through the park brings him in contact with young lovers, who are entirely unconscious of his presence. Grace Williams, a mischievous young girl, seeing his disgust, flirts with him and he becomes very much interested in her. After several meetings with her, Cupid shoots his dart into his crusty heart. Thompson proposes to Grace, marries her and becomes the spooniest of old spooners.

WHEN BOBBY FORGOT (Jan. 25).—Among his Christmas presents, Bobby receives a cowboy and an Indian suit and becomes inspired with the Wild West fever. He induces his young playmate, Jane, to play Indian with him. They go out to an enclosed lot which they enter by crawling through a hole underneath the fence. He then arranges a drama in which he is an Indian chief and captures her, ties her to a tree and holds her prisoner. He securely binds her and then tells her he will hold council with his tribe and decide what will be done with her. He wanders off and hearing some boys playing ball, he forgets all about Jane and joins in the game.

Toward evening, he goes home. Jane's parents become anxious about her non-appearance at suppertime. They go in search of her and inquire further at Bobby's home. The boy suddenly remembers Jane's captivity. He runs to the lot and releases her. His parents are very much inclined to chastise him, but Jane's parents intercede for him and Jane herself, forgives him for his thoughtlessness.

KALEM.

THE NURSE AT MULBERRY BEND (Jan. 20).—Rose, a nurse at the Central Hospital, becomes interested in hygienics and devotes her leisure hours to study. The ambitious girl discovers that her health is becoming impaired and she is advised to take a vacation. She therefore visits her cousin, Lilly, in New York and improvises a laboratory where she continues her studies.

Lilly, giving most of her attention to social affairs, is inclined to ridicule her serious-minded cousin but Dr. Leslie, who has been very attentive to Lilly, finds that the visitor is an unusual young woman and soon his affections are transferred. Naturally a barrier arises between the cousins and Rose is about to leave Lilly's house when a series of unexpected incidents delay her departure from the city.

Angelina, a young Italian mother, finds that she cannot properly care for her sick baby as she earns a livelihood by selling lace from door to door. She leaves the infant in the care of its grandmother and while offering her wares to Rose, tells her pitiful story to the young nurse. Rose's sympathies are aroused and she visits the squalid home in Mulberry Bend. There she is startled by the prevailing conditions and the baby's father enters while the nurse is establishing some hygienic measures. The ignorant Italian, fearing that the baby will die, tells Rose that he will hold her responsible and locks her in the room.

Seeing that she must have skillful assistance, Rose succeeds in sending a message to Dr. Leslie, who forces his way into the tenement with an officer. The crisis passes and when the baby's recovery is assured the Italian is pacified.

When Rose returns to the hospital it is to present her resignation and inform her friends that she has entered into a permanent contract with the medical profession.

THE BOOMERANG (Jan. 22).—Simon Watson, devoid of conscience, has become wealthy through the manufacture of "Watson's Remedy." One day he is stricken with terror when he finds a bottle of the medicine in the hands of his little child, Helen, and he warns her never to touch it. But the little one's curiosity is aroused and when her father has left for his office, she tastes the medicine and becomes violently ill.

John Smith, a young workman, has a little daughter, Margaret, who is taken sick and the mother secures a bottle of the "remedy" at a drug store. Instead of relieving the child's pain, the medicine causes her to lose consciousness and when the horrified father learns the cause, he determines to seek Watson's life.

Smith forces his way into Watson's home and finds him at Helen's bedside. The revolver drops from the hand of the astonished workman and the sound is heard by the manufacturer, who steps into the next room. There he gives his promise to Smith to discontinue the manufacture of the "remedy" and skilled physicians succeed in restoring the health of the two children.

ONE ON WILLIE (Jan. 24).—Old Man Dolliver's eyesight is not the best and he cannot understand why his daughter, Helene, objects to the foppish Willie Perkins. It happens that George, a young cowboy, has won her heart and even Willie's big touring car cannot tempt her to become friendly. Dolliver insists that she marry the owner of the automobile and when she refuses the old man declares that he will take her to the seashore, where her cowboy lover cannot find her.

But oftentimes the best laid plans miscarry. When Dolliver, Willie and Helene leave for the resort, George follows. There he receives a message from his sweetheart, stating that her father is determined that the wedding shall take place at once. It is therefore imperative that Willie be disposed of.

George has a clever idea and tells Helene to inform Willie that he should get a minister immediately. Willie finds a clergyman and sets forth to locate Helene. He is captured by George, who demands an exchange of clothing. A big revolver precludes any argument. Dolliver, dozing on the porch, awakes just as the ceremony is concluded and Willie, seeing that the coast is clear, reaches the house too late to enter protest.

THE 'POSSUM HUNT (Jan. 24).—Uncle Mose declares it is time that his family had a 'possum for dinner. He therefore calls the boys, who get the dogs and soon they are tramping through the woods and marshes. At length the 'possum is sighted and the boys have a hard time keeping up with the dogs. The little animal is treed and carried home in a sack. That evening we see the family gathered around the kitchen table and anxiously watching Aunty Mandy as she lifts a savory pan from the stove.

THE CUB REPORTER'S TEMPTATION (Jan. 25).—The Police Department learns that certain criminals are in the city, and Spider, a stool pigeon, is sent out to make inquiry regarding their proposed operations. An "upstairs job" is planned and the crooks reach the top of a building by way of a fire-escape. Spider, who has joined the party, remains below, acting as lookout and officers arrive through prearranged plans. Several policemen ascend the fire-escape, while others wait below. All of the crooks are captured, except the one who has the custody of the loot—a package of money—and this is dropped down a chimney by the desperate man who is pursued over the house-tops and fears that he will be caught with the goods. The burglar is apprehended when he reaches the alley and a search of the gang at headquarters proves futile.

Bud Collins, who supports his sister, works as cub reporter on "The Star." While he sits at his fireplace, brooding over his meager salary, the package of money rolls to his feet and the young people regard it as a gift from heaven.

The Police Department is in a quandry. The criminals have practically been caught in the act but even the third degree fails to develop the hiding place of the loot. The City Editor of "The Star" wishes a special article on the subject and as his best reporters are out on assignments, there is no one to send but Bud. Bud rushes home and tells his sister. He says that the money is theirs, but the sister finally induces him to return it. Bud therefore accomplishes a "scoop" for his paper and when the money is returned to the owner, the latter is impressed with Bud's honesty and offers him a promising position.

LUBIN.

LITERATURE AND LOVE (Jan. 20).—Betty Brown, a talented writer, but having been unfortunate in selling her stories, starts for a walk to the park. She is caught in a jam in the street traffic and forced to wait at the crossing. Horace Limpton, short story editor for one of the magazines, who, by hard work and reading has weakened his eyes, is told by his physician that he must wear blue glasses and get away from the grind for several weeks until his eyes are well or that he will go blind. Leaving the doctor's office, he reaches the crossing that is congested, stands nervously tapping the pavement with his cane, waiting for a chance to cross. Betty Brown is standing beside him, and, thinking that he is ,a blind man, takes hold of his arm and volunteers to pilot him across. When they reach the other side of the street, Betty tells him that she is going for a walk and that she will be glad to take him. They walk to the park. They sit on a bench and feed the squirrels. Betty tells how the little fellows are enjoying the nuts. Betty explains that she is a story writer, but has been unable to "place" her manuscripts. At Limpton's request the next day she reads one of her stories to him. He is much impressed with it and volunteers to "place" it for her.

The next day when she calls, he hands her a check for $50; he has sold her story. She returns to her lodgings, calls her landlady in and tells of her good fortune and pays her arrears. On the next day she calls as usual for her "blind man." He can stand it no longer and tells her who he is and that he is not a "blind man" at all. He has fallen in love with her and when he bares his identity to her, he takes off his blue glasses. She consents to his wooing and the scene closes on the bench in the park.

WHO IS THE SAVAGE? (Jan. 21).—Mrs. Van Vechten, a society woman, in the midst of a pink tea, receives a letter from her husband, who is hunting in the mountains, to the effect that he will not be home for some time. His comrades are the husbands and fathers of Mrs. Van Vechten's guests. The women, on learning the state of affairs, determine to go on a hunting expedition of their own. Later we find them in camp all starting out on a hunting trip. Mrs. Van and her friend, Mrs. Morris, use an auto and penetrate well into the mountainous district, finally coming upon an Indian woman with a papoose laying on the ground beside her. The squaw leaves the papoose to return to her camp, and Mrs. Van determines to steal the baby and take it back and show it to the girls. Mrs. Morris, her friend, protests and refuses to have any hand in the matter whatever. Mrs. Van drives away alone with her spoils. Mrs. Morris returns to the camp of the white women and tells of Mrs. Van's act. The white women leave to search for Mrs. Van.

In the interim the squaw, returning to the stream with more washing, misses her papoose and trails the guilty party. Mrs. Van in her haste and eagerness, drives her machine over a cliff, wrecking it, and she herself is found insensible by the squaw, who comes upon her after the accident. The Indian woman secures her babe and starts homeward. Mrs. Van recovers, follows, and takes from the squaw the second time her offspring. The Indian woman in her turn recovers from Mrs. Van's warlike blows, trails the white woman, coming upon her, chokes her insensible, secures her papoose and drags her natural enemy back to a camp of the Indians. The white women arriving at the camp the same moment, an awful hand-to-hand encounter ensues, the whites being victorious. A new day dawns and we find the inimitable Mrs. Van playing with her prize, which she didn't want. Looking up she sees the Indian women coming and she quickly hides the papoose and meets them with haughty mien. One old squaw steps forward and pleads, "White wo-men please give back In-dian babe." Mrs. Van finally succumbs and gives the papoose to the Indian mother. Who is the savage?

THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET (Jan. 23).—The "Old Oaken Bucket" hangs in the famous well on the Woodworth farm at Scituate, Mass. Ellen, "The Pride of the Valley," brings a letter for Samuel Woodworth. It calls him away to fame and fortune within the heart of the great city. Sam rejoices; Ellen weeps. In Boston, Sam drifts downward with fast companions. He neglects to write to his home and mother.

A year elapses and Ellen goes to the city, in search of her absent lover. She is present, unknown to the participants, at a game of cards, and sees Sam gambling with Big Bill and Dandy Dick. Sam becomes intoxicated. He accuses Bill of cheating. Sam, under the influence of liquor, draws a pistol. Bill gets possession of the weapon. Dick interferes to protect the life of his friend, Sam, and is shot dead by the now infuriated Bill. When the big gambler realizes what he has done, he boldly calls in witnesses and places the blame upon the drunken shoulders of the almost insensible Sam. In court Sam is convicted of the crime, but Ellen comes to the rescue, reveals what she saw unknown to the others, and saves her lover from the gallows and disgrace. They return to the old farm and the neglected mother, and Sam once more drinks from "The Old Oaken Bucket."

MAKING A BASEBALL BUG (Jan. 24).—Dale Darrow is chief clerk in the employ of the James Mfg. Co., which firm has an office on a street in the rear of a baseball park. Dale is in love with Helen Jones, daughter of the president of the company. Dale is a dyed-in-the-wool baseball fan and has promised to take Helen to the ball game Saturday afternoon. At the appointed hour Dale calls at the Jones residence. Mr. Jones overhears Helen and Dale in their baseball conversation, and upon his entrance he condemns baseball and forbids his daughter Helen to accompany Dale. Helen remains at home and the disappointed Dale wends his way to the ball game.

Seated in the stand among the great crowd of fans, Dale apparently forgets everything except the game itself and he joins the throng in rooting lustily for the home team. The ninth inning arrives and brings boundless joy. Amid mad excitement a home player makes a home run, which wins the game. The ball clears the back fence, continues on its aerial journey and crashes through an office window of the Jones Mfg. Co., where it strikes a burglar in the head and renders him unconscious, whereupon he drops the plunder he has stolen from the safe. The homegoing crowd streams out of the park and a large number of fans gather on the street in front of the Jones Mfg. Company's office, observing with great interest the broken window which the ball has shattered. Dale Darrow is among the curious, and when he realizes that the ball shot into his employer's office, he quickly darts into the building to ascertain the damage done. On entering he observes the unconscious burglar on the floor, also the money and the open safe. He immediately 'phones for the police and Mr. Jones. Leaving the telephone he espies the baseball on the floor and when he realizes the deadly work it performs, he is greatly pleased. The police and Mr. Jones reach the office at the same moment and Mr. Jones demands an explanation, which Dale supplies. The police take the burglar to the police station. Mr. Jones pens a letter of reward to the player who batted the home run. After this Mr. Jones and Dale leave the office. The following day finds Jones in the role of a generous fan, purchasing three tickets at the ball park, Helen and Dale accompany him.

She determines to find another escort, so when Johnson, an insurance agent, calls at her house, she promises to take some insurance in his company if he will escort her to the Daly's reception. The maid, looking out of an upstairs window, sees the carriage drive off. She breaks up the Brandt reception with the startling announcement that Lottie has eloped with a strange man. The guests catch on and the joke works so well that the agent signs up everybody. Meantime, Lottie's husband has gotten the police searching for her. They find her and take her home. The family is furious, but Lottie doesn't care. In the midst of the row the agent rushes into the Brandt home and reminds Lottie that she hasn't signed that application yet. Lottie makes good. Her husband demands an explanation, but the agent turns his attention and wants him to take a policy too. ## EDISON.

LEONIE (Jan. 17).—Jack Landon, a gifted young artist, is loved by Leonie, a model, but he is blind to her attractiveness and her affection for him. Word comes that Mrs. Glenn, a rich woman, is going to call to see about Landon painting a portrait of Muriel, her daughter. The prospect of such an order creates wild excitement in Landon's studio. His various friends in the building come to his rescue with loans of hangings, rugs and bric-a-brac to make the studio presentable. They arrive shortly after and Landon secures the order. He also falls in love with Muriel, who is not only beautiful, but also a well-trained flirt. She permits Landon to think he is making progress with her heart as well as with her portrait.

Landon invites Mrs. Glenn and Muriel to come to the artists' ball, an annual costume affair. He pawns his watch for money to send violets to Muriel, for though the portrait is complete, the payment for it has not been made. Just before the portrait is sent to the Glenns. Leonie, coming to Landon's studio, sees it for the first time. She realizes that it is the face of her rival and in a flame of rage, she is about to slash the canvas when Landon enters and prevents her. She then would turn the knife against herself, but again he prevents her. Then she sinks sobbing into a chair. At the ball, however, she is the gayest of the gay. She dances a Spanish dance ending before Landon, Mrs. Glenn and Muriel. Muriel is so delighted that she thoughtlessly tosses the violets which Landon has given her to Leonie.

While the ball is in progress Landon leads Muriel to a secluded place to test his fate. Leonie is already in the little room and has barely time to hide behind the window curtains before the other two enter. Then Muriel spurns Landon and leaves him crushed and dazed. Overwhelmed by the shattering of his house of cards, he leaves the dance and goes home.

All the fierceness of Leonie's nature is now directed against Muriel, who has so hurt Landon. Leonie confronts Muriel in the ball room, tells her tensely what she thinks of her and hurls the violets at her. Then she goes swiftly to Landon's studio, where he sits, miserably depressed, and the light in her eyes is such that he knows at last what true love means and his dream of Muriel vanishes in the glow of the love he has felt for Leonie without knowing it.

THE MOUNTAINEERS (Jan. 18).—Fred Morris, a rugged mountaineer, is conducting a moonshine still on the mountain side. Associated with him are Benson, the village blacksmith, and a man named Sommers. Morris' strong will bows before no one, excepting his daughter, Kate, who is the apple of his eye.

A stranger from the city, Barnes, is fishing in the neighborhood. Morris is suspicious of him and warns Kate to have nothing to do with him. Laboring under this suspicion, Morris, when he goes up to the still and finds Benson is careless about maintaining guard, puts Benson out of the enterprise. Benson goes, swearing vengeance.

The Rev. John Purdy, an old itinerant preacher, applies for shelter at Morris' cabin that evening. He is permitted to stay and by his scripture reading and exhortation he converts Kate and convinces her that her father's occupation is wrong. None of them know that at this very time Barnes, the supposed fisherman, has got hold of the infuriated Benson, and, by plying him with liquor, is urging him to a proper vengeance, a vengeance which becomes clear when Barnes discloses to Benson the fact that he is a revenue officer and demands the location of Morris' still.

Kate is taken ill during the night, In her fever her principal wish is that her father shall smash his still. He yields to her pleading. He is near to conversion himself, and early in the morning he goes up to the mountain to carry out his promise. But Barnes captures and handcuffs him before he can strike a blow. And, fearing to go back to the village where Morris' friends live, Barnes starts with his prisoner across the mountain.

Morris pleads for permission to go back to see his daughter. Barnes refuses. At last Morris fells Barnes by a blow from his manacled wrists. He takes Barnes' revolver and sets out for home. Before long, however, he realizes that he cannot go to Kate with his wrists bound together, so he goes to the blacksmith shop and compels Benson, in an extremely tense scene, to sever the chain that binds the handcuffs together. Then he goes home.

All is well in Kate's room until she discovers the steel bracelets about his wrists. He tells her everything and announces that, now that he has seen her he is going to give himself up. But Barnes, having regained his senses, has followed Morris and stands in Kate's doorway, unobserved, while this is going on. He steps forward at the proper moment and lets Morris know that he is free. The picture ends with the beginning of a romance between Barnes and Kate.

THE MAN HE MIGHT HAVE BEEN (Jan. 20).—This subject tells the simple story of a boy with a longing for knowledge and the better things of life which education brings. His father, a plain man, is content with an ordinary school education for the boy and puts him at work in spite of the protests of the school principal, who even offers him an opening by which the boy may work during the day and attend school at night throughout a season. Consequently the boy's natural bend towards mechanics is frustrated and he is forced into drudgery which takes the heart out of him.

Throughout the picture as he grows older before our eyes, we see that he has not lost sight of the man he might have been and the things he might have done. But he travels the wrong road and goes from hopelessness to recklesness, reaping the reward of the latter in an unhappy marriage instead of winning the sweet girl whom he loved as a boy.

THE AMBASSADOR'S DAUGHTER (Jan. 21).—Richard Farnsworth, an attache at the U. S. Embassy in London, is in love with Helen, the ambassador's daughter, and we see her at the embassy ball refuse his proposal of marriage. The next day, while the ambassador is at work in his office, a letter containing an important document is received. This he slips under the blotting pad on his desk and goes out with Helen. A clerk in the embassy, Charles Dumont, who is really a spy in the hire of a foreign power, has seen the ambassador hide the document, and during the latter's absence avails himself of the opportunity to steal it, but hearing somebody coming, he slips it into a vase and returns to his office unseen. Meantime, Farnsworth, entering the ambassador's office, finds on the floor a glove which Helen has dropped. He acts rather foolish over it, kisses it and is just putting it in his pocket, close to his heart, when the ambassador returns with Helen. The ambassador goes to his desk and discovers that the document is gone. He questons Crompton and Dumont, but to no avail, and finally turning to Farnsworth, asks him what he had placed in his pocket. He becomes foolishly embarrassed, but refuses to tell, and Helen, divining he has her glove, throws her father off the scent by suggesting that he make a thorough search before accusing anyone. This they proceed to do and Dumont, taking advantage of the opportunity, takes the document from its hiding place and hurries from the room. Helen becomes suspicious of him and follows him unobserved.

Of course the search of the desk proves unavailing and the ambassador again turns to Farnsworth for explanation. Realizing the seriousness of his silence he shows the glove and explains the reason for his embarrassment. The ambassador understands, but just then Crompton enters, telling them of the disappearance of Dumont. Farnsworth, eager for action, hurries out to see if he can get on his track.

Meantime, Dumont, followed by Helen, had gone to an Italian restaurant to turn over the document to two European spies. She manages to get into the courtyard of the restaurant outside the open window at which the spies are sitting. She watches her chance. and, unobserved, takes the document from the table, But the gate by which she had expected to escape from the courtyard proves to be locked and she is caught. Farnsworth arrives in time to rescue her; having seen Dumont come out of the restaurant, he rightly assumes that there he will find her.

Dumont returns to the embassy unaware of what has taken place in the restaurant. He is closely questioned by the ambassador and Crompton, but holds his own until Helen and Farnsworth arrive with the document and their story of his guilt. He is arrested and Helen discovers that she does love Farnsworth after all.

THE POWER OF SLEEP (Jan. 22).—Bill is a husky, lazy lout. He sits at home all day smoking and reading, while his wife does all the work. Bill never lifts a finger to help her, and besides, he persecutes his daughter by driving her suitor from the premises. One afternoon Bill falls asleep and dreams he is arrested on some trumped up charge. Following his arrest he is brought to trial and sentenced to thirty days at hard labor. He is shackled like a criminal and dragged off to prison with a number of other convicts whose services are offered to the public for hire by the day. His wife has sweet revenge by hiring him for thirty days. She takes him home accompanied by an armed guard, makes him saw wood, carry the coal, wait on the table and wash the dishes. Big Bill suddenly discovers that he is possessed of abnormal strength and becomes defiant and rebellious, refusing to do any more work. The attempt of his guard to compel him to work turns out rather disastrously. He snaps his shackles, smashes dishes and furniture, throws the armed guard out of the window and runs amuck in the vilage streets like a raving maniac; tears the village bully limb from limb, and commits other depredations, and it takes the combined force of the village constables to conquer him and drag him back to prison. There he is securely locked up in a padded cell, but steel bars cannot deprive him of his liberty. He twists them apart like a gladiator and boldly walks to his freedom, only to be discovered by the hounding police, and, as a last resort, he jumps out of the third story window and lands with a thud that starts him so that he suddenly awakens to find himself at home in his chair in the kitchen.

As he looks about him he sees his wife trying to lift the wash boiler off the stove and to her great amazement he rises to give her a hand and indicates his willingness to work. She is wondering yet what made the lazy lout change so suddenly.

FALSE TO THEIR TRUST (Jan. 24).—Mary, the fascinating little heroine of many adventures, learns that kinship does not necessarily mean friendship. We find her in the house of her uncle, who, with his son, have misappropriated the funds of the bank of which they are president and cashier. They possess a knowledge that Mary does not, namely, that her grandfather has left a fortune to her when she marries. This will save her uncle and his scapegrace son and they decide to marry her to the boy. There is a young secretary in the bank who accidentally overhears a conversation which indicates their misuse of the bank's funds but like Mary, he knows nothing of their plans to recoup their fortune. But when Mary scorns the young cashier and they find her on rather friendly terms with the young secretary they manufacture a forged check, charge him with the crime and dismiss him from the bank. This is too much for Mary and she undertakes to get evidence of the falseness of the charge. In so doing she learns of the other crime. The evidence is obtained by making a phonograph record from a telephone conversation between the father and son, and the scenes in which Mary gets this record are very exciting and intensely dramatic. Of course, in the end the uncle and his son are taken away to prison and Mary finds herself again face to face with the great world without a home or friends to care for her. This is the seventh story of "What Happened to Mary."

THE LORELEI (Jan. 25).—A famous painter chances to see one day the lines of Heine's poem, "Die Lorelei." This gives him the inspiration to paint the subject, and his daughter poses as the maid of mystery. But he needs a model for the fisherman who was drowned while trying to reach this maid of the rocks, so he inserted an advertisement in the paper. A young and handsome fisherman sees this and, being urged on by his wife, applies and is engaged to pose for the painter.

The artist's daughter becomes interested in the rough but handsome fisher lad, and in the spirit of flirtation proceeds to lure him on. When she realizes that he is falling under her spell she becomes fascinated by the spirit of conquest. Heedless of results, she draws him on into an entanglement of love as the picture progresses. His wife realizes that a great something has taken her husband away from her, and she kneels in prayer, asking for the love that her heart craves for, and the prayer is answered.

The daughter falls asleep by her father's painting, and the canvas becomes animated with life. She sees the old legend of the Rhine enacted before her, while she herself appears as the Rhine maiden who lured the men to their death. She awakes and realizes for the first time what she has been doing, and when again the fisherman seeks her out she sends him away, back to his wife. The spell is broken and the sunset finds husband and wife once again united.

He also arrives at Pearl's house and the other two admirers jealous of Pearl's attentions to him, leave. Pearl then decides to have some fun with Bill and Angelo. She writes the both of them a letter asking them to meet her at the same time. Angelo loses his letter. He arrives at the appointed place only to find Bill there. Surprised, he asks Bill what he is doing there, and Bill shows him his letter. Angelo accuses him of stealing his, and a fight results. Pearl and Chester who were there to see the fun, run for a policeman, and the two rivals are dragged off to jail, leaving Chester in full possession of Pearl.

THE FALSE ALARM (Jan. 26).—Belmont is always late at the office. He buys an alarm clock but it breaks down on him and he is late again. His employer threatens to discharge him if he is late again. He hits upon a scheme and arranges with Barnett, his fellow clerk, that when Barnett passes his house, he would pull a rope that Belmont has tied to his foot and hanging out the window. The next morning at about 5 a. m., the milk man on his rounds, sees the rope and gives it a very healthy tug. Belmont awakes with a start, and thinking it Barnett and time to go to work, dresses hurriedly. The milkman continues pulling on the rope and Belmont, untying it from his toe, the milkman falls into the cellar. Belmont rushes to the office and is surprised to find the janitor there sleeping. The janitor points to the clock, and Belmont realizing his mistake, sinks into a chair, half asleep, and awaits the arrival of Barnett and the Boss.

THE DETECTIVE'S SANTA CLAUS (Jan. 14)—Detective Steele is considered a most conscientious and efficient worker on the police force. He is the father of quite a family and as the Christmas holiday approaches finds himself rather hard pressed, financially. He tells his children how Santa Claus comes down the chimmey on Christmas eve and fills the stockings of all well-behaved little boys and girls with toys and candies and goodies of all kinds. The tale has made a deep impression on the minds of the children. After hanging up their stockings they hit on a plan of trapping Santa Claus, and from the attic they drag forth an old bear trap which they set and put in the fire-place.

It so happens that on this very night Detective Steele with two other officers, are in pursuit of a well-known criminal for whose capture a reward of one thousand dollars has been offered. The hunted man eludes them in a chase over the roofs of the houses near the detective's own home. Believing they have lost him, Mr. Steele runs into his house for a moment to see his family, and is very much startled by a most unusual commotion in the parlor. He rushes in and discovers that the criminal he had been after, had been caught in the bear-trap the youngsters had set for Santa. The detective, of course, procures the reward, and the children have the best Christmas ever.

"NOBODY'S" LOVE STORY (Jan 16)—He had done no wrong, still he was condemned to bear that name "Nobody." He had never played a crooked game, yet was cruelly branded with that horrible tattoo, and on his clean hand appeared, in blue and red ink, the Queen of Spades, so that no man would ever play a game with him.

But "Nobody" was innocent—he had never played a crooked game nor touched a penny that did not belong to him—it was all done for the sake of a woman that he in silence adored. He drifted away from the country, but before long the fever of the green cloth lured him back to the gaming tables —and the cursed queen on his hand broke up the game.

The one for whom "Nobody" was cursed with this stigma was long dead. "Nobody," believing that the dead would cleanse his hand, goes to the grave. He rubs his hand with the cold soil until exhausted, he falls asleep. Covered with a mantle of snow, he sinks into a more beautiful sleep.

The woman, now awake, sees that "Nobody's" hand is clean again; the frost had chilled his heart. but the dead had cleansed his hand. "Nobody" played no more.

FUNNICUS MARRIES A HUNCHBACK (Jan. 19)—The heirs of the late Thomas Leroy are all assembled in the office of the attorney to listen to the reading of his will. Among the gathering is Funnicus.

The will is opened and the attorney reads: "I bequeathe my entire fortune to my friend Funnicus, but on the condition that he marries his cousin, Marie Doron." Consternation reigns and the disappointment is keen, for the other heirs are little pleased at thus being left out in the cold.

The thought of marrying his cousin is most distasteful to Funnicus, for poor Marie is afflicted with a hump on her back. However, no wife means no money, and Funnicus finally resolves that it is worth while making the sacrifice. When the marriage is over, he cannot but help saying over and over again to his wife: "Ah! If only you did not have that hump!"

Finally, he decides he will try all means of ridding the girl of her obnoxious hump, and his attempts form a series of escapades that are screamingly funny.

LIFE IN INDIA (Jan. 19)—Contrary to the general opinion, this travel film shows the natives of India to be an industrious people rather than the shiftless creatures so many are prone to think them. Among the small trades or vocations which the natives are engaged in daily, the following are shown. Engraving on gold, decorating of pottery, all kinds of tiling, ropemaking, and we learn, also that their women are employed in masonry building, as street porters, as well as in the feminine occupations of linen-washing, hairdressing and fortune-telling.

THE GALLOP OF DEATH (Jan. 21).—The story opens wih the arrival of the honeymoon couple in America. The wedding trip of Mr. and Mrs. Bryan had been a tour around the world, and while in India, Mrs. Bryan had become very much attached to a trained tiger which her husband purchased for her, at the same time arranging for the services of a Hindoo trainer and caretaker. They opened up their home in a suburb near New York City.

Then the ghost of divorce appeared. It came in the guise of a letter from Mrs. Bryan's first husband, whom she had separated from in England. He had learned of her second marriage, which was in violation of her agreement not to marry again. He had come to America and had sent her a request to meet him.

To guard against any exposure of her past—particularly to Bryan—she consents to meet the man at the place designated by him. He implores her to leave Bryan and return to England with him, and when she refuses he threatens her. In his growing anger, he attempts to use force and she strikes him with her riding crop and gallops off.

The man, a cad at heart, determines upon a scheme of revenge.

Fearing exposure, she persuades Bryan to offer their home for sale. He consents and this becomes a means whereby the divorced husband gains entrance to their home. He comes on the pretext of being a buyer and times his call when only the servants are in. While being shown through the bathroom, he secretly pours some vitriol into a basin of toilet water. He thanks the caretaker and leaves, gloating over the success of his devilish plan of revenge upon the woman.

Returning from her ride she goes to bathe her tired and dust-filled eyes in the basin of water usually prepared for her. She screams out in pain; the servants rush in; the Hindoo caretaker also follows. He finds a handkerchief on the floor and the peculiar odor arouses his suspicions.

He takes it at once to the tiger, who has been trained to follow a scent, releases the beast and they make for the trail of the guilty man. They tree him and at the point of a gun the Hindoo forces the wretch to the suburban station house.

The woman, in the meantime, believes she has been blinded for life, and rather than that Bryan shall know her past, she decided to take her horse and dash over the Hudson cliffs to death in the waters below. She compels her groom to saddle her horse for her and place her on its back. Then she starts on her "gallop to death." But no, not death, for Bryan returns unusually early that day. He hears of his wife's plan and follows.

Savagely she whipped and spurred her steed on. And behind her rode Bryan, who never raised his whip nor touched his spur, but he begged his horse to go faster, faster, faster, and the beast understood. And now he comes in sight of her, grabs her from the saddle and rears both horses up and away from the edge of the precipice.

And but a few weeks later the threatening veil was raised from her eyes and sight returned once more—and happiness too.

THE SPECTRE BRIDEGROOM (2 reels) (Jan. 2).—We begin with a Hallow Eve party at Baron Von Landshort's, where the young people are peeling apples. They throw a long peeling over their shoulders, and the initial of the thrower's sweetheart Hilda's peeling forms V. A. Her father, the baron, tells how his daughter was betrothed when a little tot to the son of his old friend Van Altenberg. Naturally Hilda would like to know her betrothed, and at the suggestion of one of the girls consults a witch, who tells her, "When midnight tolls, look in the old mirror and you will see the picture of a young Hessian officer." Highly pleased, she hugs the mirror to her heart. In the meantime, young Van Altenberg, a disbanded Hessian officer, on the way to meet his fiancée of his infant days—Hilda Von Landshort—meets a brother officer, Herman, at the Inn. Journeying together they are attacked by "Skinners." Van Altenberg is mortally wounded. Dying, he begs his comrade to announce his death to Hilda.

The Baron Von Landshort and family, including Hilda are impatiently awaiting the arrival of the young fiancé (whom they've never seen since childhood), to attend the betrothal feast. Herman arrives to impart the sad news, is mistaken for Von Altenberg, and is not permitted to explain, but is seated at the side of Hilda, as the long expected fiancé. As the feast progresses, he finds Hilda very sweet, and falls desperately in love with her, and then dare not disclose his real identity. The fact that the guests are so impressed with the baron's ghost story, gives him an idea of how he can withdraw discreetly, so he tells the baron he is awaited at the cathedral. After he leaves, the guests, horror-stricken, think him a spectre. Poor Hilda is heartbroken. A few days later Hilda fails to appear at morning prayers. Her aunt goes to call her and finds that the bird has flown—carried away by the spectre, her relatives think—and a letter to the baron, announcing Van Altenberg's death, two days ago. The baron is then sure he has entertained a spectre, and if his daughter has married him, "My goodness, my grandchildren will be spectres." Obsessed with this idea he even has visions of the spectres dancing around him. In the meantime, the eloping couple have come to their senses, and Herman leaves his wife to be chaperoned by a witch until he can smooth matters. The baron and his sisters are still bewailing the loss of Hilda when the servant announces the return of the elopers. "What, the spectre coming here?" "No," replies the servant, "A flesh and blood man." Hilda craves forgiveness. Her husband, not being a spectre, is forgiven, especially as the old baron feels assured that his grandchildren will not be spectres.

AFTER THE SHIPWRECK (Jan. 26).—George Martin, a wealthy yachtsman, puts in at a small port to have his yacht repaired.

It is at the ship-carpenter's home that he first sees Marie, the carpenter's daughter. He takes her on many little strolls and excursions, protesting his love and pleading with her to come with him when his yacht puts off. She consents at last, and steals away from home.

He soon tires of her simple beauty, and cruelly abandons her. Like the true, good girl she is at heart, she returns home. But the girl can find no rest. Torn between her shame and the love she still bears the man who was the cause of her sorrow, she grieves day after day and declines to almost nothing; her strength and spirits seem to be at their lowest ebb on the night of a terrific storm at sea.

The storm subsides, and the carpenter and his older daughter go out to see the effects. The girl, peering out over the waters, perceives a human form being tossed about on the waves. Being a hardy swimmer, she jumps into the water, strikes out with a long, steady stroke, and rescues the victim of the wreck.

She brings the man ashore, and he proves to be none other than Martin, her sister's betrayer. But the old carpenter has gone ahead to prepare a bed and stimulants for the victim. Martin is carried to the house and placed in the room where Marie is lying in a half-delirious sleep. Martin is revived and recognizes her first; the girl, too, becomes conscious of his presence, and recognizes him. The old father realizes the truth, and rises in a rage.

Marie notices it, and where she at first hesitated to give way to her impulse of love and immediate forgiveness, she now decided instantly, for she knew her father's furious anger would mean disaster for the man she loved. She threw herself between them, pleading with her father to forgive as she forgave. The tender-hearted old carpenter stayed his hands and granted her plea.

Martin, shamed into a full realization of what had gone before, and with his eyes open to a finer humanity than he had ever met, fell on his knees to the girl. He kissed the hem of her skirts, her hands, and then her lips, as she bent down to meet his.

GEM.

THE SCAPEGOAT (Jan. 21).—A young cadet in a military college, in company with two other young roysterers, are expelled from school for an infraction of the rules. He fears the wrath of his father, a parent of the stern type. He, therefore, cooks up a scheme which he thinks will be excuse enough to satisfy fatherly criticism. He buys a pair of smoked glasses telling his father that he had to leave school because much study had ruined his eyes.

This does not go with the old man at all, so poor Glen is ordered out of the house. He states his intention of joining the army. The old man falls asleep and dreams that his boy has enlisted, gone out to the Philippines, and there been shot after a court-martial for striking a superior officer.

In the meantime, the boy has met his old school companions, and they proceed to celebrate their release from the halls of learning.

Suddenly awakening from his terrible dream, the old man rushes frantically to a nearby recruiting office in vain search of his boy whom he had so cruelly used. He comes back unsuccessful and heartbroken. The boy finally comes home feeling very happy only to find a couple of very miserable parents. They are overjoyed at his safe return.

THE DEATH TRAIL (Jan. 20).—The scene takes place in the Canadian Northwest. The company, through its Factor, objects to free traders in general and to Fairfax in particular. Fairfax is fearless, and he defies the company, and continues to operate his free trading store. His wife, Marie, is alarmed and would have him go, but Fairfax stands his ground.

Ungan, an Indian, owes the company money, and when he applies for more goods, he is refused. He goes to the Fairfax store and states his case, and Fairfax is willing to trade with him. The company's assistant watches them, and he, in turn, is watched by Marie. The assistant sends an Indian for the Factor, and some men, and they arrive as Ungan is leaving the store. The Factor again orders Fairfax to cease trading their guns, and giving them each a knife, sends Fairfax and Ungan down the long trail without food or drink. He orders them shot if they return.

The faithful Marie returns stealthily to the store, and ties a number of provisions in a shawl. She also secures a rifle and provisions, and hits the trail after the two men.

Fairfax and Ungan wander on until their strength gives out. They sink to the ground, and while in an almost comatose condition, they hear a squirrel cracking a nut. Fairfax throws his knife and kills the squirrel, and Ungan and he struggle for its possession—the Indian's savage nature claiming all of it. Fairfax weakens first, and as the Indian is about to knife him, Marie appears and calls, and the tragedy is averted. Ungan craves forgiveness, and with the food at hand, they have enough to travel to the next trading station.

BISON.

THE GENIUS OF FORT LAPAWAI (Jan. 21).—General Howard is endeavoring to persuade the Nez Perces Indians to sell their lands. They hesitate to sign the deeds. Chief Joseph is straightforward and wishes peace, but he is insulted by Howard, who tells him the Indians will either sign or have their lands taken away from them, and be placed upon a Government reservation by force. An outraged young Sub Chief shakes his fist in Howard's face. He is arrested, and the other Indians would interfere, but Chief Joseph restrains them. The Indians depart.

The Medicine man, in a vision, shows them certain victory and depicts the bleaching bones of the Pale Faces lining the desert. He incites them and they go on the warpath. Chief Joseph would stop them, but things have gone too far. They start out, and attack isolated settlers. Blood is shed, and Joseph decides to lead his people to victory.

In the Garrison the officers disagree as to the methods employed, and wiser heads council diplomacy. Amongst these are Col. Mede and his son, Bobby. Bobby is a genius. He is experimenting with electricity, and it is the cause of getting him into trouble. Bobby is much in love with Alice, General Howard's daughter, but Howard has little use for what he regards as a dreamer.

The Indians are given final notice. They would kill the messenger, but for the intervention of Chief Joseph. The war is on!

Bobby asks the General for his daughter's hand, and is told that if he proves his worth in battle that he will be accepted as the suitor of Alice. Bobby tells Alice of his great idea, and they keep it to themselves. They spend much time digging holes around the stockade and are busy with many wires.

The Indians again ride out. This time the Fort and the troopers are their objective. The Pale Faces must be exterminated. Chief Joseph is accompanied by his daughter, Nytia. He drills his troops as would the Americans. The Indians win the first battle and spike the guns, and take quantities of lead and powder with them, re-inforcements arrive. The Indians craftily lead their opponents into a grove of trees. They climb the trees, attack their foes from the tree tops, and again have considerably the best of matters. The unsuccessful troopers return, and preparations are made for the inevitable attack.

The Indians start and attack and Bobby runs off and is branded as a coward by his father and the officers. He runs to his batteries, and helped by Alice, they watch the progress of the Indians through a loophole in the stockade.

The Indians crowd together and prepare to storm the stockade. Bobby presses a button and a terrific explosion occurs without the Fort, and the Indians are blown into the air, very few escaping. When the smoke clears away, the astonished officers go out to discover the cause. They find the wires and the holes. They interrogate the only man who would meddle with such things in the fort—Bobby—and find out that it is he that saved the day and the good name of the Garrison. General Howard congratulates him, and gives him his daughter in marriage.

A GAMBLER'S LAST TRICK (Jan. 25).—The gambler, an out and out badman, is sick of it all—the "luck," the weeping Claire, the sickly baby. He leaves all to fate and goes. A miner in the far west strikes it rich, much to the delight of his daughters Moll and Nell, and the sheriff, who is affianced to Moll.

The gambler happens along. He offers to buy a half share in the new rich mine, but is turned down. He determines to get a share by fair or foul means. He makes love to Nell, who is much attracted to him. He persuades her to go along with him, and sends a note to the father, saying that if he does not receive word that he is a half partner in an hour's time, he will take care the miner never sees his daughter again. The message is brought by a Mexican. The miner and Moll are distracted, and call upon the sheriff's services. They find a dispirited and desperate woman with him. It is Claire, who has tracked the gambler. The sheriff draws on the Mexican and forces him to exchange suits. The men take the Mexican with them and surprise the gambler, who is about to kill Nell after a desperate struggle. The sheriff is about to arrest the gambler, when Claire shoots and kills him.

THE SYMPHONY (Jan. 23).—Herman is a kind-hearted, artistic man. He means well, but he forgets to be business-like and practical in the pursuance of his dreams of artistic triumph, for Herman is a musician and a composer.

Things go steadily downhill and finally there is no food and Herman's wife is very ill. The child is hungry and Herman plays his own symphony to soothe her. He goes to seek work, taking his violin along with him. While crossing a road he is knocked down by an auto, and suffering from concussion, he is taken to a hospital, where he lies unconscious for weeks. Upon his recovery he hastens home with a sinking heart to find his wife has died and Miriam, his child, has been taken by a lady to her home. Herman goes to the house indicated, only to find the occupants have sold out and gone to Europe.

Many years pass. Herman opens a small musical studio. His daughter Miriam has blossomed into a beautiful young woman. She inherits her father's love for music and takes lessons from him. At the studio she meets Arthur, one of Herman's favorite pupils, and the three become the greatest of friends. The attraction between Herman and Miriam is naturally mutual.

Miriam catches cold and Herman goes to the house of the people who adopted her. He asks her to show him her new piano and she sits and plays the first few bars of a tune. Herman recognizes his own symphony. He finishes it to her surprise. She shows Herman a picture of her "real" mother and he knows who the girl is. He longs to disclose himself, but feels it is better not to do so, as he can offer so little and she has so much.

They are interrupted by Coverly, who is paying persistent court to Miriam, much against her desires. Herman has occasion to find out Coverly's true character and determines to assert his parentage. He is invited to a musical at Miriam's house, and during the evening he overhears Coverly forcing his attentions in the adjoining room. He claims his daughter and dismisses the dissolute young man. Explanations follow and the field is left open for Miriam and Arthur.

LOVE'S LOTTERY TICKET (Jan. 20).—Hector Hardscrabble, a retired business man and a hard-fisted old curmudgen, who hates the world, is the star boarder at a country boarding-house. The landlady adores him, and the hope of her life is to become his wife. But he detests her, although he gets the tender cuts of meat and the largest portions. One day she buys a lottery ticket and wins the capital prize of $25,000. The star boarder hears of it, and suppressing the news, he hastily marries her, only to find that she, thinking the ticket valueless, has given it to the Swedish servant girl, whom the old man hates, but in order to get the prize, he adopts her, only to find that she gave the ticket to Heinie, a lubberly butcher boy whom the old man also hates. He asks Heinie if he has the ticket, and receiving a reply in the affirmative, he adopts him, and they hurry to Heinie's attic after the ticket, only to find that it has been devoured by mice. The old man faints, but is restored to consciousness by his new family, who swear they will never desert him.

RAGS AND RICHES (Jan. 23).—Richard Harvey, the superintendent of the works, has a close friend in Frank Hart, the foreman. Their children are engaged to each other, and the fathers anticipate the marriage with pleasure.

One day Harvey is ordered to place the men upon half time. This enrages them and a fracas ensues, and Hart, hoping to save his old friend from injury, pushes him away from an angry workman. Harvey falls to the ground and is severely injured. When convalescent, his nature is changed, and from a kindly, genial man, he becomes a confirmed misanthrope, and upon his return to the works acts like a tyrant, and his unreasonable methods cause the men to complain to the owner, and he is discharged. He blames this upon his old friend, and forbids the marriage between the young people, and when his daughter refuses to break the engagement, he disowns her and moves to a distant city.

The young couple marry. Years pass. Harvey, now a miserable miser, living in a cellar, has amassed a considerable sum of money through self-abnegation, and is despised and dreaded by all.

The young people have a little girl. Circumstances compel them to move to the city, and they rent a flat next door to the old miser's cellar. One day the little girl rolls her hoop down his cellar, and when she goes there after it, is brutally repulsed by the old man. She notes the crust that serves for his meal, and goes to her home and piles a plate full of fruit and good food and brings it to him. They soon become great friends, and he never dreams that she is his grand-daughter. One day he misses her. She is very ill. The case baffles the doctor, and he insists upon calling a distinguished specialist whose fee is very high, far above the means of the young couple. In affright the wife leaves the dying child with the doctor and runs to tell her husband of the new development. She dreads the worst, for they have no money.

The old miser creeps from his dingy cellar into the sunlight, and asks the landlady where his little friend has gone. She tells him of the sickness, and he decides to visit her. The doctor tells him of the desperate need for the high-priced specialist, and the old miser decides to use his hoarded money to obtain the services of the famous doctor. He hastens to the depths of his rag-filled cellar, but his good impulse oozes away, and he dreads to think of parting with his gold. At length his better nature prevails, and he gives the money to the doctor, and bids him hurry back with the specialist.

When the young father and mother return they are surprised to see a wretched old beggar bending over their darling. The slow recognition is mutual, and there is a speedy reconciliation.

FRONTIER.

THE SURVEYOR AND THE PONY EXPRESS (Jan. 22).—In the early 70's, in a small western village on a midsummer morning, Buck Connors, the pony express rider, rides into the little village of Buckskin, Arizona, and up to the post office. The post master brings out the mail pouch and explains to the express rider that he must be very careful of the mail that day, as it contains a large sum of money. Two bad men, who have been sufficiently close to overhear part of the conversation, decide to hold up, if possible, the pony express at a certain point along the route. Two government surveyors, who had very recently been sent out by the government to survey a tract of land very close to Buckskin, prepare to set up their transit to begin their day's work. They see through the transit a rider come into view. They next see two riders coming at an angle, much closer to them than the first rider. They dismount, rush to the bridle path, and as the single rider comes into view, their guns flash and the rider drops to the ground. They see the two men rush to the fallen man, and notice that a struggle is taking place between one of the hold-up men and the faithful dog of the pony express rider.

The surveyors leave their work and rush toward the spot where the struggle is going on. They arrive too late to prevent the robbery. One of the surveyors, Ralph Goodman, informs the sheriff, who mounts his horse, and together with Ralph they speed back to the spot where the robbery occurred. The robbers, finding the sheriff close upon their track, decide to make for the railroad station, discard their horses, and get out of the country. Rose Williams, realizing something unusual has happened, and fearing for her sweetheart, Ralph Goodman, decides to follow on their trail. She arrives at the spot where the brave pony express rider is lying, and assists her sweetheart in caring for him. Jim Rogers, the friend and co-worker of Ralph, has been hot upon the trail of the robbers, and is close upon them when they dismount and rush to the railroad station. They see him coming, again mount their horses, and are away, followed by Ralph, whom the robbers ambush and leave tied hand and foot, and rush away to escape the sheriff. The sheriff, seeing the robbers, dashes after them. The chase ends in the arrest of the robbers and the securing of the stolen loot. Ralph feels that he is deserving of a reward, and puts a motion before his sweetheart, Rose. She immediately seconds same, and the echo of wedding bells can almost be heard.

ON BURNING SANDS (Jan. 24) (2 reels).—Nell Carter is loved by two men, a rancher named Smiling Joe, and Bill Stover, a cowboy. Bill Stover is caught stealing horses. After a terrific struggle with the sheriff, Bill disarms him and escapes, but he refuses to go away. The sheriff approaches Smiling Joe and asks for his assistance in capturing Bill.

Nell and Joe's sister, Nancy, hear of this and beg him not to have anything to do with the matter, but Joe only laughs at their fears, and the incident causes a disagreement between Joe and Nell. Joe goes with the sheriff and, stealing upon Bill, they overpower him, and he is sentenced to a term of imprisonment.

The months pass. Joe and Nell have made up their differences and are married. Bill is released from jail and hears of the marriage. Smarting with resentment he determines to go after Joe and to kill him on sight.

A Mexican, who has overheard Bill's declaration, seeks out Joe's sister, Nancy, and she goes and tells Nell. Joe determines not to be caught unawares, and decides if there is to be any killing that he will get in the first shot if possible.

The two men stalk each other, and finally come where two streets meet. The men know of the presence of each other, and Bill sees Joe's gun pointing around the corner and draws back. The two women, both anxious for Joe's safety, have followed the movements of the men, and at the critical moment Nell seizes Joe's arm and begs him not to shoot. While Nancy seizes Bill and entreats him not to be revengeful, or to add another crime to his conscience. They bring the two men together, and Joe, anxious to please his wife, holds out his hand to Bill, who refuses to shake and goes away.

Joe has to attend a round-up. Bill, seizing his chance, forges a note which he gives to a Mexican, to take to Nell. In it he tells her that as she seems to think more of Bill Stover than she does of him, that she had better hang on to him, that he is through with her and has gone away. The Mexican tells Bill the effect that the note has on Nell and he follows it up. She shows Bill the note and asks his advice. He makes violent love to her and tells her to come with him. She consents and leaves a letter for her husband, telling him that he will never see her again and that she has gone back to God's country with Bill Stover.

Joe determines to follow them and to get Nell back and to kill Bill. He gets on their track, which leads to the desert. Bill and Nell are caught in a terrible sand storm. He drains the canteen and, throwing her aside, he turns his steps backward. Joe comes upon her in this predicament, and after finding out the true cause of her plight, he gives her water, resuscitates her and they start back for home. On the way they come across the dying Bill, who begs for water, but Joe merely kicks him and tells him to die like a dog that he is. They leave him and arriving at the edge of the desert, Joe sends Nell on alone.

She has begged him not to let this man's death mar their lives, so he goes back to try and bring Bill out to safety.

Nell gets help, water and provisions and hurries back in time to save them both. Bill is now cured, and he passes out of their lives.

VICTOR.

SUNNY SMITH (Jan. 24).—Jack Jones and Albert Brown were chums, but rivals for the hand of their boarding house keeper's daughter. Jack, though, was the favorite of the mother, as well as of the boarders. Jack could sing, and he and Mary, the daughter, would sing and play, to the delight of the boarders, while Albert would wander off in disgust. Many times was Albert forced out of the conversation by his rival, and he decided to get even. He was going along the street, when he saw two seedy looking pieces of humanity, and it was then that a thought struck him to get even. Taking the one bum by the arm, he took him to his room, dressed him up in his clothes and introduced him as his friend, a count from Paris. The boarding house keeper told Jack to give up his place to the count. Not being used to such a nice maid, "Happy," as he was called, proceeded to make love to the maid, but was called down by Albert, and soon turned his attentions to Mary. As soon as the meal was over he ordered a touring car and took them all out riding. This, of course, was Albert's money, and he, not daring to refuse, had to go along. Next he took them all to dinner, and it was Albert's money again. So he went on spending money lavishly. Albert in the meantime was getting tired of his bargain, but the landlady and her daughter had already begun to like the "count" for himself alone. Finally, when he used all of Albert's money, it was time for Albert to say something. Coming into the room where the count was talking to the housekeeper and her daughter, he started to tell them who the count really is, but they would not hear of it. He already had become engaged to Mary and was the pride of the whole boarding house. Jack and Albert were sick at heart and went to their room to "die in despair," for Sunny had beat them at their own game.

NESTOR.

IN PEACEFUL HOLLOW (Jan. 20).—Mr. Boggs, broker, is run down. He needs absolute rest and quiet. He reads an advertisement in the paper. It announces that fresh air, peace and quietness can be obtained at the farm of Si Holcomb, Squashville. It sounds good. Mr. Boogs does not wait to write. He wires he is coming. He comes. Mac, the hired man, meets him. He is in love with Lois and their two temperaments giggle as one. Boggs is expected to room with Mac. He prepares to go at once. Holcomb sees his money going too and gives him his daughter's room. Boggs settles down to read, and Mac gets a sudden desire for exercise. He files his saw and talks to Lois and Mac has a nasal drawl. Boggs is furious and seeks a more restful spot. He finds it at the haystack.

Mac is pulled off his job and sent to feed the stock. He is angry and jabs his pitchfork into the hay and also into Boggs's anatomy. Boggs moves painfully on.

Mac has answered an "ad" which promises first aid to those desiring to propose. He receives the book telling him how. Chapter 17 advises securing a guitar and playing something soulful outside the proposee's window. Mac waits until night and not having a guitar, compromises with a full-blooded concertina.

Boggs wakes and swears and Mac, having played all the tunes he knows over twice, goes to bed. A dog howls and Boggs loses a perfectly good shoe.

Finally he can stand it no more and cautiously he packs his grip, recovers the missing shoe, steals out, and in the course of time he reaches the station and arrives home in time to snatch a few hours' sleep to the tune of the busy city traffic's "peaceful" roar.

THE TAXIDERMIST (Jan. 20).—Brown is a taxidermist, and is in love with his stuffed creations and wifey. Mrs. Brown receives a letter telling her that an old school friend is visiting her, and will be with them for supper. Brown has a successful day stuffing magpies and pussy cats, and decides to take a few specimens home to show wifey. He puts them in his bag and catches a car. He sits next to a lady who has a bag similar to his own, and upon leaving the car, he hastily grabs the wrong bag. The lady (yes, it is the old school friend, Mary), rides a block too far, but with the aid of a friendly copper, she is turned into the right path.

Brown arrives home and is surprised that the friend has not shown up. He goes off to wash up and tells Mrs. Brown to open the bag and that she will find a surprise. She does! It is in the form of ladies' garments, and Mrs. Brown forms hasty conclusions and loses her dignity. Brown runs on and is flabbergasted, and tries to reason with wifey. A diversion occurs with the arrival of Mary. Brown bundles the offending garments into the bag as Mrs. Brown composes herself, and goes to greet Mary. They go to the bedroom, and Mary is shocked to hear such a perfectly dreadful account of dear Martha's husband. Dear Martha leaves her and tells her to hurry, as dinner is ready, and she can see a monster in human form sitting at the head of the table.

Mary hurries and opens the bag. She takes out a furry animal and has hysterics. The hysterical echoes interrupt an interesting family quarrel, and the Browns run to Mary's assistance. Brown, in his excitement, dashes water on the two ladies, and is listening to a discordant duet, fortissimo, when he sees the bag and his precious stuffed animals. Explanations follow, and Mrs. Brown ruins Brown's shirt front with a damp and ardent embrace.

THE RIOT (Jan. 22).—The owner of the mine, John C. Branden, absolutely refused to consider the position of the miners, which had been presented to him by Allen, their leader, and the next morning posted a notice that operations at the mines would be suspended indefinitely. Time passed. From time to time they approached Mr. Branden, but always with the same result. At last, driven to frenzy by continued sickness and privation, the miners declared that they would make him feel the pangs of hunger, if he refused them again.

Taking with them Allen's little daughter Maxine, they made one final appeal; still he remained obstinate. Then the sick child appealed, but Mr. Branden only leveled his rifle at them. Apparently cowed the miners backed out; but no sooner did the owner lower his rifle than Allen sprang upon him, seized the weapon and with the aid of willing hands quickly and quietly bore him away to a deserted shack, where he was securely bound with chains, and bread and water to last him for a week was placed within his reach. Then the miners departed, all except Will, the half-wit, who cunningly waited until the last man had dissappeared from view, when he snatched the food and water and placed it just beyond Mr. Brandon's reach. This done, he, too, departed, only returning on the following day to taunt the hapless man. Little Maxine had pleaded with her father to release the man she had seen bound in the shack, but without success however, so when father and mother were out, and grandmother mending, the sick child gathered what scraps of food she could find, and stole out to give them to the owner. After she had given him water, of which he stood mostly in need, he spied an old bolt at the other end of the room, and with its aid succeeded in prying open his chains. Then he took the child to her cabin, and looking around realized what he had been doing to the miners. When they appeared he granted them all they asked.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER (Jan. 24).—Donald goes to the city to get employment, and his widowed mother grieves silently. He is all she has. Donald obtains employment and forms one or two bad acquaintances. Tom is released from prison. He is not a bad man, but the woman got him in her meshes, and he stole to supply her with the money and jewels she demanded. Tom goes to her, feeling sure of her help. She turns upon him, and Tom squares his shoulders and sets his face towards the hills and freedom.

Tom happens upon the widow's farm and asks for work. The widow's motherly heart warms toward him, and, for the first time in many years, Tom knows what a good woman's influence means. He cannot deceive her. He tells her what he has been and would go, but she detains him, for she sees all the latent good in him.

Donald goes ahead rapidly and earns good money. He meets the woman, and is quickly in trouble. Her demands reduce him to desperation. He thinks she is a beautiful woman, and intends to marry her. He, therefore, sends a photograph of her to his mother, and asks her to let him have a good sum of money.

By chance, Tom sees the photo and he reads the letter. He determines to save the widow's boy. Instead of posting the letter containing the money, he places it in the old family Bible and goes to the city. The widow thinks he has gone with her money, and is sorrowful and hurt.

Tom goes to the woman and threatens her. He hides as Donald enters her room, and fearful of Tom, she tells the boy who and what she has been. He is disillusioned and heartbroken. Tom follows and takes him home to the widow.

Satisfied that he has made amends, he starts to go out of their lives, but mother and son persuade him that he is necessary to them, and he stays and is content.

A SHADOW OF THE PAST (2 reels-Jan. 22)—The wife of a Raffles, a dress-suit thief, who makes an occasional haul at social gatherings, witnesses the arrest of her husband when he is followed home by detectives and caught with the goods. She is overwhelmed with shame upon his acknowledgment of guilt and subsequently humiliated by her neighbors.

She finds relief in an opportunity to teach school in the Far West and there begins a new life. Among her pupils is the little son of a widowed military officer stationed at a nearby post. The father of the little boy becomes interested in the girlish-looking school mistress and finally asks her to become his wife. It is at this point that the current of her thoughts is shown by double exposure. Her mind reverts to the imprisoned man she promised to love, exhibiting her loyalty and tenderness of heart.

The thief does not escape from jail, but he enters upon a violent struggle when being carried to a distant point in the Far West to give testimony relating to a more important criminal, and jumps from the train while it is going at full speed. He is seen rolling down into a gully and is soon after announced as dead. He is in truth revived by some friendly Indians and becomes one of their number, acting as their interpreter in dealing with military forces near their reservation.

The school mistress sees the announcement of his death and weds the officer whose little child she has been teaching. In the course of time the thief, now a renegade Indian, comes to parley with the military men in relation to a treaty violation, and the officer's wife recognizes the man she believed to be dead, though she is not seen by him. She is overcome, but does not confess to the officer she has married in good faith.

Troops are drawn from the post to the protection of a body of white invaders, and the place falls into the hands of the Indians after a fierce engagement. They murder or torture the helpless inmates until the renegade comes suddenly upon his own wife and the officer's child. In a saving moment he defends her against the redskins, holding them at bay until the troopers return. He spares her and the child, but is shot in trying to escape, killed by the officer whose family he protected.

CHILD LABOR (Jan. 14).—John Morgan is a rich factory owner with one child, Grace, five years old. At the factory, Morgan decides his pay roll is too big, so after talking the matter over with his foreman he gives out the edict that all his men are to be laid off. The next day a big sign is pasted on the factory gates, stating that little girls are wanted to make artificial flowers. Many children apply and the little daughters of the old workmen are forced to do their fathers' work in the big factory. James Martin, a good kind father, tries to get other employment, but finds it useless. When he thinks of taking his little ones away from school his heart is almost broken. But finally they, too, have to join the little army at the factory gates.

One day, Grace visits the factory and Billie, the office boy, takes her through the works. She sees the sufferings of the little ones and realizes the truth. She helps a little girl with her tasks and bathes the forehead of a fainting child. Her father comes in and sees this and is very angry. He sends her home. The next week he receives a large order and compels the children to work overtime in order to get it out on time.

While the little ones are slaving for their bare existence, Grace falls ill. In her delirium she sees always before her the wasted faces of the little toilers in her father's factory. She pleads with him to get them free, and finally her little voice has the desired effect. To please her he sends word to the foreman that the children are to be dismissed, and the old hands taken back. There was great joy throughout the factory that day. The children go to see Grace when she gets better. James Martin sees his children start back to school and he returns to his old place in the factory joyfully. Later Morgan opens a Kindergarten for the younger ones.

FINNEY'S LUCK (Jan. 16).—Finney's luck turns from good to bad and back again so fast that he can't keep track of it. His wife wants to go to the theater on the very evening that Finney is playing so close to the cloth that he can't buy tickets. Thoroughly discouraged, he is walking along the street when a crook bumps into him and drops two theater tickets at his very feet. He picks them up and runs home to bid his wife prepare for the glorious evening, while the woman from whom the tickets were stolen is putting the whole Burn's Detective Agency on the track of the thief. Finney and his wife are enjoying the performance and Finney is standing ace high in his wife's regard when the detectives succeed in tracing the numbers of the seats for which the stolen tickets call. Luck changes again when Mr. Finney and his good wife find themselves lodged in a cell with excellent chances of spending the night there. But luck changes once more and Finney comes into his own.

SAW WOOD (Jan. 16).—Hawley, a famous author, takes the road as a tramp to get local color for his new book. He leaves a letter for his wife, acquainting her of the fact. A reporter learns of Hawley's scheme by questioning Mrs. Hawley and publishes a picture of Hawley and the story in the newspaper. A real tramp takes the same road as Hawley and gets into trouble by helping himself to a pie, that is cooling on the window-sill of a farm house. The farmer mistakes Hawley for the offending tramp and sets him to work on the wood pile while he keeps watch over him with a gun. Meanwhile the real tramp makes good his escape and is mistaken by the good folks of the town for Hawley, the noted author. Weary Willie is dined and wined and treated like a king. Even Hawley's wife joins in the festivities to do him honor, and when Hawley returns after having spent a long hard day making little sticks out of big ones he is taken for a genuine hobo and his troubles are numerous until he is recognized by his wife and friends.

AMERICAN.

WHERE DESTINY GUIDES (Jan. 20).—Virgie's father was brought home from the mine mortally wounded. Before dying he asked that, for protection's sake, Dick Connors marry his daughter. The marriage was consummated in a daze, neither having known the other. After it was all over, Virgie, overcome with grief, leaped upon her horse and galloped away into the mountains. She was picked up by Ranchman Lee and his wife, in a semi-conscious condition, her memory gone. They adopted her and she grew up with them.

A Mexican foreman, working for Lee, made violent love to her. Virgie resented it and he followed her often, pleading his lost cause. Then Dick called at the ranch and learned for the first time what had become of his wife and of her sad plight. She did not recognize her husband until after a violent encounter of Dick with the Mexican during which she received a blow on the head, the shock of which brought back her reason. The timely interference of Lee saved Dick and caused the banishment of the Mexican. Dick and Virgie then take up life.

THE SILVER-PLATED GUN (Jan 23).—Avenged, the outlaw took his way into the mountains. The sheriff followed. Hour after hour the hunt went on, from hill to valley, from the open to the woods. Both struggled against exhaustion, leaned frequently against some boulder to regain their breath and wits. Slipping from one rock to another, the bandit ever eluded search and ever the sheriff followed. When human strength could stand no longer, the bandit sank down, his silver-plated gun glistening in the sun. And then the miracle happened. The reflection of the sun on the silver-plated gun shone straight into the tired eyes of the sheriff. He looked up, followed the glistening light and, with gun in hand, bagged his exhausted fugitive. With gun before him the sheriff followed the bandit into town.

A ROSE OF OLD MEXICO (Jan. 25).—Pedro wanted Paquita and her father seconded his suit. But Paquita was in love with Paul Hapgood, an American, and would not hear of it. She wrote to Paul and told him to take her away. He came and Paquita's father renounced her as his daughter forever. Grabbing a gun he bade them leave his estate. Then, when they had gone, in replacing his pistol, it dropped, wounding him fatally. With his last strength, he wrote the truth on a slip of paper and placed in in the Bible.

The Mexicans, headed by Pedro, caught the pair and accused them. Tto save her lover, Paquita made the grand sacrifice and confessed to the killing. Then Paul stepped forward, and pushing his sweetheart aside, took the blame himself. They took him out to lynch him and Paquita fell on her knees to pray. Then she found her father's note which completely vindicated the lovers and put to shame the spiteful Pedro.

KEYSTONE.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON (Jan. 20).—The distinguished English nobleman and sportsman is seen at the Broncho Film Co.'s ranch, and everything possible done to entertain him. The interesting things shown him will no doubt prove of great interest to the public. The query has often been heard: "How is it possible for a horse to fall heavily while in full gallop and not kill himself or his rider?" This film shows how it is done.

FOR LIZZIE'S SAKE (Jan. 20).—A villain attempts to win the love of a pretty fisher girl, who is in love with a village youth. The villain finally kidnaps the girl and carries her out to a rock at low tide, where he ties her. He stands on the shore hoping that the rising water will force her to promise to marry him. The water rises higher and higher, tremendous waves dashing over the girl, and when it seems impossible for her to live another minute her sweetheart arrives with a crowd of the village people and rescues her.

KAY-BEE.

THE MOSAIC LAW (2 reels) (Jan. 24).—A wagon train of emigrants is seen crossing the desert of the far west, and a sand storm arises. A terrific wind blows the hot sand in great gusts. The Indians escape death by burying themselves in the sand, but the emigrants, ignorant of such tactics, blindly stagger through the storm.

The wagon of the Gordons becomes lost when they are separated from the main train, and morning finds them on the blazing desert with their oxen dead and with no water. Gordon, carrying his baby, and supporting his wife, gropes his way along until they fall exhausted, Mrs. Gordon in a dying condition. Before expiring she makes Gordon swear that he will guard the baby through life with his own life, if need be. Friendly Indians find Gordon and the baby, who are taken to the fort.

Many years later Mildred Gordon and her father are living together, and Mildred is courted by a handsome Spaniard named Ramarez, who claims to be a wealthy man of leisure, but who is in reality a bandit. His former sweetheart, Fanchez, a Spanish girl, spies upon him and looking through the window sees an affectionate scene between Ramarez and Mildred, and her heart is filled with hate.

Ramarez and his henchmen hold up the government special, carrying the pay of the soldiers, and a detachment is sent to hunt the bandits. Most of the gang are caught, but Ramarez eludes them, and rushing to the Gordon home persuades Mildred to elope with him. When Gordon finds the letter he has visions of the death-bed of his wife, and of his promise to guard Mildred with his life, and he solemnly swears to track down Ramarez.

In a distant settlement Ramarez soon tires of Mildred, and she is horrified to learn his true nature. Weak and dispirited, the shock of being driven away by Ramarez is the last straw, and as she staggers blindly out in the streets she is found by her father, and, later, dies in his arms. With burning hate Gordon takes up the trail of his man, and finally meets him in the village hotel.

In the meantime Indian rustlers have decided to change their diet to fresh mutton, and they make a raid. (This is a beautiful scene, thousands of sheep being shown.) In a fight with the shepherds a number of Indians are killed, and the tribe, in revenge, decides to raid the village.

As Gordon holds his man at the point of his gun, while the astounded onlookers, gathering the reason therefor from Gordon's words, refuse to interfere, the Indians swoop down upon the village, firing upon the houses. Gordon's attention is distracted for a moment by the firing, and Ramarez takes advantage of the situation to leap into the cellar, and crawl through a small window, with Gordon in close pursuit.

Ramarez takes to the hills, and a thrilling running duel is fought from behind hills and rocks, until finally Gordon brings Ramarez down.

RELIANCE.

A NIGHT OF TERROR (Jan. 11).—Robert Drew, a young commuter, finding that he will be forced to stay in town overnight, persuades his wife to get her girl friend whom he has never seen, to stay the night with her. However, when the time arrives he discovers he is able to catch the last train for home, and rather than leave the two girls alone, he decides to go back. The girls, who have gone to bed, hear the noise below and think a burglar has broken in.

Robert fixes some supper in the kitchen and, hearing the dog bark, he goes out to get him. The girls, in the meantime, find a revolver and slowly go downstairs. Finding the dishes they are positive that someone has broken in, and retreat upstairs in terror. Robert comes in with the dog and, finding the tools which the girls have overturned in their fright, he also becomes convinced that there is a thief in the house. He starts upstairs in search of the supposed burglar. His wife has forced her friend to don one of her husband's suits to scare off the thief and Robert coming upstairs sees a man, as he supposes, leave his wife's room. He rushes up, but the girls lock the door. He bangs in vain but they refuse to open it until, finally his wife recognizes his voice. He rushes in to discover the truth and so terminates their night of terror.

THE WHEEL OF FATE (Jan. 15).—Dick, a telephone operator, is in love with Margie, another operator. Joe, who is also in love with the girl, has been refused time and time again. Being naturally of a jealous disposition, he hates Dick with all his heart and waits for the time to come when he can do him some injury. Margie, operator at a small station, leaves Dick there on duty one night. There is a large sum of money in the safe and she bids him to be careful. Joe, who has followed, sees a chance to injure Dick. He steals in and knocks the other man out and opens the safe, making off with the money. Dick recovers, and grabbing his gun, he follows. Joe crosses a railroad trestle. When Dick attempts to follow he falls in the middle of the trestle. He can go no further. The great express is speeding toward him. He drops through the trestle and clings there, The train passes over him and he drops into the water below. He is found there unconscious a few hours later by the men who have come to search for the thief. They decide he stole the money and was running away with it. He is arrested and placed in prison to await his trial. Margie believes firmly in Dick's innocense. She finds a coat button at the scene of the crime and notes that a button of the same kind is missing from Joe's coat. She lures him to the station and after conversing with detectives who have installed a dictagraph in the station. Margie allows Joe to make love to her and gets him to brag of the theft. She reaches the door to tell the detectives, but he sees her intention and threatens her. She manages to send a distress call and the detectives arrive in time to arrest Joe. Dick is freed and told he owes his release to the girl who loved him enough to make a brave fight for his freedom.

SOLAX.

THE COMING OF SUNBEAM (Jan. 22).—Proud old Major Neal disowns his only child, a beautiful girl, because he considers her marriage a misalliance. Years pass. The old major becomes a recluse feared by all. One morning (Christmas), a hamper is found beneath the Major's covered driveway. The butler and housekeeper (in the secret), carry the hamper to the library and present it to Neal. He is greatly puzzled and finding a card attached inscribed "To Major Neal," he opens the hamper, only to slam it hastily shut with a startled and angry expression. The hamper contains a baby girl. The old man orders the child taken from his presence, and advertises for the one who presumed to leave it to take it off. But no one claims the child, whose sweetness and innocent joys soon begin to move the old fellow's heart. The baby constantly makes advances, in spite of rebuffs, until the old man succumbs and worships the child, calling her "Little Sunbeam." Sunbeam is stricken with fever. Now is the mother's chance. She comes (the old family doctor aiding and abetting her), disguised as a nurse, and with a mother's untiring love and care nurses Sunbeam back from the shadowy brink. Old Major Neal and his disowned daughter meet at the bedside of the child, and through their great and mutual love for Sunbeam become forever reconciled.

THE ROADS THAT LEAD HOME (Jan. 24).—Mrs. Hurley is a wealthy old lady who is rather proud of her antecedents. Her son, a young clean-cut college-bred man, like other gilded youths, makes the acquaintance of an actress and the inevitable follows: He marries her much against the commands of his mother. As a consequence, his mother cuts him off, and he is forced to make his own way. He is successful, and the glamour of having an actress as a wife soon wears off. He neglects her for the companionship of a rather smart and fast set in society. The pace they set is rather strong,

A BLACKHAND ELOPEMENT

A typical country constable arrests a poor Italian fruit vender as the kidnapper of a pretty girl and then assumes the role of hero worthy of her hand. She, however, has bestowed this on a dashing young man, so the sappy and confused constable is content with a small fee and the peddler gets free.

JANUARY 23d

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM

This is an ever true tale of the young mother and the ever busied father who drift apart. The one giving herself up to society as freely as the other shuns it. They almost come to the parting of the ways, when the child, the light of their home, persuades them to a reconsecration for better things.

January 28th.

A CANINE MATCHMAKER

A picturesque playlet in which a bashful and hesitant man is helped out of his courtship predicament by his clever dog. Astonishing and amusing.

JANUARY 24th

THE SUFFRAGETTE

Samantha Roundtree comes to a Western town to enlighten, concerning votes for women. Waggy Bill plays a trick on the girl and finds that she is not entirely engrossed in politics. It is a rattling good comedy. On the same reel with

THE AINUS OF JAPAN

Views the oldest people of oldest civilization in the world.

January 27th

THE MINER'S JUSTICE

A young man rescues an old prospector from death in the desert and they become partners in a mine. The young man becomes fascinated with a woman and is for disposing of the mine. He tries to dynamite his aged partner to accomplish this end, but the old man catches the cartridge as it falls, and brings his would-be assassin to terms in his own peculiar style.

After he bought a Compensarc

Which Would YOU Rather Pay?

This man is on a 220 volt circuit and as his moving picture lamp only requires 35 volts at the arc, he formerly used a rheostat to reduce the voltage. In this way he paid for about 3 times as much "juice" as he actually needed.

Then he figured he needed this money more than the Lighting Company and he bought a

FORT WAYNE COMPENSARC

Now he gets a clearer, whiter, more intense unflickering light and his bills are only about 1/3 what they were before. The machine has three adjustments and the circuit can not break for even an instant in passing from one to another. No delays, no bother, no waste, no danger, no heat.

Send today for our 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat." It tells you how you can get a much better light at 1/3 your present cost

Double Your Price of Admission When You Get These!

At least once a week, if you are a customer of mine, you will get a Universal feature film so big and so good that the public will be glad to stand for it if you double the price of admission! THIS WON'T COST YOU AN EXTRA CENT! If you got the same film from a "state rights" man, you'd have to charge a higher admission and you'd think nothing of it. But you'd also have to split with him! Just because I don't charge you extra for Universal features IS NO REASON WHY YOU CAN'T CHARGE EXTRA IF YOU FEEL LIKE IT! Act on this tip and FATTEN YOUR EXCHEQUER.

THE THANHOUSER THREE-A-WEEK

(Released Sunday, Jan. 19th)

The Commuter's Cat---and---A Few Million Birds

A fine split reel, the main feature of which is a very funny story based on a commuter's desire to get rid of an unwelcome parcel, which persists in sticking to him, and on an exchange of bundles on the train. A few flying things are shown in the closing subject.

(Released Tuesday, Jan. 21st)

Her Fireman

is a brave proposition, who hesitates not to risk his life when he finds the life of her protege-from-the-streets in danger. And it is not an ordinary rescue scene. Everything about the picture, every scene in it, is away from the ordinary "fire film" with the made-to-order rescue situation. And it grips you in proportion.

(Released Friday, Jan. 24th)

The Floorwalker's Triumph

This is a rich comedy on the efforts of two merchants in a small country town to boom business. One hires a handsome floorwalker; the other uses a beauteous actress to draw business, via a clever advertising scheme. Both "cards" prove a boomerang to the merchants who play them.

Notice on the Recent Fire

Advance schedule of Thanhouser releases not affected, in consequence of the saving of all negatives. Middle Western Stock has joined the California Stock at Thanhouser Coast Studio, Fairview Place, Los Angeles, where the two companies are producing three subjects a week. The home company is operating in New York City. The Thanhouser factory in its entirety has been transferred to a completely equipped laboratory, where the entire product is being printed. The fire in no wise interferes with the business of Thanhouser Film Corporation. Even posters for the releases will reach all Exchanges on time.

A Two-Reel Story Portraying the Doings of Wild Beasts and Wilder Men in South Africa—Two Miners Try to Steal a "Claim" from the Widow of Their Employer, Who Has Died of "the Fever." To Get Her Out of the Way, the Conspirators Decoy Her Into a Deserted House, Where She Is Attacked by a Bloodthirsty Animal

---

This subject, while depicting the motives of men alike in jungle and metropolis, is an antithetis to which in two reels tells of the greed of a mine owner which costs the lives of many drowned miners when the mine weakens under hydraulic force. There is a strong scene when the wife of one of the drowned miners, though realizing that her husband had died through the mine magnate's cupidity, defends him in her home against the angry kin of dead miners.

Significantly is shown the retributive bias of natural justice when the mine owner, in agony lest he be surrendered to the non-gentle hands that itched to wreak vengeance upon him, dies of fear.

---

State Rights Sales are continuing on a three-reel detective story, in which love and adventure weave a curious crochet. Also on a three-reel portrayal showing that wickedness will be punished, and how, through science and coincidence mind and matter contrives to bring the malefactor to condign punishment.

"The White Glove Band"

"In the Grip of the Vampire"

Also to be mentioned are

"The Bridge of Sorrow" (2 reels)
"The International Conspiracy" (3 reels)
"Perils of the Atlantic" (2 reels)
"The Vengeance of Egypt" (3 reels) and
"In the Land of the Lions" (2 reels—hand-colored).

An Opportunity

The Gaumont Co.'s advertisements have aroused interest, and the company received much correspondence regarding exclusive rights to Gaumont regular releases, including the Gaumont Weekly, being open in parts of the United States. ## and Submit to Its Spell

You Can't Help It—Nobody Ever Could

From the time it was painted the picture has exercised a strange, nay weird, influence on its beholders. Leonardo da Vinci, whose genius created it, away back when Columbus discovered so much Real Estate, loved the picture better than his life. A king made it his greatest ambition to own the painting, having previously fallen victim to the charms of the living model who, herself, fell under the knife of a jealous Queen. Look at the picture once more and bring back to your mind the memory of its sensational disappearance from the Louvre in Paris almost two years ago. That day someone could not resist the lure of the picture!

The story of our second ECLECTIC release is woven around this picture, after which it is named, and laid in the days when the portrait was being done. This means the settings and atmosphere of medieval splendor with its riot of color. What else could we do but hand-color it from end to beginning and vice versa? The story is a gripping one, brimful of dramatic interest leading up to a sensational climax. It is told in two volumes, called reels. Acting of the ECLECTIC kind. Secure the film and transmit the spell of the picture to those eager to exhibit it and thus offer a real treat to a multitude of audiences. One, three and six sheet posters, well done, will help you. Read a Wise Man's Review on another page. Shipment about February 8th.

And the one way to do that and make dead sure you are right and safe and sound is to "Demand That Universal Program" now and all the time. It is one of the largest moving picture contracts ever signed. The fact that we signed it proves that we are determined to let nothing stand in the way of MAKING UNIVERSAL EXHIBITORS MORE PROSPEROUS THAN OTHERS! # THE BEASTS OF THE JUNGLE

Three Reels of Thrill and Spectacle

Elaborately staged. Costumes, property and scenery and the animals, including elephants, lion, tiger, monkey and parrot, are estimated to be worth

$18,000

The story revolves about an American engineer, whose daughter rides off on an elephant and is lost in the jungle. The little girl, after wandering in the jungle, finds herself suddenly staring into the fiery eyes of a snarling and spitting tiger. A number of very interesting scenes follow, in which the parents make frantic efforts to locate their child. In the meantime the little girl makes friends with the tiger and becomes its star boarder. The parents come upon the scene and, complying with the pleadings of their daughter, take the tiger into the family. The scene shifts from India to Africa, where the American engineer is commissioned to build a railroad across the Transvaal. The tiger, of course, goes along with the family. In Africa, among other scenes, a lion attacks the house, and the climax is capped by a sensational struggle between a man and the beast. Eventually the lion is burned in a trap.

State Rights Selling

(With Protection)

The production is more remarkable and more noteworthy than other animal pictures, because in nearly all of the scenes the players appear alongside of the wild beasts.

Facts and Comments

EXHIBITORS from almost every state in the Union are writing to The Moving Picture World urging it to keep up the agitation for a proper Sunday entertainment and asking for materials which may be used in conducting a campaign of education for the benefit of the opponents of Sunday pictures. This demand has been persistent enough to exhaust our back numbers with the articles on the Sunday question and we have therefore prepared a typewritten summary of sound arguments in favor of a proper Sunday entertainment. This typewritten summary will be sent to any exhibitor upon request.

There is just one word of special caution we would like to say to exhibitors who are called upon to take part in the agitation for a liberal Sunday. We would urge them to use diplomacy and to treat old, deeply rooted prejudices with tenderness and toleration. A man may differ from us and be just as sincere as we hope we are. Let us therefore avoid all personalities and all intemperate language. Let us not yield to the temptation of going away from the real issues of the case. A campaign conducted with dignity and courtesy is the only campaign worth while. Whenever the opponents of the proper Sunday entertainment are carried away by their excess of zeal and begin to throw epithets, set them a good example by sticking to the point and ignoring personal arguments.

* * *

IT is a well-known fact, that the yellow press frequently replenishes its vocabulary from the gutter. The hideous expression "movies" to designate the greatest educational factor in modern civilization was no doubt fished out of the unwholesome debris found along the edges of the highways of literature. One of the yellow sheets has now invented a similarly elegant and classic name for the new Edison kinetophone. We do not like to touch the thing, even for the purpose of putting it in the pillory, but the word is "talkies." What fine and noble additions to our impoverished language! Now let us drop the time-worn word book and call it "readie" and let the theaters henceforth be known as "lookies." With a little assistance from the Chinese Laundrymen's Association we ought to make great strides in simplifying and revising the poor English language.

* * *

FROM all present indications it seems that the feature film, as the newest development in the moving picture field, will hold a position near the centre of the stage for quite some time to come. Even the smallest theaters are ready and anxious for features. A curious fact in the situation is the scarcity, not to say the almost complete absence, of features dealing with American subjects. There are plenty of feature films produced in this country, but the subjects are generally of European origin. Manufacturers seem to prefer European history and European literature. Just why this should be so is one of the unexplained mysteries of filmdom. Some American historical films have been made, but the field has scarcely been touched. American literature has been neglected, though there are signs of future improvement. No one will deny that we enjoy vigorous national health with plenty of proof in literature and on the speaking stage. American multiple feature reels, it seems to us, ought to meet with an immediate and profitable response. Legends of old Japan and tragedies of ancient Egypt are interesting to be sure but there are valuable materials right at our doors.

"THE innocent exhibitor should not suffer from the follies of the few radicals." We take this sentence from a letter written to us recently by a friend of the motion picture in Milwaukee. Echoes of the same sentiment are heard frequently wherever exhibitors meet. Our correspondent speaks of probable hostile action by the authorities, caused by the antics of one exhibitor who persists in showing objectionable films and displaying even more objectionable posters. Here is a matter which plainly calls for concerted action by the organized exhibitors.

* * *

THE future progress of the educational film generally and the educational feature in particular depends to no small extent on the treatment it will receive at the hands of the average exhibitor. If the exhibitor is pleased with such films and wants to make the best of them, he will call to his aid the advantages of special and well-rehearsed music, a suitable lecture, and vigorous publicity methods. The frame in which we see a picture always influences us. None except experts will recognize a Rembrandt in a cheap and dirty frame or in no frame at all. On the other hand a mediocre painting may be set off to great advantage, when placed in a fine, artistic frame. The frame should always be worthy of the picture. Exhibitors should realize that in giving its proper due to the educational release on their programs they are bound to help the cause of the moving picture generally. If they slight the opportunities offered them by progressive manufacturers they hurt not only the industry, but in the long run they hurt themselves. If the moving picture is to progress and expand along the right lines we cannot get enough support from the intelligent and educated classes of the community.

The kinematograph must aim to be the poor man's library. It must give in pleasing form to all the people, what the shelves of the library now offer only to the favored few, to wit, the benefits and knowledge that come to us from an acquaintance with the masterpieces of literature and art and science. The kinematograph is the great popularizing agent for the works of great minds, that have existed before us and have only expressed themselves through the printed page. If the kinematograph aimed at anything less than this the picture would soon be degraded to a toy or a fad. The permanency of the motion picture depends on the utilization of its educational value.

"What the Public Want"

By W. Stephen Bush

"WE are giving the people what they want." Such is the most common and persistent plea urged in defense of inferior, morbid and ultra-sensational films. "The public," we are told by certain manufacturers, "want their amusement 'red-hot' and 'raw.' We know what the public want, and we give them what they want," is their confident assertion.

I do not believe that this plea is always sincere or made in good faith. In many cases "the wish is father to the thought," and cheap reels are turned out, not because the producers think them popular, but just because they are cheap. The cry, "We are giving the people what they want," catches many unthinking exhibitors and imposes on not a small portion of even the public. The loudest shouters often defeat for the time being the best reasoners and temporary triumphs of lungs over brains are not rare.

Of all the pleas for the cheaply sensational or sensationally cheap film, none is more specious and worthless than this same motto: "The people want the blood-and-thunder product, and children cry for it."

The man who can look at any subject wholly free from bias and guided solely by the light of reason, is rare. If his own personal interest is concerned, no one will expect him to be impartial and unprejudiced. We might on this ground alone reject the claim of the producers of ultra-sensational stuff that they serve a popular demand. We might also say that every creature delights in its own likeness, and very few are able to look beyond their own tastes and desires. The producer who is himself fond of cheap and coarse comedy or who personally dotes on cowboy reels is as a rule quite incapable of understanding how other people differ from him and hold in sincere abhorrence the very things which he prizes. No man, however, is fit to be either a critic or a producer who cannot take a broad view and detach himself from his own preferences. Every audience consists of men and women of widely differing tastes. It is clear that all of these tastes cannot be gratified all the time, and it is even clearer that some of these tastes cannot be gratified at all.

Assuming for the sake of argument that there is a considerable portion of the public who want to see the lurid and the hideous and the stupid rather than any other kind of films, it does not follow by any means that the producer of motion pictures is called upon to supply such demands. There is probably no spectacle in all the world which would draw a bigger crowd than a public execution. Within the memory of men still living, the public execution in city or country was a magnet always sure of capacity, and there never was enough capacity. By whom then have public executions been abolished? Surely not by the mobs that attended them. They were done away with by the good sense and the humanity of the few in the teeth of popular indignation, which declared that "the people wanted the public execution." We have no longer any public pillories and public whipping posts, except here and there on the outskirts of civilization. It is not likely that we shall go back, though at the time of abolishing these horrors there were many good people, some editors among them, who deplored this curtailment of the "people's rights," i. e., the rights to witness such barbarous scenes. In ancient days the people wanted to see blood flow in the arena. The mobs fed on the sight of human beings fighting wild beasts in struggles for life or death. In our own day there are many who love to see two naked men pummel each other and who are willing to pay well if the affair is only bloody and savage enough. The morbid tastes still exist today, lively in some and dormant in all of us.

These vicious tastes are still gratified quite largely by the yellow press, but why should the motion picture descend to this level? Why should the noble invention of kinematography be used for pandering to low and degrading instincts? The motion picture is destined to march with progress and civilization, to be an aid in the advancement of the race rather than a hindrance.

Here enters the dear old showman to tell us that he is not here to educate the people, but just to amuse them, and that he will give them anything they want. He reluctantly realizes and recognizes the legal prohibitions, but for the ethical side of it he cares just nothing at all, and is quite willing to sink to the lowest level if the public is sinking in the same direction. Looking at it even from his point of view, we believe that his conclusions are wrong. He will in the end be a loser financially and in every other way. The same decent public sentiment which has thrown the veil of secrecy about the horrible things in our modern civilization and forever removed them from the public gaze will ultimately prevail in the show business, especially in the field of motion pictures. This sentiment is constantly finding expression not only on the statute books and in the press and pulpit but in the minds of the public itself. In the olden days civilization was nothing but a succession of triumphs of the minority. In our broadened American democracy this order has happily been reversed, and resistance to morbid and disgusting displays of any kind nowadays come from the majority. A most significant example in point is the recent federal law forbidding the transportation of prize fight films from one state into another. While we believe that Congress exceeded its authority in passing such a law, which may possibly lead to an indirect and oppressive censorship, we cannot overlook the fact that there is a strong public sentiment behind the act, and that it was in deference to this sentiment that the law was put on the statute books.

Judged by all known and recorded manifesations, modern tastes and modern sentiments are in favor of clean pictures above all things. The majority will follow no false leads. The present healthy tone of the American stage is but a response to a well-crystallized public sentiment. The art, music and literature of today are in the main serving good ends.

The audience in the electric theater is no exception to the general rule. They must often take what is given to them, but wherever they have a choice betwen the cheap and flashy place and the better class of theater, they know how to discriminate. They resent a flood of cheap, unwholesome and monotonous pictures. They are hungry for the picture which has a message to humanity. They want to take a pleasant or cheering idea with them when they leave their seats. They like to discuss the picture in the home. The little discussion in the bosom of the family after the return from the moving picture might with profit be taken down in shorthand and read to those producers who imagine that they can guess and serve the public taste by furnishing time-worn melodrama or the exaggerated portrayal of the dark sides of life.

"The High Curse"

By Louis Reeves Harrison

IT does not require a vast amount of ingenuity to discover the merits of a production that has met with success. The difficulty is to delve into scenarios and ideas submitted by all classes of writers for potential genius that is constantly lost. The experience of those who have succeeded in stirring the universal audience reached by moving pictures is one worth notice. Nearly every play that was far above the ordinary met with rejection over and over again before it was materialized, while stories that were mediocre or worse were promptly accepted.

Once thrown upon the screen, masterly productions met with widespread popularity and unanimous approval from the critics, yet only pluck, pertinacity or pull enabled them to survive the selective ordeal and finally reach presentation. Meanwhile thousands of weaklings were born on the screen, gasped a little and then died out to be forever forgotten. Among those who suffer from the "High Curse" put upon dramatic productions of all kinds the photoplaywright has been hardest hit. His occasional success brings no compensating reward for what he has lost in expenditure of time, effort and money.

Those who sit through the Punch and Judy show entitled moving pictures are moved to laughter by melodramatic banalities and almost to tears by those self-executive comedies where everybody laughs but the audience. It is said that the basis of all humor is pain, and that may account for what they are giving us. I confess that I have laughed at some heart-sobs that were intended to be painful, but I have yet to rupture a blood vessel over the abysmal horrors of any written-while-you-wait farce ever slammed on the sheet.

There is comedy in the way censorship is avoided. It is in the action for Bill to murder Ned. We see Bill shoot from behind a rock in one scene and the next one depicts Ned falling to the ground mortally wounded. The burglar jams his jimmy under the window, then our heads are turned the other way by a lapse, and he is next seen entering the house. The despairing suicide goes behind a tree to do the awful deed, and all that we discern is the splash in the stream. All this is so purifying!

In view of the fact that ninety per cent of the pictures are designed and executed to please ten per cent. of the people and the other ten per cent. of production aims at the ninety per cent. of intelligence, the mere question of proportion is worthy of consideration. The publicity manager of a large house called his employer's attention to the fact—this was only a few weeks ago—that 47 out of 50 of the last photoplays released by them were founded on crime. Investigation would probably reveal that directorial idea of the drama was morally degenerate.

Why are these things thusly? Is not the dwarfing and stunting influence of moving pictures very largely the result of dwarfs and stunts in the business rather than from any economic question of supply and demand? Does not achievement in this branch of art as in all others imply potential ability on the part of individuals especially qualified for it? Producers who have shown courage and application in developing the commercial side may be satisfied with the rich harvest they have reaped, but does this prove that they have clear conceptions of the end and purpose in this or any correlated art?

From no source of creative genius may suitable plays be expected unless it be that of ownership. No man of great talent will work out a drama of sweeping power and intensity unless he is given an interest in its production and presentation. Publishers divide with authors; owners of stage productions share with the dramatists; ability to originate what is new and of high value is recognized in all fields of endeavor but that which has been most profitable to the investor. Whether or not the High Curse on motion-picture production is inability to understand what people of intelligence want, or lack of power to respond to the common demand, or failure to grasp the necessity of stimulating effort with just reward, the daily output is far below what it should be at this stage of the game.

It seems a pity that there should be any blight on what promises to be a marvelous method of expression and of culture and of giving happiness to people of limited means. The New Art could be made a blessing to millions instead of a source of doubtful good in a few cases and of evil in many. Without lessening the dividends of a single concern now engaged in production and with a decided augmentation of profit to those leading in quality, the whole business could be lifted to a higher plane and become a tremendous political and social force with due recognition to that form of genius which must create its opportunities.

Those who are turning out releases are not looking very far into the future in developing the art in a lopsided way, directing effort and expenditure to the modification and exploitation of old and erroneous ideas. Civilized people, those who are patronizing the little theaters and big theaters, represent every conceivable combination of intelligence and taste with a progressive tendency not to be disregarded. What has actually taken place in the world, a gradual upward movement, is going on now, and the hope of the world is to gradually replace old errors in the human mind with the expanding influence of truth. We look back upon the beliefs and traditions of a generation ago with condescending pity, but we are only on our way to enlightenment, and any contribution to a clearing of our moral and mental atmosphere finds in moving pictures a powerful medium of expression.

The highest and brightest minds of the past have had comparatively little influence upon the people of darkened lives because of an inability to reach them. Splendid ideas were recorded for the benefit of a privileged few. There is an appreciable social effort being made today, one designed to equalize education and opportunity. Broadened men and women are trying to help their fellows of inferior starting point. Only a few are so completely degenerated by egotism, ignorance and greed as to live like apes for the mere gratification of animal desire. There is tremendous opportunity in the New Art that is occasionally discussed, but it remains for men of genius to seize this opportunity and turn it to account.

The High Curse on the New Art may be the lack of a Man of the Hour, one familiar with moving picture methods and mechanism, big enough to stand for a principle and strong enough to be a leader in a new and magnificent field of human achievement.

THEATER TO BE ENLARGED.

Louis Klene, proprietor of the Arc theater on North Fifth Street, La Fayette, Ind., announces that he will improve and enlarge his theater in the near future. The improvements will consist of a number of new exits, a new pipe-organ, the indirect lighting system, an up-to-date ventilating apparatus, two new Power's 6-A projection machines, increased seating capacity, etc., all of which is estimated to cost about $10,000. When improvements have been completed the admission price will be ten cents instead of five cents, as heretofore.

Two Vigorous Vitagraphs

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN these days of rubber stamp banalities, it is refreshing to come upon a pictured story of daring adventure that does not resort to those wornout mechanical devices, the motor car, the telephone and the revolver. "The Strength of Men," from a bit of fiction by James Oliver Curwood, is a version of the eternal triangle without silk lingerie and dress suits. It breezes along from start to finish with outdoor virility. It is a running fight in the open between two powerful men of evenly balanced grit and pugnacity through scenes of danger so real that weary audiences at the little shows will sit up and take notice, while that portion comprised of little fighting males will become pop-eyed over its thrills.

Ned Finley and Herbert L. Barry are the two men in the case, and their feats of daring, strength and endurance are exhibited in Alaska, where a struggle is set up for the favor of Edith Storey. Tefft Johnson plays the part of her daddy, but he has very little to do beside smoke his pipe and philosophize on the ways of his sex. The younger men have not attained his philosophy. They are both in love with the girl and are not particularly scrupulous in their rivalry. Barry is first in the field and maintains his priority by force. Finley is a good second and is aided by the wavering affections of the young lady. She stands in the situation usually occupied by members of her sex. She regards the desperate struggle between the men with complacent satisfaction and is ready to become the priceless possession of the one who wins. She invariably accepts the suitor who excels in purposive tests if she follows her first instincts.

Scene from "The Strength of Men" (Vitagraph).

The girl remains undecided during the minor combats of her suitors, but a new condition is set up when Barry finds rich traces of gold in the bed of a mountain stream, stakes his claim and sets out in his canoe on a perilous voyage to the recorder's office. Finley is close on his heels. He locates the same claim while prospecting and follows exactly the same course. The men arrive at the same moment, and the recorder decides that both will have to set new stakes. The two men are given an even start in their canoes, each with a native Indian to help where a portage is to be made. They are seen in fascinating views of mountain and stream, shooting impossible rapids and fighting desperately through burning forests. One thrilling episode follows another in an actual forest fire, with hairbreadth escapes innumerable, until the inevitable clash comes. They are in a death struggle when a giant of the forest that has become a great torch falls upon them, blinding one and breaking the legs of the other.

We hark back to one of the stories of Arabian Nights when the blind man carries the one who can see but is unable to walk. They stagger through ever-increasing perils of the burning forest to the cabin where the girl and her father live. They sink down together, both helpless and become dependent upon the exhaustless sympathies of womanhood. The girl nurses both back to a condition of convalescence. Finley suddenly discovers that his blindness is only temporary, while it appears that Barry may be crippled for a long time to come. The girl's heart goes out to the less fortunate man, and she is at last able to manifest the natural choice so long in abeyance. She accepts Barry and reunites the men so effectively that they join hands in ownership of the mining claim.

High quality of suspense characterizes the society drama "Red and White Roses." While the first play is lusty and robust, the second exhibits another form of active force in the intense characterization and energy of action of a more complicated plot. The finest work is done by Julia Swayne Gordon, a lady whose acting has long been in need of repression, but who has found an outlet for her natural powers in this production. She is probably of a nervous and spirited type, one of those who find it difficult to assume self-effacing roles, eager to exhibit emotion by pronounced methods, but she now gives more attention to the plausible and convincing in the part she assumes. There is a wide difference between the conventional imitation of a character, however skillfully and carefully it be made, and the modern and natural revelation of personality in a part, the difference between artifice and art.

Keen tension in the story and the admirable impersonation by Miss Gordon hold interest in spite of the "high curse" of theatricalism thrusting itself out here and there in both plot and action. It is difficult for the director of this drama to shake off his theatrical training. He is imbued with tradition now being eliminated from advanced methods of stage presentation—they are only weeds in the motion-picture garden—but he is so earnest and amenable to criticism that he disarms unfavorable comment. Technics and medicine may be studied in order to know what to avoid as well as what to take in an emergency. A director is none the worse off for his stage experience the moment he makes up his mind to discard the "high curse" of artificiality.

Scene from "Red and White Roses" (Vitagraph).

"Red and White Roses" is a success in sustained interest because it exhibits the gradual evolution and revelation of dual personality in the leading character. "Red Rose" is an adventuress, who is employed by a villainous politician—the American kind—to entangle a rival candidate in a scandal that shall cause the rival's wife, the White Rose, to leave him on the verge of election. The adventuress does her work for pay and succeeds so well that the vacillating husband of White Rose falls into the net she spreads for him and loses the election. An intricate complication results. The defeated candidate learns that he has been the victim of a plot and tries to make amends when it is too late. White Rose has lost faith in him and has listened to the silent wooing of a more deserving man. She tries to solve her problem by suicide, but is saved by the timely interference of the one she loves. The defeated candidate believes she has taken her life and immediately destroys his own.

The real cause of his death and disaster, the villainous politician, becomes abhorrent to the adventuress he employed and paid. Her better nature asserts itself. The bitter revulsion of feeling that purifies her brings no reward. She has broken up a happy married relation, has sent an ambitious politician of high ideals to defeat and disgraceful death and merely solved the problem of the superior woman she sought to irretrievably injure, yet she rises out of the mire in a simple and sincere tribute to her dead victim. New happiness for young hearts is the main consequence of the tragedy, but its most impressive moment is that of the meeting of widow and wastrel at the bier of him most loved by the least worthy, an affecting climax.

"The Millionaire Cowboy" (Selig)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

MANY thousands of exhibitors will recall "The Millionaire Cowboy," in one reel, released by the Selig Polyscope Company, October 21, 1909. At the time, the film made a decided sensation, and requests poured in from all quarters for more films of a similar kind. Since then, "Ranch Life in the Great Southwest," by the same company, appeared August 9, 1910, and the "Diamond S Ranch," February 29, 1912. All these subjects were of one-reel length, and the two last named showed a decided superiority over the first.

Some time ago, William N. Selig decided to make an up-to-date production of "The Millionaire Cowboy," in two reels, and the result will be seen in the special feature under that title, which will be released early in February. This production, when compared with the release of 1909, will show the great stride which has been made in cinematographic art within the past three years. Great improvement will be observed in the action and dramatic value, while the number of people employed and the equipment and accessories used show a greatly increased outlay. The photography and technique of these films reveal also a pronounced advance in quality.

The entire producing staff of Selig's Eastern studio took part in this feature subject, and a small army of the most skillful and daring cowboys in the country were brought together to assist in the production. The leading dramatic parts were sustained by Carl Winterhoff, who appears as "Bud" Noble; Miss Winnifred Greenwood as Mrs. Noble, and Mac Barnes as Colonel Carter, foreman of the Diamond S Ranch.

The mythical Diamond S Ranch is located somewhere near Prescott, Ariz., and we are treated to a Saturday afternoon's doing of the boys from the ranch, in one of the streets of that city. The stunts performed by these breakneck riders on untried bronchs, wild steers and vicious burros hold one's attention at fever pitch all through the amazing program. Bear in mind that a bronch is a horse from the range which has never felt the touch of a saddle nor suffered the humiliation of a man astride his back, and you will understand better the fighting fiend he becomes, when subjected to both for the first time. Sometimes you see as many as three men at his head, one of whom holds an ear of the bronch between his teeth, in the effort to subdue him, while a fourth throws the hated saddle in place and cinches it tight before launching himself on the brute's tempestuous back.

All kinds of bucking bronchs are seen in the street of the dust-laden city. That big gray is a holy terror! See him stop dead in an onward dash, his front legs as rigid as boundary posts and his head low down between them. But the rider instinctively leans far back in his saddle and foils the catapulting intention of the fiend beneath him. Watch the antics of another as he bucks sideways, the rider just escaping a bad fall. Look at the big horned steer as he throws his rider, and at another which gores the cowboy who attempts to bulldog him. See still another maddened steer, plunging head first through a heavy wooden fence, with a man dangling between his sweeping horns. And laugh, you must, at the little burro which throws a masterful rider again and again with the utmost ease, and calmly awaits the next trial of his skill.

"The Millionaire Cowboy." "Bud" on His Bucking Broncho.

But all such strenuous doings must have an end, and in this case they end happily. "Bud" Noble, the foreman of the Diamond S, who has carried off the honors of the occasion, is handed a telegram, and, after reading it, calls the boys around him. It is from a Chicago firm of attorneys advising him that his uncle died and left him several millions of dollars, and that he must come to Chicago at once. Next day he takes the train and is given a rousing farewell.

"Bud's" first experiences in the Windy City are comical to behold. Almost at the very first step among city folks, he meets the girl of his heart. She is none other than the stenographer in the office of the lawyers who have charge of his affairs. Within a few weeks she becomes his wife. After a year in the big city, he grows tired of the monotony of the life he leads, and longs for a sight of the plains and of the boys. Without advising his wife, he wires to Colonel Carter, who had taken his position on the Diamond S, asking him to bring the entire outfit to Chicago and wake the town up. The colonel wires back immediately the acceptance of the bunch, and a few days afterwards they arrive in Chicago, in full cowboy garb. Their mounts have been brought along on the same train, and the band proceeds at a gallop to the Noble residence. Poor Mrs. Noble and her society friends are horrified at the invasion, but "Bud" smiles his wife into good humor and into a determination to make the best of it.

The "boys" retire for a time to squeeze themselves into "claw hammers," and then invade the drawing room, each with a small gatling gun dangling in front of his waist line and a closed opera hat on his head. Mrs. Noble has tea brought in, but Colonel Carter and the boys wave it off with drawn pistols and heavy scorn. "Bud" then takes them to see a melodrama, and they are seen weeping copiously as they listen to the woes of the forlorn woman whom the villain pursues. When the villain appears on the scene and proceeds to do the woman bodily hurt, there is a fusillade of 44's that throws the audience into a panic, while the villain is seen jumping for dear life through a window down stage. Then there is a yachting trip on the lake and, to Bud's great relief, the homeward trip is begun.

Bud lies dreaming on a sofa in his home, worn out by the last day's doings, when his wife enters with a telegram and awakens him. The telegram is signed "The Boys," and reads as follows: "Everybody enjoying themselves. Col. Carter sure some happy. He just shot a coon; will send the bill to you."

"Bud" embraces his wife, and, to her great relief, whispers in her ear, "Never again!"

MOVING PICTURE CONDITIONS IN PORTO RICO.

An Interesting Interview With a Film Expert.

Mr. John Andrews, a well-known film man of Philadelphia, has recently returned from a two weeks' sojourn in Porto Rico, where he had gone to look over the moving picture situation. On his way back to Philadelphia Mr. Andrews paid a visit to the offices of the Moving Picture World. He has gathered much interesting information regarding the Island of Porto Rico and exhibitors everywhere will be interested to hear of conditions there. Mr. Andrews had been acting for a syndicate which had intended to invade Porto Rico with modern motion picture methods, but on his report it is not likely that anything will be done in the near future.

"There is," said Mr. Andrews to a representative of the Moving Picture World, "but one large town in the island and that is San Juan, which has a population estimated at 55,000. Of this population but 5,000 may be counted on as possible patrons of the moving picture theaters, of whom 2,000 are Americans and 3,000 natives of the better class. The rest are a species of peons who never have any money except perhaps in the sugar-cutting season, which lasts from February until April.

"There are two moving picture shows in San Juan. One is located on the water front and is called The Marina. It is carried on in a tent. The weather is very hard on tents, by the way. it is excessively hot in the day time and the evenings are noted for their heavy dews. The prices of admission are 10 and 25 cents. The pictures are shown on a transparent screen—those on the right side of the screen pay 25 cents, while the others, who must read the titles backwards, if they can read at all, are taxed only ten cents. Only one show is given lasting about two hours, from nine to eleven o'clock. About seven reels are shown and the service is of the cheapest grade. They keep on running the reels until the emulsion is worn off and repeaters are quite common. There is another place in San Juan which is maintained by the railway company in a park. It is run on much the same order as The Marina. Similar conditions prevail in the smaller towns, such as Ponce, Araciba, etc.

"While there is no chance to do much in the exhibiting line, the island of Porto Rico looks to me to offer fine opportunities for film producers. The scenery is superb and many pictures of historic value could be made there. Porto Rico affords a splendid background for outdoor plays. There are many lesser islands that have scarcely been touched by the hands of white men."

Mr. Andrews is one of the managers of the Novelty Amusement Company, which runs a chain of model motion picture houses in Eastern Pennsylvania.

FILM MEN VISIT OFFICES OF MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Among recent visitors to the Moving Picture World were Mr. H. Schwalbe, general manager of General Film Company, of Philadelphia, and Mr. John Henry Hannon, a well-known piano manufacturer and popular in Quaker City film circles. Mr. Schwalbe is well known all over the country as one of the pioneer exchange men and few men are more familiar with film conditions in the United States. In his leisure hours Mr. Schwalbe is an ardent devotee of aquatic sports and the captain of the famous yacht "The Buster."

NEW MANAGER FOR THE GLOBE.

The Globe theater, at Brockton, Mass., is now in charge of C. H. Webster, who has now been acting in the capacity of manager since December 16, 1912. Mr. Webster was formerly manager of the Cumings' theater, Fitchburg, Mass., of the Scenic theater at Narragansett Pier, and he still owns his interest in the Star theater at Clinton, Mass. Mr. Webster reports that business is good.

"Oedipus Rex"

Four Reels (Hecla Films).

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE great Greek tragedy "Oedipus, the King," had always seemed to me especially fit for kinematographic reproduction. Its plot is simple, its technical construction a marvel of dramatic skill, the theme is truly tragic and the end leaves us with our emotions stirred to their most mysterious depths. It may well be likened to a storm in nature, which begins with low rumblings and progressing swiftly and fearfully at last, seems to shake the foundations of the earth.

M. Mounet-Sully, a French tragedian, who has frequently appeared in moving pictures, has staged these four reels and himself acts the part of Oedipus. He has on the whole carefully followed the original plot, but has wisely shown what has happened before the opening scene in the tragedy of Sophocles. He connects this introduction with the play proper in a natural and skillful manner, all of which greatly aids the audience in understanding the plot and following its development. The titles, though necessarily long, are exceptionally plain, which in a production of this character is of the first importance.

"Oedipus, the King," is not intended to convey any moral, it simply shows man as the slave of fate. When the end comes we are moved to profoundest pity, but there is nothing to light our own way. There is no comment save such as is found in the words on the screen: "Thus it hath pleased the gods." Oedipus falls from the pinnacle of fame and power to the lowest depth of human misery. He cannot reconcile himself to his fate; he can only utter the sad and humble words, which our own English Sophocles puts in the mouth of Othello: " . . . vain boast, who can control his fate."

Scene from "Oedipus Rex" (Hecla).

How will the average audience in the electric theater view this tragedy? Is the skill of the Attic master reflected in these films? Will they find their way into the hearts of the spectators? Will they move the masses? To the last two queries I answer "Yes" without the slightest hesitation. I think a prologue and a lecture would reveal much which will otherwise remain hidden to the ordinary audience, but even without prologue and lecture the audience will be able to follow the action, as in scene after scene it grows in intensity until the climax overwhelms us with terror and compassion.

Here in brief is the story: A child is born to Laios and Jocasta, king and queen of Thebes. Tiresias, a seer, is asked to predict the child's future. He foretells that the child will kill his father and marry his mother. Laios and Jocasta turn the child over to a shepherd with instructions to kill it. The shepherd instead of destroying the infant sells it to another herdsman, who brings it to the court of Corinth. King Polybus of Corinth adopts the child in place of his own newborn babe, just killed through an accident. Merope, the consort of Polybus, is deceived into the belief that the infant Oedipus is her own child. As such he grows up at court, believing himself to be the future king. In a quarrel with a companion he learns the truth about his obscure origin. He leaves Corinth and seeks the oracle at Delphi. This oracle, the most famous in Greece, under the protection of and favored by Apollo, gives him no definite news about himself, but repeats the prediction of Tiresias. Full of doubt and fear he leaves Corinth and repairs to Thebes, the capital of his parent's kingdom. On the journey toward Thebes he disputes the right of way with the driver of a chariot, which carries his father, Laios. A quarrel ensues and he kills his own father, the driver of the chariot and all but one of his father's retinue. Here the films depart from the story, but it appears to a good purpose, as the story is made plainer thereby. He meets the Sphinx, solves the riddle propounded by the monster and kills it. In the original tragedy the monster kills itself. With the trophies of his conquest he arrives at the court of his own father, whom he has just killed in the road. When Oedipus arrives at the court and shows the remains of the conquered monster the people forget their grief over the death of Laios and make Oedipus their king. He thereupon is united to Jocasta, his own mother. Here begins the action in the Sophoclean play. Oedipus has reigned happily, when suddenly the Delphic God, offended at the murder of Laios, sends a plague upon the people and it is decided to send Creon, the brother of Jocasta, to Delphi and inquire of the oracle how the plague is to be abated. Creon consults the oracle and upon his return declares to the court and people of Thebes, that the plague will be taken away if Laios is revenged. Oedipus swears to do this and at once commences his search for the slayer of King Laios. He calls in Tiresias and gradually, after much questioning, the horrible suspicion begins to dawn on Oedipus that he himself is the murderer. When the truth of this becomes confirmed by the aid of the man who had escaped from the quarrel in the road and the facts of his birth are also revealed by the old shepherd who conveyed him to Corinth, so appalling is the situation that Jocasta, in a frenzy of despair, kills herself, and Oedipus, on discovering her death and realizing his shame and degradation, blinds himself. Creon, whom Oedipus had unjustly suspected of seeking the royal throne for himself, allows Antigone, the little daughter of Oedipus, to accompany her blind father on his departure out of Thebes.

The films, as produced by M. Mounet-Sully, speak of care in every detail and of great art in the presentation of all the main points of the story. The settings, though artificial, are splendid reproductions of classic originals, the backgrounds are invariably well chosen and where outdoor settings were possible they have been selected with a happy eye for the beautiful. The action sweeps on like a majestic current increasing in swiftness toward the end of each reel. The groupings in the spectacular scenes, made impressive in the original by the chorus, have been arranged with satisfying pains and skill. The scenes at the Delphic oracle, but for the awkward outlines of Apollo's statue, are striking in their faithfulness to Greek customs and traditions, which, as I have pointed out before, would perhaps be appreciated better with a word or two of explanation. The films offer magnificent opportunities for a clever picture pianist or orchestra. It will be well not to hurry them through the machine and to instruct the operator to go slow with the titles especially. Exhibitors can do much to enhance the attractiveness of these reels by the manner in which they will present them to their audiences. The printing of a short synopsis and the distribution of it among the audience a day or two in advance of the exhibition is to be recommended.

Charming Scene from "Literature and Love" (Lubin).

"Literature and Love" (Lubin)

THIS picture offers a star role for Ormi Hawley, the Lubin "American Beauty," and is rich with the pathos of comedy. The story is very true to life, not overdrawn, but a pathetic episode of a girl who is struggling to make a living by writing stories. Her work is a joy, but the reward is scant until accident brings about an incident both humorous and beautiful.

Betty Brown, a short-story writer, is unfortunate in placing her scripts; walking one day she is held up at a crossing by the congested traffic. A gentleman wearing blue glasses is standing by her side, he is tapping the pavement with his stick. Betty thinking that he is blind takes his arm and pilots him across the road. He thanks her and she tells him she is going for a stroll in the park and offers to lead him. The man is Horace Limpton, an editor who through hard work has had his eyes affected; he is not blind, but is rather enjoying the girl's mistaken identity. They feed the squirrels with nuts that Limpton has bought, incidentally he notices that Betty is devouring the nuts herself, he concludes that she must be very hungry and invites her to dine. Betty tells of her trouble in getting her stories over and Limpton offers to assist her. A few days later he has sold one and hands her $50. The girl is overjoyed and pays her arrears of rent. Limpton can no longer stand the joke, he tells Betty who he is and that he is not blind, also that he loves her and they finish the argument again on the bench in the park.

NEW HOUSE IN THE QUAKER CITY.

Philadelphia is to have another fine show house devoted to the photoplay. Mr. William E. Butler, a well-known exhibitor has purchased four lots adjoining his present place at No. 2926 Richmond St. The added space will make the seating capacity over 1400. When completed this show house will be of fire-proof material and one of the finest in the Quaker City.

BIG CONTRACT FOR KINETOPHONE.

United Booking Offices, Controlling Many Vaudeville Houses, Will Install Edison Talking Pictures.

It is announced that a big contract has been signed, sealed and delivered which will result in the installation of Edison's latest invention, the Kinetophone, or talking pictures, in more than one hundred of the leading vaudeville houses of the United States. The contract is between the American Talking Machine Company of New York and the United Booking Offices.

The American Talking Machine Company was recently formed by W. E. Waddell, formerly manager of the kinetophone department of the Edison company, and will act as sole distributors of talking pictures throughout the United States and Canada. Upon a demonstration of the Kinetophone to representatives of the United Booking Offices a contract for installation in vaudeville houses controlled by that concern was made. It is understood that other contracts are being made for the installation of the Kinetophone in other cities than those where the United Booking Offices operate theaters.

$25,000 PICTURE HOUSE AT BRYN MAWR.

S. A. Crowther and his brother-in-law, William L. Evans, have built a $25,000 moving picture theater at Bryn Mawr, Pa. While the house was ostensibly built for the exploitation of pictures, occasionally an act or two of refined vaudeville is given. The theater draws its patronage not only from Bryn Mawr, but from its environs. The place is a thoroughly fireproof structure, seating 500. The floor is slightly graded; it has a large stage, large dressing rooms, smoking rooms, five large exits, two Power's No. 6-A projection machines, Hallberg economizer, asbestos booth; in fact, its appointments are equivalent to a New York Broadway playhouse.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

CONSIDERABLE agitation has been raised in Milwaukee recently in one of the moving picture theaters of a film subject entitled "The Phantom Bandit." The Journal of that city took up the matter very earnestly and devoted a series of articles to the evil of showing crime films to an audience largely composed of minors. A headline of one of the articles reads: "Harrowing, Blood-thirsty Silent Melodrama; Many Forms of Crime and Disaster Crowded into One Play." The article then gave the sensational story of the film, and in the closing paragraph stated: "It was noticed that the announcement, 'Passed by the National Board of Censorship,' usually shown on films, was missing from this reel."

"The Phantom Bandit" is a state's right feature film, of the lurid Nick Carter type, about which my Milwaukee correspondent writes: "The makers of such films, instead of trying to see how good they can make their pictures and display advertising, try to see how bad they can make them."

As an immediate result of the Journal articles, the City Club Committee on Public Morals and the City Council were stirred to action. The necessity for a local censor board was pointed out, and one of the aldermen instructed the municipal reference librarian to write to all the large cities in the country for copies of their ordinances regulating moving picture shows. The question of licensing picture theaters was also taken up, and the passage of an ordinance for their better ventilation.

Now that the war is on, and because of the proneness of many to belittle the moving picture, many extravagant statements of an adverse character are being made. And all as the result of the showing of one film which has not been censored. Why will exhibitors endanger the reputation of their houses by showing uncensored films? If they have not that righteous concern for the bad impressions left on the mind of youth by a crime film, they should at least have the horse sense to know that such a film will injure them financially in the long run. The weeding out of conscienceless exhibitors is in progress every day, whether they know it or not. The law of the survival of the fittest cannot be winked at.

But what shall be said of the makers and distributors of such films? Theirs is the greater offense against good citizenship and the worthy moving picture. They cannot plead ignorance of modern requirements. They commit wrong knowingly. Blinded by commercialism, they seek gain, and gain only. Utter repudiation by exhibitors should be meted out to every one of them.

Promoters and Motion Pictures.

In the January number of Munsey's Magazine there appears an article in the financial department under the title, "A Motion Picture Promotion." The article was written in reply to a query from a reader concerning the stock of the Standard Motion Picture Theater Company of America, and whether such stock was a good investment. There is such good advice and sound business sense in the article that the leading paragraphs are given herewith:

> To determine whether a group of moving picture concerns is likely to make money under a consolidation, it is quite essential to know all about the constituent properties—their names, location, management, assets, liabilities, earning capacity, and everything else. Nothing short of that will do, and every detail must be set forth clearly and be susceptible to verification.
> The advertisement offering stock for sale in the Standard Motion Picture Theatre Company of America, which our correspondent sends us, asserts that the company now controls four such theatres and is negotiating for ten others. The names and addresses of these theatres are not indicated in the advertisement, nor does it give a balance-sheet or an income account, either of the theatres the company claims to control or of those it proposes to acquire.
> We do not consider that a proposition so presented is worthy of serious consideration, and we should not recommend it as an investment. A man who, on such scanty information as our correspondent submits to us, buys stock in a concern claiming to control going enterprises, is taking a leap into the financial dark, and cannot tell where he is likely to fetch up.
> Aside from this, however, the Standard Motion Picture Theatre Company seems to have made a bad start. For instance, the stock-offering contains a statement that an audit of the books by an accounting firm disclosed earnings from the theatres equal to ten per cent. on $100,000 preferred stock and fifteen per cent. on $200,000 common stock of the company. But this statement had scarcely appeared in print before the accountants repudiated it, and asserted that they had made no audit of the company's earnings.
> We think this correspondent and others should proceed very cautiously in buying stock in moving picture propositions. It is quite true that this business has developed rapidly, and that it now assumes all the characteristics and proportions of an important new industry. Its growth would indicate that when conducted by persons experienced in this highly specialized work, who are able to anticipate the public's wants in the way of entertainment, the business is profitable; but it cannot be so in every instance, or when controlled by inexperienced hands, and competition is growing stronger all the time.
> Successful promoters are expert psychologists. They are quick to note the latest fads and fancies, the newest money-making devices, and they never fail to seize upon them for company exploitation. They have not overlooked the great popularity of the moving picture theatres and shows of allied character. Their increasing number, their crowded auditoriums, and the apparent profitableness of the business appeal to promoters. It will surprise no one familiar with the promotion business to see the country flooded with prospectuses and literatures offering for sale shares in motion picture companies.
> A business catering to public entertainment and amusement, while it may make a great deal of money under favorable conditions, does not constitute an ideal investment. In fact, it is one of more than ordinary hazard. Such a business is very largely of a good-will nature, and ordinarily ocquires very little in the way of tangible assets. Its management is far better suited to an individual or firm than to a corporation.

The Chicago office of the World, within the past three months, has received several letters from promoters, or intending promoters, of just such schemes as the Standard Motion Picture Company. These men have received no encouragement, and deserve none. They are out for gain, and gain at the expense of the good name of the moving picture. As the writer of the foregoing article states, the picture theater's management is far better suited to an individual or firm than to a corporation. The picture theater must be conducted "by persons experienced in this highly specialized work."

Stolen Essanay Films Recovered.

On Tuesday, January 7th, five Essanay reels and a short commercial were delivered to the Essanay driver at the city office, in the First National Bank Building, for transportation to the plant, on Argyle Street. The films were enclosed in a case used for the purpose and placed in the wagon, the driver making only one stop, on Michigan Avenue, in an alley, on his way out. On arriving at the plant the case was missing. The police were immediately notified and advertisements were inserted in all the city dailies, offering a reward for the recovery of the films.

On Saturday, January 11th, a man called at the city office with the films. He is a stoker and fireman by occupation, and out of a job. He was on his rounds seeking employment, and discovered the missing case, and all the films within it, in a cement mixer in the alley where the Essanay driver had stopped. He was handsomely rewarded, and V. R. Day, manager of the city office, has since secured him a position.

The stolen reels, which had evidently been thrown away by the thief as useless to him, were recovered just in time to be used in the Essanay releases around the middle of January. Chicago has many heavy and light-fingered gentry just now.

Chicago Film Brevities.

G. M. Anderson, secretary of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, will leave for the Pacific Coast early during the week of January 20th. Mr. Anderson attended the private exhibition of Essanay pictures before exhibitors, in the Essanay exhibition room, First National Bank Building, on Monday, January 13th. He was given an ovation, and was introduced to all present by Sidney Smith, secretary of Local No. 2, M. P. E. L. of America. Mr. Anderson made a neat little speech to the boys and, while excusing himself as a speaker, reminded them that he aimed at making moving pictures that talked for themselves.

"Mona Lisa."

First Feature Release by the Eclectic Film Co.—a Superb Hand-Colored Production in Two Parts.

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman.

IF every release of the Eclectic Film Company measures up to the standard of its first release, that concern is certain to become a leading factor in the moving picture market. The first picture to be imported by this firm is a remarkably artistic, hand-colored, two-part, semi-educational subject, entitled "Mona Lisa." As the name will imply, the picture is based upon the celebrated portrait of "Mona Lisa" which was stolen from the Louvre in Paris some time in August of 1911. A film subject under the title of "Mona Lisa" under present day conditions would rather pre-dispose one to expect a series of sensational episodes depicting the robbery of an art gallery by some aesthetic Raffles. Nothing of the sort occurs; on the contrary, the producers have had the good taste to ignore the theft entirely and have directed their energies to telling the story of the mysterious influence that this famous portrait has had upon persons who have come under its spell.

There is enough interest in the early history of the "Mona Lisa" to form the basis of a very interesting film story, and enough of the life and times of Leonardo da Vinci to give such a picture a certain value as an educator. None of these points have been overlooked by the producers of the picture in question, and the result is one that comes right up to the mark of those painstaking European picture-making firms who have been sending us hand-colored masterpieces for some years past, without fear of successful competition. In the picture there are some charming glimpses of early Italian architecture that give it a local color such as no painted scenery could ever convey. The characterization and costuming bear out visually those impressions that we get from poring over the type sketches by Leonardo, Michelangelo and Raphael. These particulars give the picture the correct atmosphere, which is so essential in productions of this kind.

For the purposes of the story the quarrels of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette have been transferred to Francis I and his Queen. Francis, attending church, is attracted by the plain charm of Leonardo's model, who happens to be there. One of his courtiers ascertains for the King that the lady is the model of his favorite painter. Francis sends for Leonardo and practically orders him to arrange a meeting with her. The King visits the studio of Leonardo at the next sitting. In order to get an expression of contentment the artist provides musicians to render pleasing strains on their lutes, and in other ways makes his studio a charm to the senses. A meeting with the King is, of course, a great honor to anyone, and it behooves La Gioconda to accept his attentions with every show of gratification. As the action proceeds the King becomes smitten not only with the model but with the painting.

The actions of Francis have been observed by his wife; her spies have taken account of his movements and reported to her. At one of the sittings the Queen sweeps into the studio with some of her retinue, where she accuses Francis and denounces La Gioconda, and even poor old Leonardo. This scene does not disturb the King to any noticeable extent and he continues his attentions to the model. The Queen, having high power with the ecclesiastical authorities, enters a formal accusation against La Gioconda to the ecclesiastical tribunal and brings about the arrest of the model on a charge of witchcraft. Leonardo becomes greatly dejected over this proceeding and makes many supplications to the Queen for the release of the woman. The Queen refuses, and finally the old man appears before the King, with all of his wealth converted into gold pieces, which he offers to Francis for the liberation of his model. The King has not known that La Gioconda is imprisoned. The artist's pleading puts an idea into his mind. He will not accept the gold, but offers to liberate the woman if the portrait of her is given to him. The old man is reluctantly obliged to yield or be sent to prison himself. The portrait becomes the property of the King, but meanwhile Mona Lisa has escaped from prison. She goes to the King to ask him to take her part against the persecutions of the Queen.
